
Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

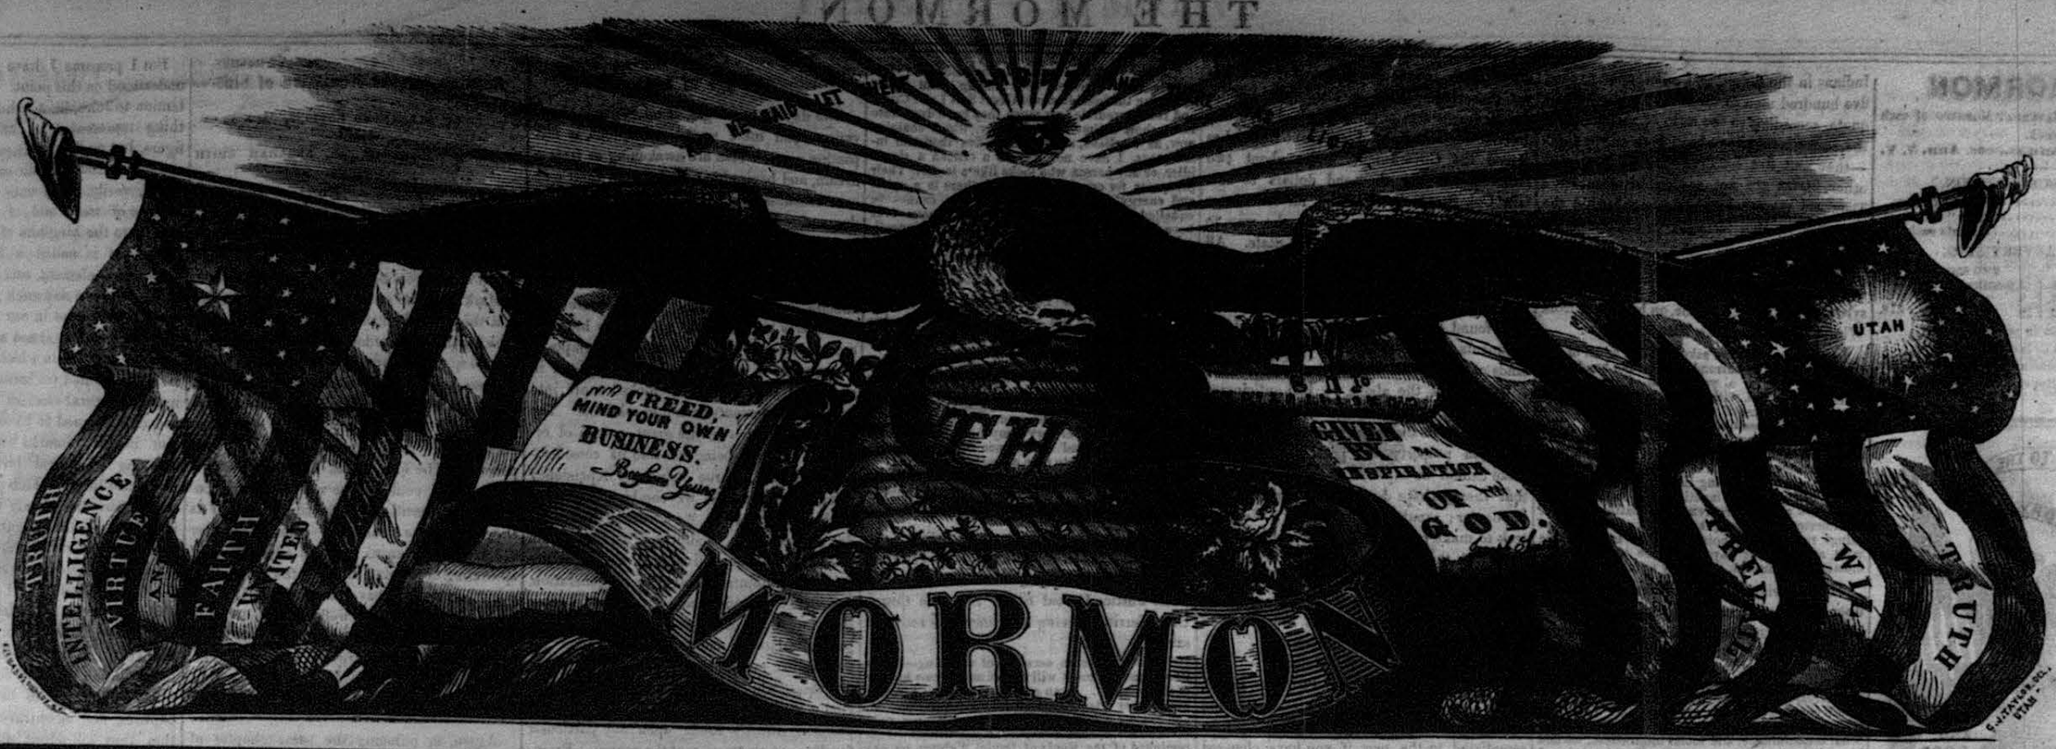
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Setting Up of God's Kingdom.

BY W. FOWLER.

Once more from the Heavens Jehovah has spoken,
His voice clears the mist which for ages has spread
O'er the minds of the people, but now it is broken—
No longer by priestcraft the honest are led.

The Stone from the Mountain has now begun rolling,
And never will stop till it fills the whole earth;
And Babylon's death-knell has now begun tolling,
While Zion increases in wisdom and worth.

Hark, hear ye the voice of the Prophet proclaiming—
"Repent ye, the Kingdom of Heaven's at hand;
The harvest is ripe, and the vintage wants gleaning,
The tares with the wheat now no longer must stand."
The Stone, &c.

The Ensign is lifted, the Temple is rearing,
To which for salvation the Gentiles shall seek,
The time is at hand for the Saviour's appearing,
The earth will ere long be possess'd by the meek,
The Stone, &c.

The vision of Daniel is surely fulfilling,
The toes of the Image now feel the Stone's weight,
The Gospel is gath'ring the faithful and willing,
The path of the Saviour will soon be made straight.
The Stone, &c.

Rouse, rouse from your slumbers, O ye foolish virgins;
Up, up, trim your lamps, let them burn bright and clear;
Let Zion be ready, the Saviour is coming,
The great day of vengeance is now drawing near.
The Stone, &c.

First Ambition.

BY IKE MARVEL.

I believe that, sooner or later, there come to every man dreams of ambition. They may be covered with the sloth of habit, or with a pretence of humility; they may come only in dim, shadowy visions, that feed the eye, like the glories of an ocean sunrise; but you may be sure that they will come; even before one is aware, the bold, adventurous goddess, whose name is Ambition, and whose dower is Fame, will be toying with a bold hand: she makes timidity strong, and weakness valiant.

The way of a man's heart will be foreshadowed by what goodness is in him—coming from above and from around; but a way foreshadowed, is not a made way. And the making of a man's way comes only from that quickening of resolve, which we call ambition. It is the spur that makes man struggle with destiny; it is Heaven's own incentive, to make purpose great, and achievement greater.

It would be strange if you, in that cloister-life of a college, did not sometimes feel a dawning of new resolves. They grapple you, indeed, oftener than you dare to speak of. Here, you dream first of that very sweet, but very shadowy success, called reputation.

You think of the delight and astonishment it would give your mother and father, and most of all little Nelly, if you were winning such honors, as now escape you. You measure your capacities by those about you, and watch their habit of study; you gaze for a half hour together upon some successful man, who has won his prizes; and wonder by what secret action he has done it. And when, in time, you come to be a competitor yourself, your anxiety is immense.

You spend hours upon hours at your theme; you write and re-write; and when it is at length complete, and out of your hands, you are harrassed by a thousand doubts. At times, as you recall your hours of toil, you question if so much has been spent upon any other; you feel almost certain of success. You repeat to yourself some passages of special eloquence at night. You fancy the admiration of the professors at meeting with such wonderful performance. You have a slight fear that its superior goodness may awaken the suspicion that some one out of the college—some superior man may have written it. But this fear dies away.

The eventful day is a great one in your calendar; you hardly sleep the night previous. You tremble as the chapel-bell is rung; you profess to be very indifferent as the reading and the prayer close; you even stoop to take up your hat—as if you had entirely overlooked the fact that the old president was in the desk for the express purpose of declaring the successful names. You listen dreamily to his tremulous yet fearfully distinct enunciation. Your head swims strangely.

They all pass out with a harsh murmur, along the aisles, and through the door-ways. It would be well if there were no disappointments in life more terrible than this. It is consoling to express very deprecating opinions of the Faculty in general; and very contemptuous ones of that particular officer who decided upon the merit of the prize themes. An evening or two at Dalton's room go still further toward healing the disappointment; and, if it must be said, toward moderating the heat of your ambition.

You grow up, however, unfortunately, as the college years fly by, into a very exaggerated sense of your own capacities. Even the good old white haired squire, for whom you had once entertained so much respect, seems to your crazy classic fancy a very humdrum sort of personage. Frank, although as noble a fellow as ever sat a horse, is yet—you cannot help thinking—very ignorant of Euripides; even the English master at Dr. Bedlow's school, you feel sure, would balk at a dozen problems you could give him.

You get an exalted idea of that uncertain quality which turns the heads of a vast many of your fellows, called genius. An odd notion seems to be inherent in the atmosphere of these college chambers, that there is a certain faculty of mind—first developed, as would seem, in colleges—which accomplishes whatever it chooses without any special pains-taking. For a time, you fall yourself into this very unfortunate hallucination; you cultivate it after the usual college fashion, by drinking a vast deal of strong coffee and whiskey toddy—by writing a little poor verse, in the Byronic temper, and by studying very late at night, with closed blinds.

It costs you, however, more anxiety and hypocrisy than you could possibly have believed.

You will learn, Clarence, when the autumn has rounded your hopeful summer, if not before, that there is no Genius in life, like the Genius of energy and industry. You will learn that all the traditions so current among very young men, that certain great characters have wrought their greatness by an inspiration, as it were, grow out of a sad mistake.

And you will further find, when you come to measure yourself with men, that there is no rivals so formidable as those earnest, determined minds, which reckon the value of every hour, and which achieve eminence by persistent application.

Literary ambition may inflame you at certain periods: and a thought of some great names will flash like a spark into the mind of your purposes; you dream till midnight over books; you set up shadows and chase them down—other shadows, and they fly. Dreaming will never catch them. Nothing makes the scent lie well, in the hunt after distinction, but labor.

And it is a glorious thing, when once you are weary of the dissipation, and the ennui of your own aimless thought, to take up some glowing page of an earnest thinker, and read—deep and long, until you feel the metal of his thought tinkling on your brain, and striking out from your flinty lethargy flashes of ideas that give the mind light and heat. And away you go, in the chase of what the soul within is creating on the instant, and you wonder at the fecundity of what seemed so barren, and at the ripeness of what seems so crude. The glow of toil wakes you to the consciousness of your real capacities; you feel sure that they have taken a new step towards final development. In such mood it is that one feels grateful to the musty tomes, which at other hours stand like curiosity-making mummies, with no warmth and no vitality. Now they grow into the affections like new-found friends, and gain a hold upon the heart and light a fire in the brain that years and the mould cannot cover nor quench.

On the Infinite Divisibility of Matter.

BY HARLAND COULTAS.

Divisibility is that property in matter which allows of its being divided into parts: these parts are again separable into other and minuter particles, and so on, if we regard matter mathematically, ad infinitum.

Whether matter be infinitely divisible or not, is a question which the limited nature of our faculties renders it impossible to answer. The science of chemistry has pointed out a series of facts respecting the proportions in which bodies combine, and it is now generally believed that the ultimate elements into which matter resolves itself, consist of certain minute, imperceptible atoms, which are incapable of further subdivision. But these atoms, where are they? Like the points and lines of mathematicians, they exist only in the imagination of the philosopher.

When it is said, for instance, that a line is length without breadth, it is obvious that to draw such a line is practically impossible; we may make an approximation, and, with delicate instruments, draw one so fine that it can only be distinguished by a microscope. This is the case with the lines of the micrometer scale, used for the purpose of measuring microscopical objects. A millimetre, or the tenth part of an inch, is divided into one hundred equal parts by fine lines drawn parallel to each other, which are graved on a fine glass plate, by means of a diamond fixed in a machine. This is a great triumph of art; but after all, such lines possess breadth, and therefore are not, strictly speaking, mathematical lines. It is just the same with atoms. The minutest particle of matter which the human mind can fancy, must exist as an extend, figured substance. For if matter exists at all, it must exist with these its essential properties. If so, it possesses bulk, and if we place the aforesaid particle on a perfectly smooth surface or table, the uppermost side of it will be further from the table than the undermost side; it is, therefore, clearly divisible in imagination, although it ceases to be any longer divisible by art. The Atomic Theory must, therefore, after all, be ever only a theory.

We have many surprising instances of the minute division of matter by art. The gold beaters, for instance, can beat gold into leaves so thin, that if 300,000 of them were laid on one another, they would not be an inch thick. One single grain of gold admits being drawn out into a wire 98 yards long, and an equestrian statue may be gilded all over with a gold dollar. Yet all this is nothing when compared to the extent to which Nature goes in the division of matter.

The effluvium which excites the sense of smell, consists of an incalculable number of small particles of matter given forth by a perfuming body, and so minute as to be altogether invisible to the eye. The effluvium given forth by a grain of musk has been known to perfume an apartment for twenty years, and yet at the expiration of that time, there was no sensible diminution of the musk.

The light from a candle, placed in the open air, when the atmosphere is calm, may be seen, on a dark night, two miles off. The luminous particles which extend from it in all directions, must therefore fill the concave surface of a hemisphere, whose base is more than twelve and a half miles in circumference.

The solution of solids in fluids furnishes us with another instance of the divisibility of matter. A piece of loaf sugar put into a cup of tea, is immediately separated into particles so small, as to be altogether imperceptible to the eye, which particles are diffused equally through all parts of the fluid.

If sixteen quarts of water be poured into a large glass jar, three-quarters of a grain of cochineal, if thrown into the water will communicate a color to the entire mass.

But the powers of the microscope have indeed revealed wonders to us in this particular. The unassisted vision of man takes in, in a series, the animated chain of nature, from the elephant to the mite, and at this point commences a new order of animated existences, animalculæ—in some instances so small that three hundred millions of them would not cover the superfices of a grain of sand. No naturalist ever yet was able to ascertain the point at which existence terminates; on the contrary, there is every reason to suppose that there is a class of animalculæ beyond those which the most powerful microscope has yet revealed. Some of these little beings are highly organized, having a complete circulatory and digestive system. How exceedingly minute must be their organs, vessels and fluids! How delicate the processes carried on in them! A whale requires an ocean to swim in; a hundred millions of these creatures would find ample room for all their evolutions in one drop.

It is obvious from these considerations that matter is indestructible. Every atom bears on it the impress of its everlasting and infinite Author. The doctrine of definite proportions is confirmatory of the language of Holy Writ, and reminds us of its sublime description of the power of One "who has weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance." Matter may disappear from immediate observation, but it is nevertheless still in existence. It disappears only to enter into new arrangements and combinations. You may crush the parts of a body to powder, melt it into a liquid, and, by a still intenser application of heat, dilate it into a gas and dissipate it in vapor, but it still continues in being, and, in many instances, can be collected again into a body without change of form. Mercury and water may be converted into vapor without the loss of a single particle. The decay and ultimate disappearance of organized bodies, animals and plants, is only a process by which their associated particles are again liberated in order that they may enter into new living combinations. Thus death itself becomes the source of life.

There must be death in order that there may be life. There is but a limited amount of matter existing in Nature, and its appearance in any living fabric implies a draught on her resources which would be speedily exhausted, if there were not an equivalent amount returned in that death and disintegration to which all are subject.

Wherever there is life there is attraction. Each germinating seed, what is it but a centre of attraction around which dead inorganic matter collects to be moulded into a living organized form. Wherever there is death there is repulsion. The plant or animal decays and disappears. Both are alike resolved by the repulsive principle into earthly elements and invisible gases, and the atoms held together by life thus sundered by death again roam through the universe, and gather around the living centres of attraction.

The matter which composes the fabric of living bodies, is therefore only borrowed from the earth and atmosphere, and united together by the operation of natural laws for a little space of time.

What life borrows, death will sooner or later claim. The living incur a debt which must be paid. Matter is the grand circulating medium of Nature, and all that is loaned, even to the minutest particle, must be returned. Nothing is ever lost by Nature. Death is the agent employed to enforce the claim, and we must surrender what we have appropriated. We may be unwilling to pay the debt, but in this instance at least no fraud can be practised. We may cheat our fellow men out of "their own," but Nature never.

It is this ceaseless return of organizable materials which keeps up this continuity of the stream of life, and renders the fountain inexhaustible. Hence the matter of which every animal and vegetable was formed in the earliest ages, is still in existence. We ourselves are composed of matter as old as the Creation: in time we too shall decay and disappear, as our fathers have done before us, and thus resign the matter of which we are composed to form new existences.

But ere we quit this scene of brief and busy existence, we can impart to our children the benefit of our experience. We can teach them to shun the follies into which we ourselves have fallen, so that they may pass through life more happily than we have done.

The Question—Pariahs.

The avowed object of the new party is by changing the laws to increase and promote in the Union the class of unnaturalized people among us. Our opinion has been freely expressed that the more perfectly a just equality in political rights is secured to every man in the community, the more perfect is public liberty, the security of property, and the obedience to the laws. The new party argue that this security, obedience and public liberty, are most promoted by taking away or refusing political equality to that numerous class designated by them, and who are unfortunately poor in goods, and depressed by influences inimical to their rapid advancement. They will hardly contend that by this course they improve the condition of those who have come to dwell with us, or that they elevate their dignity and independence and increase their devotion to this free union of States by depriving them of the rights of citizens therein. To do this would be to deny the soundness of the theory of republican government. We will consider them as intending only to announce the advantages to the free of having a degraded class around them, a species of logic similar to that which says that if there were none vicious, virtue would not be honourable.

The problem has been on trial for centuries, whether labor can escape degradation in an organized government, and whether the laboror ever will be admitted to his just equality and fair participation in the privileges of citizenship with the other classes of society. The trial of this question has not ended in America. Throughout the world, the laboring class have always been oppressed and restrained in their political rights; looked upon as the turbulent, ignorant, and dangerous class in society. The strong hand of government has held the rod of authority sternly, treating them us an inferior class, to whom existence was a boon from the upper classes, and not a natural right. They, possessing no property but their labor; no land but the six feet of earth in God's acre or the Potter's Field, where their bones find a final resting place; living on wages from day to day—the sternest laws forbid their combinations to affect the price of the only thing they had to sell; call their meetings mobs; their discussions agitations; their friends demagogues; their remonstrances sedition, and their peaceful processions riots.

Standing armies of soldiers and police continually watched them with jealous eyes, and on the slightest provocation, the riot act was to be read, and the potent arguments of gunpowder and the bayonet perseveringly administered to their gaunt frames. The abolition of serfdom in Europe has brought no relief to their toils—no elevation to their physical condition. A few, by extraordinary fortune, economy, and perseverance, might work their way out of this abject class to be hated and contemned members of some one of the classes above them. The masses have stuck on the border of starvation; legislated for as if they were children; the aspirations of their hearts met with scorn; the yearnings of their souls for freedom treated as treason.

Our own people caught the scorn of European upper classes for the laborers, and added a new epithet of insult to the teeming vocabulary, "the pauper labor of Europe." The protective tariff, and internal improvements, have forced the march of this pauper labor to the United States with wonderful rapidity and in great bodies. The returns show 460,474 have arrived in the year ending June 30, 1854. They are with us and of us. Relying on their labor for the rapid development of our natural resources, the stream of emigration cannot be abolished without being replaced by some other caste or class—as the slaves of Africa or the coolies of India and China.

The human mind will not go back voluntarily; its natural course is to improve. Thus is it with this "pauper labor." A few years in this country bring them great improvements in condition, property, and knowledge. With our institutions and our flag are associated in their minds their prosperity, and their ideas of liberty, independence and dignity. They know that they have greater rights here than where they came from; more enjoyment in the present, more hope in the future—more honor, dignity and liberty. If such knowledge does not attach them to the institutions that create and the people who foster such blessings, then must the heart of man be radically bad, his reason a mockery and his progress a delusion.

When these laborers are most widely disseminated among our people, and are the least gregarious, they make the most rapid progress in knowledge of the structure of our Government and the divisions of our politics; then also their aspirations for the equality of citizenship are the greatest. In the mass who are collected in great cities, this process of assimmilation is not as rapid as in the country. The foreign quarters of our cities appear more like Irish or German cities than anything American. The best of these people take pains to improve their knowledge of our institutions and to procure their speedy naturalization. There is a larger class, to whom the policy of our Government is a matter of indifference, and who are careless of liberty, unambitious of citizenship. The attractions of high wages and light taxes drew them here, and any government contents them that permits their free indulgence in gross pleasures. They are deterred by the expense from obtaining letters of naturalization. These are re-enforced by another band of prudent, saving men, who intend returning with their wealth to the homes of their youth. Looking on themselves as mere birds of passage, they are indifferent or hostile in feeling to our Government. These make up the class of foreigners dwelling among us who do not seek the privilege of citizenship, and to our mind they are far more dangerous to our institutions than our naturalized brethren, more worthless to our national wealth and social purity. They constitute a large portion of the 2,214,000 foreign population.

We have proof of this. Boston is estimated to have a foreign population of 55,000; of these 14,000 ought to be of an age to vote: 10,000 of these ought to have resided in the State long enough to be naturalized, and therefore, had they been so inclined, might have been on the voting lists. What is the actual naturalized vote of Boston? Many years familiarity with the subject, and many conversations with experienced committeemen of the Whig and Democratic parties, enable me to say that 1,800 votes is the highest number at which either of the two great parties have ever rated them, and more by six hundred than they probably ever have thrown in any contested election in the city. It is not at all probable that there is over 2,000 naturalized out of the 10,000 who have lived in the United States the requisite time. We have paid much attention to this subject, and by reference to the votes cast at elections and in other ways, have formed the opinion that this proportion of naturalized foreigners is not exceeded in the great cities of the Union. In our judgment there are not over two hundred thousand naturalized foreigners in the United States, one-third of whom are not in the condition to vote at annual elections from want of a sufficient local residence.

Those aggregated together in the sickly, dirty foreign quarters of great cities and manufacturing towns—and those who, as laborers in the great army of internal improvements, live in a continued camp, moving with the progress of their work from township to township, county to county, and State to State—constitute the two laboring divisions making up the class who are mostly unnaturalized, and exist among us without the intention to assume the local habitation and obligations of citizenship. They are of the class who were invited here for industrial purposes. How can they be reached and induced to partake more directly of the obligations of a free people? Difficulties stand in the way, potent, almost irresistible. The application for naturalization shows pride, character and thought. The step is solemn, and indicates an attachment to our institutions. They would share our lot, partake in the responsibilities and vigilant watchfulness that are the duty of a free race. If it is better to have freedom than slavery, republicanism than monarchy, the ballot-box than the bayonet, in the government of the country, then the people are more contented, orderly, happy, virtuous and industrious, when in the possession of political rights. The compulsion of want may force from the free laborer a toil equal to that of a bond-slave, but the soul sustains the task in content, because by his vote he hopes to ameliorate the government; in his liberty there is a sweet solace the disenfranchised cannot know.

The universality of political rights at the North, self-government through a free ballot-box, have given an impress to the character of the American race. In education, self-government, skill in the arts and sciences, and in the creation of wealth, the free institutions have developed an astounding progress. There has been no falling off in any of the conditions of a well ordered social system, consequent on the unlimited suffrage of the people. Everything has prospered and gone ahead. The laborers in every walk of life have improved in education and knowledge over their predecessors. The striving activity, remorseless energy, and unrivaled quickness of perception of the American race, have been improved by three generations of practice in self-reliance. Universal suffrage has made the North what it is. What new light has come to induce a contempt or distrust of the principle? What guarantee have you for the fidelity of the immigrant that compares with his becoming a copartner with the rest in the enjoyment of the blessings of liberty and freedom? When the interests of the Commonwealth are his interests, what infatuation to presume that he will not exercise all a sovereign's care and diligence in their preservation!—[Boston Courier.

The Policy of the French Emperor.

By the last arrival from Europe we received from our Paris correspondent copies of the Paris Moniteur of the 30th of June and 1st inst. The principal item of news contained in these papers have already been given to our readers. But both papers are mostly filled with a very interesting correspondence, carried on in 1783, between the then head of the French Cabinet, M. de Vergennes, and the Baron de Bretuel, then ambassador at the Court of Vienna. These are both names well known to those who are familiar with our Revolutionary history. They were both statesmen of the highest order and of the most honorable principles; and the letters which passed between them, had we time and space for their translation and republication, would, we doubt not, be read with great interest.

These are introduced in the Moniteur for the purpose of showing that Napoleon III., in his present policy towards Russia, has been actuated by no new scheme of ambition, but has merely sought to give reality to an idea essentially French—one which is to be found at the bottom of all the measures of the Kings of France, from the first developments of Russian power to the present day. While Louis XVI., with all his disposable means, was aiding the United States in their struggle against England, Catharine II., relinquishing Prussia, which since the division of Poland was of no further use to her, formed an alliance with Austria for the purpose of dividing European Turkey between them. Austria derived no advantage from this alliance, but Russia profited by it to seize possession of the Crimea and of Couban, by means of which she not only obtained dominion of the Black Sea, but gained a position from which she could threaten Constantinople.

This is supposed to have been, if not the sole reason, one of the principal reasons which induced France to make one of the parties to the treaty of peace of 1783 with Great Britain. The preliminaries of this peace was scarcely signed before the French Government called the attention of the Cabinet of St. James to the danger which threatened Europe, and particularly Turkey, by the unopposed extension of the Russian power. But England did not at that moment partake of the fears of France as to the ultimate designs of Russia, and neither she nor Austria was willing to unite in the views of the Cabinet of Versailles. The first design of Louis XVI., for the execution of which he desired to have the support of the Cabinets of London, Vienna, Turin and Berlin—that of Spain he had already secured—was simply by united, amicable, but strong representations, to dissuade Russia, if possible, from consummating her projects as to the Crimea and Couban. Failing in this desired support of his views, Louis attempted it with the single co-operation of Spain, but without success; and he again sought the alliance of England, at least so far as to compel Russia to content herself with the possession of Couban. But England once more repelled his proposition. After the Crimea and the Couban were finally incorporated with the Russian Empire, the King of France proposed to Joseph II. to join him in interdicting to Russia the right of maintaining a war marine in the Black Sea, or at least compelling her to confine her naval force there to vessels not exceeding twenty guns.

Thus it is seen that the Cabinet of Versailles entertained, more than three-fourths of a century ago, the idea of an alliance with England for the very purpose which the genius of Napoleon III. at length persuaded that Power to adopt.

This is at least a curious fact in history which is abundantly corroborated by the correspondence to which we have referred.—[Nat. Intelligencer.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 18, 1855.

A Few Facts for the Consideration of the Editors of the United States, and of all Honest Men.

A GREAT hue and cry has been raised lately about the Mormons. One would think, if there was any credit to be placed in the press, that they were the most corrupt debauchees, the most infamous imposters, the blackest hearted traitors, in existence; and, in fact, that Utah was an ulcer; a canker in the nation; that her citizens were the greatest miscreants and scamps, and that her cities were dens of infamy more degenerate than Sodom: dangerous alike to the morals, chastity, and political integrity of this great nation.

Either the above is true, or many of the public journals are maligners, makers and issuers of falsehoods; or, to say the least, most egregiously ignorant of the subject about which they write. Now we have no objections to men speaking the truth about the Mormons; truth in its fullest sense; we have no objections to our religion, morals, politics, and general deportment being canvassed; we don't object to men differing with us in opinion—it is their right; and furthermore, it is manly and just to express fairly a candid, honest sentiment; but when we see men controlling the public press, collecting and publishing every petty story and statement, however foolish and ridiculous, and then, with uplifted hands and turned up eyes, expressing a holy horror at, and endorsing, things which they positively know to be lies, and got up either out of sheer malice, religious acrimony for political motives, or to make a penny, what can we think?

We have no apology to make for the Mormons. These statements are either true or false; if true, they are susceptible of proof; if false, then why this clamor? Maligners generally do not take the trouble to investigate; the truth is not a part of their creed, or, if a part, it is only used when falsehood and detraction will not serve their purpose better. With such characters, then, we have nothing to do; we leave them to their fate. There is another class, however, that we feel inclined to disabuse, by laying before them correct principles, and putting them in possession of facts; such are either honest men or saints, who, in many instances, stand in amazement at the bold, audacious falsehoods that are unblushingly uttered by corrupt men, and endorsed by a venal press. We wish to throw a mantle of protection around them by giving them truths that would make their maligners blush, if shame indeed has any part in their composition.

No editor of common sense need be told that he knows he is publishing and endorsing falsehood, when he tells nine-tenths of the cock-and-bull stories that are in circulation about the Mormons. No man in a public capacity, and that is acquainted with current events, but must know better; he cannot conduct a public journal without being in possession of this information. Where, then, does this puerile and fretful malice come from? Is it in retaliation for some real or imaginary wrong? Who have the Mormons injured? Has any body been robbed, plundered, despoiled, or anywise injured by the Mormons, in the United States? Have any of the citizens of the United States, in passing through Utah Territory, been injured in property, freedom, life, or character? We know that many attempts have been made to show this; in most instances, for the paltry consideration of selling a book; in others, from religious and social prejudices; and yet in others, retaliation for the exposure of their vice, lasciviousness, and corruption; and we are sorry to have to say that for kindness, courtesy, and benevolence, in many instances, the blackest and basest ingratitude has been returned; but we are at the defiance of the world to prove that any man has been injured, or jeopardized, in life, liberty, limb, property, or character, by any authorized act of the Mormons. Several cases have been sought to be made out, but they have all signally failed. Is it a crime to be in Utah? If so, who is to blame for it? Our very existence there is through coercion.

But the Mormons are disloyal. Was it disloyal, in the Mormons, when disfranchised and driven from their homes, when among the Indians in the desert, and called upon to send five hundred men to the Mexican war—(their quota, according to the ratio of assessment of the States, would have been from one to four.) —they sent five hundred? Why is it that other States are not accused of disloyalty? They are several hundred times behind the Mormons in this instance, in sustaining the national honor.

We quote the following extract of a Lecture delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, by Col. T. L. Kane, on his return from Winter Quarters on the Missouri River:

"And now they were asked, in the midst of the Indian country, to surrender over five hundred of their best men for a war march of thousands of miles to California, without the hope of return till after the conquest of that country. Could they view such a proposition with favor?

"But the feelings of country triumphed. The Union had never wronged them: 'You shall have your battalion at once, if it has to be a class of our Elders,' said one, a ruling Elder.

"A central 'mass meeting' for council, some harangues at the more remotely scattered camps, an American flag brought out from a storehouse of things rescued, and hoisted to the top of a tree mast, and in three days the force was reported, mustered, organized, and ready to march."

The following Petition will throw some light upon our late official doings:

TO HIS EXCELLENCY FRANKLIN PIERCE,
PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Your petitioners would respectfully represent: that

Whereas, Governor Brigham Young possesses the entire confidence of the people of this Territory, without distinction of party or sect; and from personal acquaintance, and social intercourse, we find him to be a firm supporter of the Constitution and Laws of the United States, and a tried pillar of Republican Institutions; and having repeatedly listened to his remarks, in private as well as in public assemblies, do know he is the warm friend and able supporter of Constitutional Liberty, the rumors published in the States to the contrary notwithstanding; and having canvassed to our satisfaction his doings as Governor, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and also the disposition of the appropriation for public buildings for the Territory;

We do most cordially and cheerfully represent, that the same has been expended to the best interest of the nation; and

Whereas his re-appointment would better subserve the Territorial interest than the appointment of any other man, and would meet with the gratitude of the entire inhabitants of the Territory, and his removal would cause the deepest feelings of sorrow and regret; and it being our unqualified opinion, based upon the personal acquaintance which we have formed with Governor Young, and from our observation of the results of his influence and administration in this Territory, that he possesses in an eminent degree every qualification necessary for the discharge of his official duties, and unquestioned integrity and ability; that he is decidedly the most suitable person that can be selected for that office.

We therefore take great pleasure in recommending him to your favorable consideration, and do earnestly request his re-appointment as Governor, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs for this Territory.

Again, after being ostracised by the Government, and virtually banished the United States, and obliged to locate in the wilderness, having no resting place but the valleys, no society but Indians—exiles, wanderers and outcasts; every attempt having been made by our enemies to sever fraternal relations;—having no government, no society, no brothers, no home. Was it, under these peculiar circumstances, disloyal to organize a provisional government, with avowed attachment to that goverment by whom we had thus been treated? Was it disloyal, after such organization, to seek for and obtain acknowledgment by the United States? Or further, was it disloyal to seek a territorial organization; or is it, to seek for admission into the Union as a State? In what does disloyalty consist? Is it a phantom in somebody's brain, or a living, tangible reality?

But we are mixed up with the Indians. We can't help that, gentlemen—you forced us into the position that we now occupy. However, we are no more mixed up with them than Oregon, Minesota, and some parts of Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, California and Texas are. But you are friendly with the Indians. So are the United States, or profess to be; they make treaties with them, build them mills, place farmers in their midst, raise them grain, and teach them to cultivate the earth; they send missionaries, and plant schools among them. Sometimes the United States do this, and sometimes make war with and chastise them. So do we. For such purposes are appropriations made to Territories by Congress. In these matters, like every other Territory, we are governed by the policy of the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, appointed by the President of the United States. Our superintendent is not quite as sanguinary as some, but we think quite as efficient, as the returns will show.

California has expended during the last three years, as duplicated by Lieutenant Beals, three hundred thousand dollars, Oregon one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, besides the military expenses paid by the Commissioners of Indian Affairs in Washington; while Utah, as statistics will show, expended only thirty-one thousand dollars; of which only $24,600 has been received up to the present time, and there are as many Indians in Utah as there are in California. The jurisdiction of the superintendency of Gov. Young extends over the tribes of the Shoshones as well as the Utahs. California has had an army to sustain, and we have sustained ourselves, and done our own fighting. All the military defense has been done by the "Nauvoo Legion," for which there has been an appropriation of twenty thousand nine hundred and forty dollars; but never yet paid up, or was not up to the 14th of last June. Instead of Gov. Young having over-drawn upon these small appropriations, there is now, to the credit of Utah, twenty-five thousand dollars not yet disbursed. Whereas California, besides the enormous sum of three hundred thousand dollars duplicated by Lieutenant Beals, has placed the Government under about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to sustain Col. Steptoe's command for one winter only, and that merely while on the way to fulfil their heavier duties in that State. All these expenses, when compared with the expenses of Utah, while under the administration of Gov. Young, display an economy seldom found in either State or Territorial departments. Is it disloyal to economise the funds of the United States.

In view of the above we had anticipated more honor; we are aware that popular journals have to be sustained, and that men having both property and political position at stake cannot be expected to sustain principles that they perhaps don't believe, and that are unpopular; granted—what then? We don't seek to make proselytes of editors, nor to find fault with their views; all we ask is common honesty, in the room of detraction and falsehood. It surely has not become unpopular to tell the truth. Or if so, is it unpopular to suppress, or avoid telling falsehood.

You are polygamists; admitted, so was Abraham, Jacob, Moses, the Prophets, David, and a host of others in the old testament, and their practices in this respect, are no where repudiated in the new, if you have changed the order of God and introduced monogamy you have done it upon you own responsibility, and the corruption lasciveousness and abominations that every where prevail among you show how futile the philosophy of man is when opposed to the order of God.

But it is so funny. Be it so, we are no way puritanical in our feelings, and can enjoy and perpetrate a joke, as well as our neighbors, all in good feelings; talk about us, caricature us if you like, make and have your fun; we must also claim the same privilege; but don't make use of misrepresentation detraction, and falsehood; don't "steal the livery of God to serve the devil in," turn up holy eyes and exclaim against the abominations of the Mormons, when you know that you are a great deal more corrupt, and that independent of your thousands of nymphs du pave, you have other cyprians, in every nook and corner. You do things, and admit, without censure, of things being done in secret, which we despise; and you honor many of those concerned in these abominations by admitting them into what is termed the best of society; this you know and submit to, whether of necessity or by choice others as well as yourselves know. Now such a state of wretchedness, hypocrisy, and adultery does not exist in Utah; there is no necessity for it, for while the physical laws, governing and controlling mankind beyond the modern counter laws of man, are observed by the advocates of polygamy, the higher law, as carried out in the Abrahamic policy under God, before the Mosaic law, from which you affirm springs all your laws; and which law, in respect to polygamy, it confirms. Nor can a law of God since given be produced, repudiating the former law or changing it to new relations. This higher law, in which exists perfect order, without which it is not the same in which God gives to man a companion or more than one, you repudiate, and live under all its consequent hypocrisy, abomination, broken vows, and shame, and attempt with debauched hands and corrupt soul to sustain a state of society of all things most abominable in the sight of God;—none of which is found in Utah. For there those associations legitimately entered into and honorably carried out, in view and with sufficient guarantee that a progeny well provided for, and honorably introduced into the world, shall not entail the withering curse of illegitimacy upon the coming generation that now exists with you. But you do not acknowledge these things by law, nor acknowledge them in your family—so much the worse, and so much more hypocritical. You profess one thing and practise another; you profess to sustain laws that you daily violate. You profess chastity, truth, and conjugal fidelity to your wives, which you have pledged before God, and which before that same God you violate; forsaking and leaving the company of a truthful, confiding wife, you illicitly seek the embraces of an acknowledged harlot; your conduct is a living lie, you profess truth with lips, and break it to the heart; time rolls on, you are exposed, and with that exposure stand proclaimed a hypocrite, and the confidence and happiness of a loving, confiding wife gone—gone for ever; but if not exposed you are none the less a hypocrite. Such is the case with thousands, and corruption and deceit is entailed, with all the horrors of disease in arithmetical progression, upon the generations that follow.

You say we are immoral. We quote the following, as we prefer the testimony of others to our own, on this subject:

(From the Missouri Republican, 1847.)

"We notice in the papers of Philadelphia, that T. L. Kane, Esq., delivered a lecture on Tuesday last, before the Historical Society of this city, on which occasion he reviewed the history of the Mormon people from the period of their ejection from Nauvoo, to the time of their settlement in Deseret. * * * * * * * *

"I have given you in terms, the opinion my four years experience has enabled me to form of the Mormons, preferring to force you to deduce it for yourselves from the facts. But I will add, that I have not yet heard a single charge against them as a community—against their habitual purity of life, their willing integrity, their toleration of religious differences of opinion, their regard for the laws, their devotion to the constitutional government under which we live—that I do not, from my own observation, or upon the testimony of others, know to be unfounded."

The following is from the speech of the Hon. Trueman Smith, delivered in the Senate of the United States, July 8, 1850. Published in Washington. Gideon & Co., Printers.

After reading a letter from Dr. Bernhisel, of whom he says, "Dr. Bernhisel is the agent of the people of Deseret, he is a native of the city of New York, a gentleman of respectability and intelligence, and worthy of all confidence," he continues, "The statement of Dr. Bernhisel touching the wonderful progress made by the people of Deseret, within a space of time, incredibly brief, is abundantly confirmed by a letter which I received from General John Wilson, dated at Salt Lake City, Sept. 6th, 1849, from which I submit the following extract:

"A more orderly, honest, industrious, and civil people I have never been among than these, (meaning the inhabitants of Great Salt Lake City,) and it is incredible how much they have done here in so short a time. In this city, which contains now, as I believe, about four to five thousand inhabitants, I have not met in a citizen a single idler, or any person who looks like a loafer. Their prospects for crops are fair, and there is a spirit and energy in all that you see that cannot be equalled in any city of any size that I have ever been in, and I will add, not even in old Connecticut. Gen. Wilson is now Navy Agent at San Francisco, and is a citizen of the first respectability."

The following is from the pen of Mr. Fuller, editor of the New York Mirror, who visited Salt Lake—not the present Mr. Fuller, his former colleague, under date of ——:

A more industrious, honest, law-abiding community can hardly be found. The municipal regulations of Salt Lake City are admirable, and a more moral (barring their open, polygamy) and orderly citizens we have never seen in any part of the world. They number very many men of intelligence and education, and a residence of several weeks among them failed to note a single "vagabond" in their midst. They are exceedingly hospitable to California emigrants, and furnish them supplies at reasonable rates. Their settlement is a great benefit to "overland travellers."

At the Legislative party, given in Salt Lake City, at the Social Hall, on the 1st of January, 1855, an address from Hon. J. F. Kinney, Chief Justice United States Supreme Court, Utah Territory, being announced, he rose and said:

"This is to me an occasion of rejoicing—this a time when the mind will reflect on the past history of this country. I can scarcely realize that we are here, ten or fifteen hundred miles from civilization, and yet we are in the very midst of it—not only civilization, but the most perfect refinement. I am reminded of the words of Daniel Webster, on the occasion of celebrating the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. "The same heaven," he remarked, "is over our heads, the same earth under our feet; but all else, how changed! The same remarks may appropriately be applied to this Territory, when we consider only seven years have gone since this people landed here, without food to support them, living on herbs and roots, and behold now the splendor, the magnificence and taste that has been displayed here, we may wonder and be astonished."

On another occasion, at the re-union of the Members of the Assembly, at the dwelling of the Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Judge Kinney spoke as follows:

"I do not rise to tell a story, to offer a toast, or propose a conundrum, but to express my feelings I have watched the doings of the Legislative Assembly during the past session. I see you have adopted the wise policy of enacting few and simple laws. Those governments are accounted the most wise which have enacted the fewest and simplest laws. You do not wish to rule your people by law; you try to rule them by love. I speak this not merely to eulogise Gov. Young, or his council. Everything in this Valley bespeaks the enterprise, the industry, the refinement, and the intelligence of this people. Your fine settlements, unsurpassed in loveliness and beauty, your public buildings, your machinery, and the union and good feeling pervading throughout your Territory, are all monuments of the wisdom and power that influence and control every department. No stranger coming into this Territory but will be struck at the luxury, magnificence, symmetry, and ingenuity that exists throughout this Valley.

"I was one of the Judges of the Supreme Court in Iowa for seven years; my salary was $1,000 per year; the salary of Chief Justice in Utah was then $1,800. I had a delightful home in Iowa, as many of you have here. My appointment to Utah was soon rumored, and my friends, the members of the bar, reasoned with me on the propriety of leaving Iowa; my post was flooded with letters from my friends on the subject; my old friends in New York, with whom I studied law for years, informed me that I could not live here and discharge the official duties assigned me. If I examine my own feelings in relation to coming to this place, I was actuated by one feeling, which was to show to the world the slanders that had been heaped upon the people, than by any other motives. It could not be for wealth or honor. I have a wife and five children, one daughter grown to womanhood; and I can say there is less immorality, less drunkenness, and less licentiousness here, than anywhere I have ever been. I turned my back on the advice of my friends; I have never regretted the step I took. They tried to stay my family, but I controlled them enough; I left it to their choice to come or stay. If you call this a compliment to your Territory, you are welcome to it, and I am proud of it."

In addition to these we might refer to the remarks made by Judge Lazarus Reid, (now dead,) of New York, Judge Lep. Shaver, and hundreds of disinterested witnesses, who have resided in Utah, and are acquainted with the state of affairs in that Territory; but space will not admit of introducing one tithe of their testimony.

We think that at least common honesty demands that journalists should turn the attention of their leisure moments to the correction of morals and good breeding, in communities they are so well acquainted with, and leave those they know so little about, until they are better informed, or more disposed to do them justice.

News from Atchison.

Arrival of the Mail from Utah.

We have received a letter this week from Bro. Daniel Spencer, then at Detroit, Michigan, on his way to Liverpool via Boston, per steam packet, which was to leave Boston on the 15th inst. We are somewhat disappointed in not seeing Bro. Spencer again before his return to Europe, but suppose it is all right; we wish him a prosperous passage to his field of labor. Bro. Spencer left Atchison, K. T., on the 6th inst. He informs us that the last of the Mormon emigration left Mormon Grove on the 3rd inst., under the supervision of Bro. Milo Andrus, who has gone with them through to the valley. Brs. Erastus Snow and Charles Basset left the same day to go through in company with the U. S. Mail Co. Br. Orson Spencer is appointed to fill the place vacated by Br. Snow in St. Louis. Br. Hart is made President of the Conference, in place of Milo Andrus.

The U. S. Mail from Utah passed Mormon Grove on the 3rd inst., on its way to Independence.

No news here by the Utah mail yet, Aug. 15th. Where is it?

"GIVE us American politics and American religion."—[Kenneth Raynor.

We don't know of any American religion, except Mormonism, Shakerism and Millerism. These are native American religions. The christian religion, we believe, is of foreign origin, and its founder not a native of America.—[Terre Haute Journal.

It may be well to remember that christianity is not only of foreign origin, but altogether foreign to this country. That among us which goes by the name of christianity is a very bad bogus, no more like the original than black is like white.—[New York Dispatch.

We have frequently had occasion to become acquainted with the Dispatch's venomous and antipathic disposition towards the Mormons, and were quite prepared for his demonstrations so frequently made in that line; but were far from supposing him capable of dealing such an unkind cut as the above, to his christian friends. Their feelings if expressed would no doubt be, "and thou too Brutus!"

The Age of Logic.

The day of mere logic, of microscopic observations and mere verbal deductions, is fast passing away. Men are awakening as from a dream, and beginning to judge from their own consciousness, in place of following antiquated dogmas. Human knowledge has hitherto been the systematising of partial considerations or the artificial disposition of certain elements, which have been forcibly combined, though really distinct. Things presenting themselves to men in the gross, they have exercised themselves in sagacious attempts at decomposition. They have been engaged in analytical expression, and looked more into constituent elements than into relations. The most minute parts of the great system of organized life and being has had its consideration, without its true value and dependency being discerned. As we combine, according to the perfect science, we advance; but in order to this it is needful that we first obtain the key. As the activities of visible nature exhibit one uninterrupted cycle of generation, decay, and reproduction, so we must reintegrate, we must unite, we must search into the general relations and principle of union, before we can resolve the facts presented. There are those who have made the very idea of God a logical deduction, as if He were an impression directly made upon any particular faculty—an abstraction of the reason. By intellectual conception we may arrive at a just course of inference, but we cannot realise and dwell in the truth thus obtained. The mysterious agency, the uniform, omnipresent, and invisible Creator is not to be viewed by partial considerations. Reason, working alone, would view Him as a simple and uncompounded being, whereas, being infinite, He is possessed of that harmonious unity of representation, which alone becomes the divine nature. Logic presents to us a being, the source of all knowledge, yet without ideas or trains of thought; the foundation of all good, yet permitting the existence of crime and misery; his unchanging wisdom a perfect law in himself, yet that law inoperative until it led to a creation in time. And then to come to the artificial combination of these ideas, we come to all the abounding creeds of the present day, to considerations which confound reason, and enforce contradictions. The history of superstition is that of the fruitless effort to combine appearances; and the history of the fallacies of the present day, is an equally fruitless effort to reconcile logical inferences to the wants and weaknesses of men. The true system must satisfy the claims of human nature. It does not demand an infinite incomprehensible being for contemplation. Affection does not arise when it is awed before the majesty of the incomprehensible. Such a system, whilst disposing the mind to reverential tranquility, will not repress enquiry, but will kindle the emotion excited by its attractive influences, into the noblest aspiration. Abstract, speculative dogmas cannot reach the original susceptibilities of our nature. The world, in its most extreme apostacy, has yet ever maintained communion with the Godhead, though not by the scrutinizing investigation of abstract and speculative principles. Inferior worships have been adopted, pantheistic schemes have had their day, but yet there has always been a deep consciousness of the unitary action of some pervading power to which it behooved man to endeavor more and more to approach.

The earliest dispensations, those of the sons of men before the flood, and of the patriarchs from Noah to Moses, looked to that unitary action; the Jewish system was one of simple theism. Logic never yet gave the spiritual apprehension of deity; it only offers us a review of the errors, weaknesses, and vicissitudes of the faith of men. A dispensation has come wherein the universe is beheld no longer as an abstraction, and man no longer as a mere beholder, but a part of the great whole, sharing in its quickening vibrations, and advancing in the capacities and powers of his being, towards a perfection in which all influences shall be subjected to his control. For all that relates to our physical and our social nature, there is a system of adaptation and correspondence, rendering the world without, a counterpart of the world within, each fitting the other as a counterpart of the same machine—each containing, in a great measure, the solution of the other—and each furnishing, as it were, the key to a cipher that would otherwise be useless and unintelligible. But this physical and social nature do not complete the measure of the human constitution. Man has yet another and a nobler life,—a life communicable, which gives him a species of anticipatory knowledge. This, too, may be recognised by the intermediate analogies of nature. A religion then, not of logic but of the affections, is at once the lively effluence of truth, and the informing soul of man's capacity, as well as of the place assigned him in creation. There is needed, then, not abstract speculative dogmas, no exercise of subtlety as tests of faith, but a comprehensive and elevated beholding of what is within us and around us, the harmonius unity, which, though involved in mystery, answers at once to our position and our aspirations. When we possess the principle of unity, we can then, and then alone, properly combine.

News from Fort Laramie.

A telegraphic despatch from St. Louis, Aug. 10th, informs us that news had been received from Fort Larimie, per correspondent of St. Louis Republican, that all was quiet in that region.

Capt. Foot's Company of Infantry had arrived.

Col. Howe's dragoons were met fifty miles of Fort Kearny. The road was lined with trains, and those attending them were all well. No Sioux Indians were seen on the route.

Cholera was prevailing with great fatality at Fort Riley. Major Ogden was among its victims. Several companies of troops, and a large number of mechanics were there. Numbers had abandoned the Fort and taken to the hills.

Baptism for the Remission of Sins.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

REPLY TO LETTER OF MR. ABRAHAM SMITH CONTINUED.

SECOND QUESTION.—"How can you prove immersion to be the proper mode of bapatism?"

St. Mathew informs us in his third chapt. that Jerusalem, Judea, and all the region round about, were baptized by John in Jordon.

Mark adds the same testimony, and further that they were baptized in the river of Jordon, showing that the Jordon spoken of by Mathew was no spiritual Jordon, (as some might argue in these spiritualizing times,) but a river in which the inhabitants of those countries were baptized. There are two points presented here to show that immersion was the mode persued. The first, is that he baptized in the river, which could not be out of it, and consequently immersion is inferred; the other is the fact of the candidates coming as they did from a distance, to the Jordon, when if sprinkling or pouring had been the mode, they could just as well have taken the little water necessary from their wells and such other sources as they were in the habit of obtaining it from for culinary purposes. These are certainly considerations that would be hard to reconcile with any other mode, than immersion.

Again, in pursuing the same chapter of Mathew we find that Jesus came forward as a candidate to be baptized by John, that he might thereby set a righteous example to all those who should be willing to follow him through the regeneration, (and thereby become heirs with him to a celestial inheritence). "And when he was baptized went up straightway out of the water." We are here shown that Jesus came up out of the water after he was baptised, from which we conclude that he must have gone down into it. If then he went down into the water, and was baptized in the river of Jordon as shown in the preseding part of the chapter, and then came up out of the water, how could we possibly construe such a combination of circumstances, in to any other mode than immersion? In fact, I am at a loss to know how any person could ever have concieved of an idea of any other.

Again, in Acts the eighth chapter, we find Philip preaching to the eunuch as they rode along together, until they came to water, when the eunuch (having been taught the necessity, no doubt, by Philip) desired at once to be baptized, "And they went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him;" after which they come up out of the water, as the thirty-eighth and ninth verses declare. This is parallel testimony, and corroborative with that already quoted in the case of Jesus's baptism.

If these circumstances suggest any other mode than immersion, I do not discover it: but to show the utter impossibility of its being any other, turn to the sixth chapter of Paul's epistle to the Romans, third verse, and read as follows: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should walk in newness of life."

This can but set the candid, reflecting mind at rest for ever on this point. How, I ask, can baptism be, or represent a burial, short of immersion or burial? would sprinkling a little water with the thumb and fingers on the forehead of a person represent a burial? would pouring do it?

If any person can see any chance to admit of such a thing consistently in this connection, let him read the next verse to the one in consideration, and again apply his rule and see if it fits. If so, I can but conclude, that his rule is similar to the "man's" gun, with which it is said, he could shoot "all around the haystack;" the verse is as follows. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

Who ever saw seed planted satisfactorily to a farmer, that was not buried, or immersed in its appropriate element—the earth? in fact, seed deposited in any other condition than being overwhelmed, buried, or immersed, would never be considered planted, in any acceptation of the term that I have ever heard of its being used.

I can not say what might be done with the great modern spiritualizing machine, now in vogue; if it can place the commission given to the apostles, to "go into all the world and preach the gospel," &c., into the pockets of every school boy that will accept it, and pronounce it authentic; or if it can demonstrate a God without body, parts, or passions, when the Scriptures give him all—there is no telling what it may not do. It may plant in the open atmosphere—it may bury or baptize a man in ether—or it may make out that it is non-essential for him to be baptized at all.

I can not, without committing myself as a prophet, tell what great things will yet be manufactured with this wonderful machine, if it continues to be conducted by skilful engineers. I prefer, however, for my own safety, to touch not—to taste not—and to handle not, this great invention of man.

But to return.

Paul to the Colossians, second chapter and twelfth verse, says as follows: "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also, ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead."

Here we have not only a burial, but a resurrection, typified by baptism. How, I ask, is it possible that water can be so applied to a man, or a man to water, as to effect a baptism typical of the burial, and also the resurrection of our Lord and Saviour, short of his being immersed or overwhelmed in the element, and raised up from it, as Jesus was overwhelmed in the tomb, and arose again from it? what semblance would there be of a resurrection in the application of water to a man standing erect? in what sense could he be said to arise from that position? can he, "by taking thought add a cubit to his stature?"

But I presume I have said enough to be understood on this point. I will now call attention to John, iii. 5, where we find the same thing represented by an entirely different figure, but no less pertinent to the point at issue. It reads as follows, "Jesus answered, verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Water baptism here is called a birth; can a man be born of an element, and not be overwhelmed in it? have we any such precedent in nature? what is associated in our minds with the idea of being born? is it not a change from an element or position in which the subject of birth is overwhelmed (or immersed if you please,) into the natural element in which we live? Nicodemus seemed to have understood the Savior in his remarks leading to this text, as meaning a natural birth, and interrogated him accordingly, which gave rise to the words quoted, showing plainly that a birth of water is meant; but the resemblance of the two was such as to admit of the same term. Hence we say immersion is involved, without which the figure is lost, and the Savior brought into disrepute for his inconsistencies.

Having already prolonged my remarks further than I at first intended, I will simply say in conclusion that the few passages quoted to prove immersion to be the proper mode of baptism, are incontravertible, from the fact that they will admit of no other application. And further, that those who construe them to mean something different from their plain and obvious import, can only be considered as "wresting the scripture to their own destruction;" and coming under the curse of Paul for preaching another gospel than that preached by himself and brethren.

The Way M. Explained the Mysteries of Mormonism to His Quizzical Friends.

FAL. "By the Lord I knew ye, as well as he that made ye."—HENRY IV.

OUR friend M. was a member of the Legislature of ——, and being rather of the "Slick" family, had a sort of a Yankee notion for traveling, and with a company of overland emigrants, he started for Salt Lake amid the adieus of old associates with whom he had often traversed the "Western wilds" and stood shoulder to shoulder in many a skirmish during the far-famed Black Hawk war. Well, as we were saying, M. went to Salt Lake, and located some ten miles north of the Hot Springs. By the way, those Hot Springs are a natural curiosity; they will cook an egg hard enough, in about three minutes, to give one the nightmare for a week to come; but I am digressing. Friend M., on arriving at Salt Lake, set himself about fencing in a farm, building a right Western log house, getting his cattle on the range, driving hogs to the kanyon, rigging pens for the sheep, smoking his pipe and talking politics among the neighbors, and preparing to spend the winter on the shores of that ocean of saltness, where a moment's bath would make another Lot's wife of you, if you happened to be a feminine. I'm wandering again, as I muse over that wonderful country and strange vicissitudes of the singular people that inhabit it. I forgot to say that friend M. was a "Mormon." Well, after getting comfortably located, displayed some of his legal abilities, compared notes between the Sacs and Foxes and the Utes, the tactics of Col. J. and Gen. W., and the prospects of a State Government, as usual, he was called upon to take a mission. No sooner said than done. He starts off to the States again, and after the usual number of bear fights, buffalo hunts, and Indian skirmishes, he arrives on his old stamping ground in ——, almost causing a regular stampede among his boon companions and old Legislative chums; however, after the agitation had somewhat subsided, the pipe of peace passed round, and a few odd jokes cracked, they got quite merry again, and turned upon friend M. with a malicious good humor, to worm out some of the "mysteries of Mormondom;" all the quizzings and questions of which he answered to their evident satisfaction; not forgetting "the portholes in the Temple," "immense omnibusses," babes in the woods, Col. Steptoe, insurrection, and anticipated removal, by the Mormons, of the Rocky Mountains to fill up the Mexican Gulf, so as to annex South America; and finally they began to be personal, and question the possibility of stock-raising in Utah. As the saying is, it riz the Indian in M. Says he, by gauly, gentlemen, there isn't a finer country in the world; old Suckerdom nor the Puke country arn't a primin' to it; why, hogs fatten in them 'ere kanyons in no time, and all a chap has to do, is to tottle 'em down into the Hot Springs, and that scalds 'em; then we drive 'em through the sage brush; that cleans the brussels off as clean as the 'squire's face, there; and all we have to do is to jist drive 'em over the sharp stones by the shore—that takes their in'ards out, and they tumble into Salt Lake, and there's our pork, ready salted down for the season.

Kansas Independence.

Not only must the Missouri Compromise be restored, but until restored, Kansas ought never be admitted into the Union, either as a free or slave State. Her very existence is a libel on honest legislation, and, as far as practicable, it must be ignored.—[N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

It is a matter of small consequence whether the Abolitionists of the North permit us to enter the Union as an Independent State. One thing we can and will do. When the proper time arrives, Kansas will apply for admission into the Union as a slave State. If we are refused, we will proceed to organise a government of our own, INDEPENDENT of the Abolition Republic. We feel strong enough to resist oppression, whether it comes from the General Government, or other sources.—[Squatter Sovereign.

Correspondence.

We have published a series of letters from Mr. Holderness, of Waggoner's Ripple, Ohio—who does not belong to our Church; but his sentiments show that there are other gentlemen of intelligence, who have reflected on the principles we entertain, whose views are not so much at variance with our own. We shall be pleased to publish more of the same kind. The following will not be uninteresting.

From Our Ohio Correspondent.

Waggoner's Ripple, Adams Co., O., August 3d, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Question.—What has Congress to do with the institutions of the Mormons?

Much absurdity has been uttered against the Mormons in Congress; Scripture has been misquoted against them, they have been compared to everything abominable, monstrous and horrid, even to the Thugs of Hindostan, as if polygamy was destructive even to property, much more to life. It is said of them that they are not loyal to the United States. They are, however, quite as loyal as any people could be expected to be, who had like them, been made special objects of the fiercest persecution, having been driven from two States in succession, and robbed of their lands, in the right to which the executive of the General Government had bound the government to warrant and defend them for ever; yet at those acts of violence the General Government connived; having also had the flower of their youth and manhood extorted from them by that government for military services, with threats of extermination if they refused; the same hostile feeling being still exhibited, and acted out towards them, so far as they can be reached. Is then the principle of despotic governments to be applied to subjects of the United States Government, so loud in its professions of liberty? Are people to be abused, killed, and whipped into love and loyalty? Are the Mormons to be excepted from the rule now applied to new territories, Popular Sovereignty?

The first instance in which the general government apppars to have opened its eyes in some degree to the principle that States must grow, not be made. Shall the relation of servants to masters be left free to the disposal of the individual states, while the relation of wives to husbands is clamped by traditional conventional shackles? Is Utah less worthy of liberty than Kansas and Nebraska? The principle above mentioned is indeed most specially applicable to the family relation, for the family being the initial element of all social organizations, including political, in order to acquire a spontaneous and natural, and therefore sound and lasting social and political system, not a factitous and therefore turbulent and short-lived one, the choice of means and methods of this relation ought to be left without pattern, dictation, or restriction, that to it might be applied the only true principle of wisdom and of nature; that it might grow, not be made; that in this, as in other matters, posterity, for a vast number of generations might not be made to bear the dreadful accumulated consequences of the haste, ignorance, passions, and necessities of their predecessors.

But another serious objection against the Mormons is, that their system is not republican.

It has already been shown that to bind the State or subject to any forms, or to any course of action, is hostile to free research and experiment, and consequently to real improvement; even to bind a person to be free, makes him so far a slave; management of any kind makes the state or subject not a native growth, but a human fabrication replete with the seeds of human folly, which in time ripening, precipitate it to ruin. But the term Republic has been made to invest so many different forms of government, and has been adapted to so great a variety of social institutions, that it will be a very strange and hard matter if the Mormon institutions may not be so modified as to deserve the name. The term properly signifies the good of the people, as contra-distinguished from that of certain families or classes.

Some theologians, Watson, for instance, affirm that the Theocracy of the Jews, which the system of the Mormons closely resembles, was a confederation of small republics; we know, however, for certain, that it was not a kingdom. But perhaps the American people intend, in this relation, to restrict the term Republicanism to a system like their own, Republicanism that is Republicanism, a model republic. If so, they are as conservative and averse to progress as monarchies; they insist in this, that what is, is right, must, and shall be right.

But some demagogues, among the rest, Bennet of the N. Y. Herald, tell us that unless we overrun them, they will overrun us. Ah! we feel that we, as a nation, have done them injury, and, therefore, we fear retribution. We are alarmed at their extraordinary growth, and think that, by-and-by, their day for revenge will come. This is the very disposition of mind that will bring the retribution, if not from them, from some other source. Suppose we should drive them from Utah to the banks of the Amazon, or some where else; having chased away the goblin that our imaginations have made out of them, we would fall foul of a devouring monster originating from ourselves; over the embers of their forsaken mansions, black and white slavery would contend to the death.

But past experience shows that it is in vain to assail these people, from every blow hitherto dealt they have risen stronger than ever. Perseverance so indomitable as theirs can hardly be defeated. They have a principle among them which the Gentiles as they term them, especially the Americans lack, faith in God, him they "acknowledge in all their ways." He is to them a "tower of strength." And from this originates the second feature in their character, their extraordinary cordial union. How favorably their system contrasts with that of the general government, which takes no cognizance of God, and has beggared his Church! How well their reliance on God compares with the timid covetousness of their adversaries spasmodically grasping at every little possible accession to their strength, whereas they have too many possessions already; and not stopping at pillage and bloodshed to accomplish this object; scared out of all propriety at any dissent from their political system, as if they felt conscious that it was something that had not grown, but was made, and therefore lacking cohesion was liable to be broken by any slight impulse; desirous to extend their fallacies and palpable contradictions over the world, and if need be to whip people into liberty; in order to make their rotten fabric appear sound, by the destruction of every other, and to coerce even God into their measures.

To conclude, are they not our own people as much as any other state? is their system not of native growth, and "to the manor born?" and if it grew, and was not made, ought not we to recognize the finger of God in it, "if it is of man it will come to naught, but if it is of God we cannot overthrow it, lest peradventure we be found fighting against God."

Let us not be jealous of the growth of this branch from the same stock, perhaps its growth may be designed to save the life of the tree, better be absorbed into this branch than perish politically.

Instead of making enemies of our own, by treating them with hostility, let us own up, and make reparation, if possible, for past wrongs. We have character and means enough left to afford very well to do both. If we would make friends of others, we must exhibit to them friendship, and confidence, not distrust.

Let there be no more talk of either overruning the other; but of a coalition as fast as possible, which will be a mutual running in—not over. The peculiarities in the institutions of the Mormons being of a religious character, they are thereby exempted from all intereference on the part of Congress; and if they were not, such interference would be altogether irrational, and unphilosophical, of course in the end highly detrimental; a fact already acknowledged by Congress in the concessions made to the principle of State Sovereignty.

Wm. Holderness.

Office Seeking in Utah.

Mr. Editor:—Having read an article in an Eastern paper a few days since, which announced the arrival of Mr. Half-man, as the bearer of "private dispatches" from Colonel Steptoe, to the President of the United States, concerning Utah, I thought if it would not be intruding upon your columns, to give a few hints to the public, concerning the probable contents of these all important dispatches. There must have been some strong reasons, good, or bad, that induced our worthy and honorable Attorney-General to desert his official position, and leave the interests of our Government unprotected, that he might be the bearer of these "important dispatches" there is more in his Philosophy probably, than many would suppose. Now, I am not a Prophet, nor the son of a Prophet, but a tolerable good guesser; I never went to a guessing school, as many of our editors have, as it would appear from their constantly presuming and guessing that there will be great trouble and difficulties between the Mormons and this government; but I don't guess this way, when I guess or prophecy, it is when I am pretty certain of the truth of what I guess or prophecy, otherwise keep quiet.

In regard to these "private dispatches," here's the secret. In consequence of the high living, and necessary luxuries, that some of our professional gentlemen have to take for preservation of their health, in so dry a country as Utah, it is necessary that their salaries should be increased, or that they get a better paying office, or their luxuries must be dispensed with; for government has decided that those luxuries considered necessary by these professional gentlemen, cannot be allowed in contingent expenses; it was necessary therefore that our worthy Half-man should desert his profession for a time and become an express for the Colonel. Now for the contents of the "dispatches." As I said before, I never guess, or say anything but what I have some knowledge of. I therefore guess that the contents of these "private dispatches" are something like this: there is an office in Utah that has become vacant by expiration of term, which interests our friends considerably more than the interests of the government; for if there had been no vacancies, nor likely to have been any, I think the bearer of those "private dispatches" would have been some other man, and the contents on some other subject, but as Col. Steptoe would not accept the Governorship of Utah, Mr. Blank said to the Colonel, "if you don't accept it, you may say to the President that I will accept, if he appoints me, for though it does not pay any better than the office I now hold, there is money to be disbursed by the Governor, and there may peradventure be an overplus and I might as well have that overplus as any other person; besides I could then sell my goods, for I could take a few wagon loads with me when I go to visit the settlements, as I did when I went to hold Court last fall; I can say to the Indians as I said to the jury on that occasion, that 'tis very uncertain when the Government will pay them their claims, but I will pay them in goods, for I have friends in Washington, who can get through any claims that I may send; but you poor ignorant Mormons who have done the labor, the Government would pay no attention to you."

Well, says Mr. Half-man, if you will accept the Governorship, I will the Judgeship; for it is just as necessary that one should be Judge, as the other Governor, for our bills of Courts will not be paid if not duly certified. All right, says Mr. Blank; now, you to Washington must go, and I will follow you shortly, but whilst you are on the way, be sure the people hear you say "private dispatches." I am on my way to Washington to-day, and when you get to Washington, keep aloof from the President, but call on the editors and say, "private dispatches." The President will then send for you, and if he makes me Governor and you Judge, Brigham Young will no longer say that gambling is contrary to law, as he did when Capt. I—s gambled away his horses and carriage, which Drummond and I won. We can then gamble as much as we please, and poker, and euker, and enjoy ourselves to our hearts content.

Mr. Half-man arrived at Washington—was soon heard to say as instructed, "private dispatches"—"great secrets from Utah." He called upon the Editors on his way, and on his arrival, who published and commented upon the announcement. But a few days after the arrival of this Legal gentleman, lo, and behold! our honorable friend becomes suddenly sick of Utah, and declares that there is not sufficient money in the Treasury to induce him to return. He tells how he had been tendered the office of Marshal and Judge, but he would not accept—he considered it would be useless; for to his astonishment and mortification, he found that the new code of morals introduced by him and his associates among the feminine Copper Colors, had been published, and finding it did not take well, he says that when the President offered him the several appointments, he most respectfully declined.

The case is something like the nigger and his rabbit. An old nigger caught a rabbit, and placing the rabbit under his arm, he commenced rubbing him down, and said: "Good to boil, good to fry, good baked, good stewed, and good any way." At this moment, the rabbit made a jump and away he goes. The old nigger looked after him as he scampered through the woods, and said: "Damn dry meat, anyhow;" so with Mr. Half-man, after looking over his new code of morals, he says: "Damn bad morals—damn red skin—I won't go back; No! there ain't money enough in the Treasury to induce me to return."

These are a few of the secrets of the "private dispatches" of which we have heard so much about through the public journals. I think it would be well for some of our Editors to learn a rule given by Gov. Young, how to judge men correctly. For instance; he says to strangers, whenever you meet a man on the road, professing to have some private business in hand for Brigham Young, you may know that he is out to steal cattle, or some other business equally bad. I think this will apply to "our express," and the bearer of all similar dispatches; if they are not out after cattle, they are after something worse. Men do not desert their post, and engage in such a business, without some sinister object; so beware of "private dispatches," for they are terrible.

Now, I think I can suggest a plan to those Editors who are so often predicting trouble between Utah and the Government, how they might probably accomplish it. If you will get the Government to send out to Utah, a few more Brock-asses, Har-asses, Hol-asses, and every-day-asses, and in fact, a general assortment of asses, such as have been sent during the last few years, then, probably, your surmises and forebodings of trouble with Utah, may be realized, for peaceful as Utah is, and pure as she might be, she cannot, and will not stand every outrage; for when it comes to daubing it on three or four deep, and then appointing asses to rub it in, you may expect her to turn Kansas. Our motto is the Bee Hive, which represents industry and perseverance; but innocent as the little Bee is, he can be made to sting, and when the Old King bears from intruders and asses all that he can bear, he turns out the little Bees upon the asses, you may expect to have some more "private dispatches" to announce, and these borne by asses like the former.

Mazzini's Letter.

Mazzini has managed to write an intelligent and intelligible letter. Of the trio of so-called republicans, who have turned the world upside down, he was the least theatrical and the most practical. He has done wonders openly and in disguise, which attest his diplomatic skill; he has levied conntributions for war in countries of which he has been a declared outlaw, and conducted a correspondence over Europe while all mails were closed. He seems to think practical sense has deserted the English nation, and pictures the government as balanced between a policy of cowardice and one of unjustifiable recklessness. When such a man speaks his, words have meaning, and it behooves England to ponder the prophetic intimation that she cannot conquer without an actual change in her policy. Her sin, says Mazzini, has been following the Austrian phantom, by which she has parted from the continental nations. He dwells on the directing policy as essential to success, rendering military organization and individual skill subordinate; and he is right. The allied troops before Sebastopol, what have they for an animus but their pay, with reversions of death and glory. High incitements these to induce men to march into the mouth of hell. But all is mechanism, what spirit there is, is animal courage. The Russian fights for his Czar, his country, and the Church. It is easy to strike the balance. The influence of his faith is seen in the story of the priest, who with cross uplifted, rallied the Russian troops to that last onset by which British bayonets were worsted. We would rather Mazzini had not entered on military criticisms. They are in bad taste, and bring no credit, after the very amplest information afforded, even if verified. The question is not whether Sebastopol be impregnable or not, but the principle of the present strange union between France and England, and the secrets of this war. As to the nationalities, says Mazzini, they will fight their own battles. So be it.

Indian troubles in Nebraska.

Our Frontier exchanges bring us news of some serious accounts of Indian troubles of late in Nebraska. They report two men, Demaree and Porter killed, and a woman the wife of Porter wounded, at or near Fontenelle in Nebraska, about forty miles from Council Bluffs. The murderers are said to be a party of some twelve or fifteen Sioux from the upper country about Laramie.

They also inform us of the death of Logan Fontenelle Chief of the Omaha Nation, and a number of his braves from an encounter with a large war party of the same tribe. The Omahas have returned for safety to their old home about the Elkhorn, from whence they had recently been removed to Seargent Bluffs by the United States Government. Capt. Thayer by order of Gov. Izard, has raised a company of volunteers and repaired to the frontier to protect the citizens.

The Nebraskian solioquising on the exit of the volunteers breaks out as follows:

Our printer boys to the wars have gone,
In the frontier camp you'll find them,
A hoss and musk they're perched upon,
And their coat tails stream behind them!

This would all be very good if it had been in season, but when the horse is stolen it is too late to shut the stable door; the Indians have done their mischief, taken their booty, and gone. Preventative in an Indian country is always better then cure.

Sympathy of the Press.

We are a little amused at the interest certain editors take in behalf of Utah since the unfavorable account from there of grasshoppers and crickets, threatening destruction to the crops. They are truly very simpathetic, and anon methinks "I do perceive the dint of pity," yes, pity, "such as vultures give to lambs covering and devouring them." Save your crocodile tears gentlemen, you will need them ere long to use for other purposes than Mormon cricketism, there are other isms in your midst ten fold more dangerous; and quite as goggle-eyed, and if not as bottle bodied the chance is pretty good they will be, unless the Maine Law is better sustained in future than at present.

This Mormon Joseph who has been striped and reported to have been slain, but sold into Eypt, still survives; and it may yet be said of him by those who least expect it, "Joseph yet lives" and has corn in abundance, let us go up and buy, for the famine is grevious in the land.

Gov. Brigham Young of Utah.

A writer in the St. Louis Luminary vindicates Gov. Brigham Young from the charge of having squandered the public money, and concludes his article with the following:

I am inclined to think that if Gov. Young had squandered and thrown away to the Indians and his friends $300,000, he would with all ease be re-appointed; but because he has only spent $25,000, in four years, among thirteen or fifteen thousand Indians, and that without any aid, by treaty, or troops, like others, he is no longer fit to hold the strings of Uncle Sam's money bags.

We must have a man that will spend all that Congress appropriates, who will overdraw his accounts, and petition for more, and not be satisfied with that; and, in fact, we want a man that will turn up jack and kick up merry hell, like Gov. Reeder, or he is no man at all; and a man that has not brains enough to spend more than $25,000 in four years, will not suit us; there is no chance for clerks to have a little of the precious metal sticking to their fingers, no chance for friends to borrow a few thousand dollars—no chance for understrappers.—[N. Y. Daily Times.

Governorship of Kansas.

The administration have dismissed Governor Reeder of Kansas, for the ostensible cause of land speculation, and appointed Mr. Dawson of Pa. in his place.

Mr. Dawson, however, shrinks from the responsibility of taking such a mad bull by the horns, and has declined the appointment. Ex-Governor Wilson Shannon of Ohio has since received and accepted the appointment, and left for the field of labor.

The Maine Liquor Law in Maine.

At the Democratic State Convention in Maine, recently, a resolution for the unconditional repeal of the Liquor Law was adopted. Ex-Governor Hubbard was present, and stated that although he had signed the liquor bill, yet he was at that moment so satisfied of the extreme and unjust penalties inflicted by the act, that he would never, if ever placed in the gubernatorial chair, sign a similar act, but, on the contrary, he would use his utmost to obtain the repeal of the present law.

News from Europe.

The arrival of the propeller Lebanon at Boston furnishes three days later news from Liverpool, than that received by the Baltic.

Despatches from the Crimea are to the 27th of July, but announce nothing new.

The Russian government, having ordered an immense quantity of gunpowder to be conveyed from Wilna to Perekop, has offered very advantageous terms for that purpose to the Polish owners of horses and cars. It engages to allow seven silver roubles per pood (about 38 lbs.), or nearly £3 3s. per cwt. The contractors must engage to deliver the gunpowder in 21 days at Perekop.

The Paris Constitutionel has an article considered as intended to prepare the public mind for raising the siege of Sebastopol in case the next attack should fail. Sebastopol, it is said, commanded by Kamiesch, which holds it, so to speak, by the throat, cannot be henceforth of any use to the Czar.

Omer Pacha's journey to Constantinople created some gossip, and the Paris correspondent of the Post says that the Austrian telegraph was immediately set to work to tell the world that he had given in his resignation.—Although the intrigues of the Divan are never at an end, it is difficult to believe that this brave and faithful champion of Turkey would quit his post at a moment when his valuable services are so much demanded. The fact is, Omer Pasha was called to Constantinople to be consulted on the threatening aspect of affairs in Asia.

The report of Gen. Simpson's resignation gains ground.

The Piedmontese troops were in good health in the Crimea. They would be reinforced by 3,000 men.

In the House of Commons on July 30, Mr. Peel, in reply to Lord Goderich, stated that it was intended to constitute an Italian legion.

Lord Palmerston said there were reasons which he should not dwell upon that rendered it very desirable that the session should be closed somewhere about the 14th or 15th of August. There were a great many votes of supply yet to be taken; and it was impossible to state how long the discussions upon the motions now before the House, before going into the supply, would take. He, therefore, appealed to the hon. gentlemen not to press those motions, and moved that to-morrow the order of the day snould have precedence of notices of motion, with the view of going into supply.

Lieut. General Simpson has been promoted to the substantive rank of Lieutenant General, with the local rank of General in the Crimea and Turkey.

A letter from Cracow says the Austrian troops have been collected in two masses, one of which is stationed in Bohemia and Moravia, and the other in Styria. The assembling of an Austrian army in Bohemia and Moravia proves that the relations between Austria and Russia are not yet perfectly clear; and, on the other hand it is true that the troops in the Principalities have been reduced. As to the army in Styria, it is evidently only a reserve for the army of Italy, which has lately been reinforced.

The Liverpool Times of July 30th says: It now appears to be generally understood that the siege of Sebastopol is to be continued to our incalculable cost and eternal disgrace, through the coming winter.

The French Journal des Debats hints at the probability of a war between the United States and Denmark, serious difficulties have arisen between the two governments relating to the payment of the Sound dues.

The Spanish official Gazette announces that the Government would receive on the 20th of August next, tenders for the construction of electric telegraph lines all over Spain.

Still Later from Europe.

The arrival of the America at Halifax furnishes four days later news than that by the Lebanon.

FROM THE CRIMEA.

Advices from the Crimea to the 29th announces continued preparations for a grand expedition. All the lighter vessels of the fleet were assembled at Kamiesch.

It was reported in Paris on the 3d inst. that the French government had official notification that the bombardment of the Malakoff and Redan had been resumed, preparatory to another assault.

July 30.—Gortschakoff telegraph:—There has been a partial cannonade on both sides, but nothing of importance.

It was telegraphed from Constantinople on the 26th that Easki Fazouks had murdered General Beatson, but Lord Panmure, in Parliament, positively contradicted the report.

Correspondence from the camp says that Omer Pasha's visit to Constantinople was not, as asserted, to resign, but to consult with reference to accepting the command of the army in Asia.

The Viceroy of Egypt is negotiating with the Bedouins, to serve in the Crimea.

Kamiesh and Balaklava were crowded with vessels recently arrived for the secret expidition.

The French government has chartered 97 small steamers for river navigation, each to convey 500 men. The boats belongs to companies on the Rhone and Saone.

THE VERY LATEST.

By telegraph from London to Liverpool.—London, Saturday, Aug. 4.—The Weekly Newspaper, just issued, says: We learn that the siege of Sebastopol is about to be raised. Also that a communication has just been received from Germany by the Western Powers, which may lead to startling results.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Queen has sent the following message to the House of Commons:

Her Majesty deeming it expedient to provide for any additional expense that may arise in consequence of the war in which her Majesty is now engaged with the Emperor of Russia, relying on her experience of the zeal of her faithful Commons, trusts they will make provisions accordingly.

The result of this appeal is a proposal from the Chancellor of the Exchequer to issue £7,000,000 sterling additional exchequer bills.

The Limited liabilities bill had been read a third time and passed.

Numerous estimates had been voted.

Major Reed's motion that no peace treaty should be concluded without the approval of Parliament was ridiculed and thrown out.

The Turkish Loan bill had been read the first time.

A discussion without result had occured respecting the recent gift of a good service pension to Lord Paget over older officers.

The London Times had an editorial on Consul Rowcroft's arrest, and preaches in favor of preserving friendly relations with America.

Milner Gibson, in Parliament, referred to this editorial, and asked the government to furnish information on the very important subject of the neutrality of the United States.

Lord Palmerston replied that an arrangement had existed at Halifax by which persons going there from any quarter whatever might be enrolled; but it appearing that it led to questions whether or not the laws of the United States had been violated, the British government being desirous that no such questions should by possibility arise, has put an end to the enlistment of forces at Halifax.

The inquiry into the recent Hyde riots is terminated, and the Commissioners have requested time to consider their report.

Strachan, the bankrupt banker, has been released on bail.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute sa simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have, heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE

ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expresly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Poetry.

Deseret.

BY MRS. H. E. POTTER.

Ye Saints in all nations, turn hither your eyes,
To the place in the west where tall mountains arise,
Where the valleys are cloth'd in the loveliest green,
Where the air is so pure and the skies are serene;
For liberty smiles in these valleys for you,
And health, peace, and plenty are smiling here too.

Lo! our flag on the mountains is being unfurl'd,
And while empires and kingdoms throughout the whole world
Are breaking to pieces and passing away,
Still here shall the ensign of liberty stay,
And proclaim to all people that happy and free
Are the sons of the mountains, and ever shall be;

That, unus'd to a life of inactive repose,
They range the wild mountains though cover'd with snows;
That of temperance, health, and industry possess'd,
The first haughty tyrant who dares to molest
Shall find, to his sorrow, that brave hearts and true
On these mountains erected this ensign for you.

Then come from all nations wherever you be,
Ye good, wise, and noble who wish to be free;
For here in the mountains doth liberty dwell,
And her voice sweetly echoes from mountains and dell;
That voice which once cheer'd her bold votaries on,
Who fought by the side of a brave Washington;

And the spirit which ever the brave doth incite
For their home and their country and freedom to fight.
But peace shall be ours, and liberty too,
While we in the mountains our labors pursue;
And the path of industry shall lead us to wealth,
While enjoying three blessings—peace, union, and health.

And when from all nations these blessings have fled,
When those who've oppress'd us are laid with the dead.
Still our glorious banner above us shall wave,
And this be the home of the free and the brave;
Still in virtue and knowledge shall Zion increase,
And be known in all nations—"The Kingdom of Peace."

G. S. L. Valley.

The First Principles of the Gospel.

The First Principles of the Gospel—Faith, Repentance, Baptism for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost, hold a similar position in the great science of salvation to the simple rules of Addition, Subtraction, Multiplication, and Division in the science of Arithmetic, in which the student can make no progress, or solve no problem without the constant aid of those simple rules with which he commenced. So it is with those who step by step are endeavoring to solve the great problem of eternal life. As they advance they have to recur continually to, and make use of, the Great First Principles of the Gospel, and their importance continually looms up to their minds in magnitude the further they advance in the infinitude of knowledge.

The first great step towards obeying the ordinances of the Gospel is the exercise of faith, which is a belief that they are necessary to salvation, and that the promised blessings will be realised through their observance. Faith can be predicated only on some kind of evidence, and this can only be obtained by an operation of the Holy Spirit, referred to in John iii. 3, where Jesus in speaking to Nicodemus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nothing is more evident then that in order to exercise faith in the principles of the kingdom, their beauty and importance must be seen, and it is evident that the birth here referred to is the dispelling of that darkness, which had heretofore brooded over the understanding, by the light of the Spirit of truth, which was the condition of Nicodemus at the time he visited the Saviour. This operation of the Spirit increases a person's faith in proportion to his honesty of heart and willingness to receive the truth. Its testimony is often rejected, when it withdraws and leaves the person again in darkness and uncertainty. Others cultivate its influences until their faith becomes sufficiently strong to enter into the kingdom of God in the way that Jesus referred to when he said to Nicodemus in the 5th verse of the same chapter, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

In the first place, we will notice what is meant by being born of water, or baptised, and then the evident necessity or importance of the ordinance. To be born of the water is impossible, unless the person is first immersed or buried in it. Hence the great importance attached to this fact, and the important reason for it, given by the Apostle Paul, Romans vi. 3, 4, 5, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptised into Jesus Christ were baptised into his death! Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." This passage of Scripture, taken in connection with what Jesus said to Nicodemus, renders it evident that baptism in the Scriptures means to be buried in the water, and then be born from it, even as Christ was born from the tomb in his resurrection, and also that such a baptism is indispensably necessary in order to realize the fulness of the blessings of salvation.

The importance of this ordinance is still further made manifest in the extent to which it has been practised. It was the first and leading ordinance in the ministrations of John the Baptist, as the great preparatory work for opening up the Gospel Dispensation, and preparing the people for the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Said he, "I indeed baptise you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptise you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." It was even necessary for this ordinance to be administered upon the Saviour, and we do not learn that the Holy Ghost was ever manifested in power upon him until he had received it. "And Jesus, when he was baptised, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God like a dove and lighting upon him.

Many have supposed that baptism was never necessary until John the Baptist commenced his ministry. These same persons no doubt will admit that God is unchangeable, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. As there is evidently no necessity for two plans of salvation, one for those who lived before Christ, and one for those who live since, we are led to conclude that it is necessary for all mankind to be baptised in order to be saved. Peter says, Acts iv. 12, when speaking of Christ, "For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Certainly the name itself could be of no utility without a due observance of the ordinances and works instituted in that name.

But little is said in the old Scriptures on the subject of baptism. But the Lord has seen fit, through His Prophet, to give some light to His people on the subject in these days. In the Pearl of Great Price, page 1, the Lord says, in a revelation given to Adam, "If thou wilt turn unto me, and hearken unto my voice, and believe, and repent of all thy transgressions, and be baptized even by water in the name of mine Only Begotten Son, which is full of grace and truth, which is Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men; ye shall ask all things in His name, and whatever ye shall ask, it shall be given." Here we have the important fact revealed to the world, that the same first principles of the Gospel revealed in the New Testament, preached by Jesus and his first Apostles, and revealed to this generation by Joseph Smith, were preached to Father Adam. It is written, on page 2 of the work referred to, "And it came to pass when the Lord had spoken with Adam, our father, that Adam cried unto the Lord, and he was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the Water, and was laid under the Water, and was brought forth out of the Water: And thus he was baptised, and the Spirit of God descended upon him; and thus he was born of the Spirit, and he became quickened in the inner man: And he heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Thou art baptised with fire, and with the Holy Ghost." Thus we have it fully made manifest to us that the two most illustrious and exalted personages who have lived on this planet—Adam the Patriarch of mankind, and Jesus Christ the Great Captain of our salvation, both considered that baptism was an ordinance essential to salvation, and that both received it in the same way, by going down into the water and coming up out of it, as typical of the burial and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and the heavens made their approval of the act, visibly manifest to both. How visibly the folly of many is made manifest in these days, in holding baptism to be non-essential to salvation, and then making a mere mockery of the sacred ordinance by pouring and sprinkling. Surely "They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance broken the everlasting covenant."

We read, in Romans, iv. 15, "For where no law is, there is no transgression." Therefore in order to bring men under condemnation, they must have the law of the Gospel preached to them, and then reject it. This has been the case with but a very limited portion of mankind while living in the flesh. When the Lord took into consideration the subject of building and peopling this earth, He also laid a plan deep and broad enough for the redemption of all who should come upon it, if they would accept of the conditions. Whoever supposes otherwise, must have a very narrow conception of the power and wisdom of the Almighty. Now in order for men to accept of the conditions, they must have the opportunity of hearing them, if not in the flesh, then in some other state of existence. We find some light thrown on this subject in 1 Peter iii. 19, 20. Peter, in speaking of Christ being quickened by the Spirit, says, "By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing." Here we learn that Christ opened up the Gospel Dispensation, and turned the keys of salvation to the spirits in prison, who were disobedient to it in the days of Noah. Several important truths are evident from this—that men do not necessarily go to a place of eternal happiness or misery immediately after death, as the various sects of the day believe; that even after rejecting the Gospel in the flesh they may again have it offered to them in the spirit world. It is evident that obedience to the same Gospel is required of the spirits in prison as of men in the flesh, from the fact that the Scriptures declare that there is no other salvation for man, and it says, in 1 Peter iv. 6, "For this cause was the Gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh," that is, abide the same laws, ordinances, and general conditions of salvation that men do in the flesh, and receive a similar reward for their works, whether they be good or evil. Baptism is, then, the only door by which they can enter into the kingdom, and that can only be received by proxy, through men in the flesh, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" The subject of baptism for the dead is here spoken of as being quite familiar to the minds of the Saints, and was evidently practised in the days of the Apostles. The living have been baptized for the dead among Latter-day Saints, and going through this and other ordinances for the dead will constitute one of the labors, in the last days, of those who become Saviours upon Mount Zion; and many temples, and thousands to administer in them, will be necessary in order to carry on this great work.

The earth itself must needs pass through this ordinance in the days of Noah, in order to cleanse and purify it from the corruptions of men, and also in token of that final resurrection to its former celestial state, after it shall have received the Holy Ghost through the sanctification of the people in the last days, and a final purification by fire of all the elements.

We have now shown that the Gospel must be preached to all, either in the flesh or in the world of spirits, and that all the vast myriads who have an existence upon this earth, from Adam down to the last of the latest generation, can be saved only through the administration of this sacred ordinance.

We will next take into consideration the ordinance of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. It is evident that the Lord pours out His Spirit upon men, even before they are baptized, to enlighten their minds, that they may see and understand the truth, and that that good influence which is always striving in man against evil is a portion of this Spirit. Hence He says, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." We are not told to what extent the Spirit may rest upon men without the imposition of hands, but there is abundant evidence in the Scriptures that, through this ordinance the Holy Ghost was administered and confirmed upon persons after baptism, and if it was necessary to bestow in this manner in that day, it can be none the less so now. It is evident that in the days of the Apostles the administration of this ordinance was visibly sanctioned by the presence of the Holy Ghost, and the signs made manifest by its power. It says, in Acts xix. 6, "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied;" and viii. 17, 18, "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the Apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money."

There is no doubt this ordinance, and all others which the Lord has instituted, are the natural effects of a cause, or that they operate on natural principles. These laws not being understood is no proof that they do not exist, and no doubt when the Saints come to a full understanding of them, the absolute necessity of them all, on the principle of cause and effect, will be made manifest.

The hands appear to be the natural channel through which those who are filled with the Holy Ghost and the spirit and power of blessing and of life can communicate it to others. Hence the custom of laying hands on the head, in order to bless, and also upon the sick, in order to impart the spirit of health and life.

Having shown the manner of bestowing the Holy Ghost upon men, which the Lord has approved of and sanctioned, we will proceed to show the nature of this important element. From such expression as "The Spirit of God moved upon the waters," "My Spirit shall not always strive with man," "And it shall come to pass that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh," it certainly must be inferred that it is very diffuse in its nature and extended in its operations, altogether too much so to be a personage of tabernacle, like God the Father and His son Jesus Christ, for to suppose that a personage could be in so many different places at once would be equally as absurd as the idea of a heaven beyond the bounds of time and space, or a God without body, parts, or passions.

When men come into the world they are accompanied by a portion of the Spirit of truth, and if they will nourish and cultivate it it will increase upon them. This is a portion of that true light "which lighteth every man who cometh into the world," and what Job referred to when he said, "But there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding." It is nothing less than the Spirit of revelation in its various degrees, which is given to man according to their fitness to receive and diligence in obeying it, and it is that Spirit which the Lord said "shall not always strive with man." The Holy Ghost is the Spirit of revelation.

Revelation is a natural gift, or operates through natural channels, and, like every other, increases through cultivation. It is that power which suggests new plans, thoughts and ideas to the mind. In fact it is the only principle by which man can make any progress in intelligence. The man who obtains the most revelation, or the greatest accumulation of knowledge, is, according to his capacity and circumstances, the man who labors most for it. If his faith and works are directed to some particular subject, that is the one on which he will obtain the most revelation. As man inherits both good and evil, so he may also have revelation pertaining to both, but while revelations of good emanate from God, those of evil originate from the promptings of fallen spirits. Some men bend their energies perhaps for a whole life to acquire a knowledge of some particular subject. With some it is mathematics, with others, perhaps, it is mechanism, steam, electricity, astronomy, &c., and in proportion as they labor so they receive.

As with men of the world, so it is with the Saints in attaining to the gifts and the blessings of the Priesthood, some seek after knowledge and wisdom, others for the gift of tongues, healing, interpretations, discerning of spirits, &c., and each one makes the greatest progress in that which he seeks for. The question might here be asked, if revelation is obtained by both Saint and sinner, what constitutes the difference between the two? As before remarked, this Spirit rests upon men in proportion to their fitness to receive it, and their obedience to its dictates. Now the Lord has decreed that faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, shall fit men to receive this Spirit to a much greater extent than they possibly could do without these qualifications, and then that it should be received by the laying on of the hands of those authorized to do so. In this we discover that a greater degree of the Holy Spirit is obtained through obedience to the higher laws of the Gospel. After manifesting due obedience in this position, a knowledge will be obtained of still higher laws in the Priesthood, by fulfilling which they will receive still greater power, and thus they may proceed from one degree to another until the visions of eternity are opened to them, and they can commune with angels, learn the laws of the universe, and dwell in the presence of the gods. This constitutes the great difference between the Saint and the sinner—the point at which the progression of the former receives a new impetus and power, that of the other has never attained to.

When a man calls into action the element within him which connects him with the higher spheres, their sympathies are awakened in his behalf, and in proportion as the power of life is strengthened that of death and disorganization is overcome, and the pure spirit of intelligence sharpens his comprehension, enlarges his understanding, and enables him to see more distinctly the darkness which surrounds him, and to judge how far he is relieved from its control. The channel of communication is now open with the heavens, he continually receives additional wisdom and strength to contend with the powers of darkness, he is drawn nearer and nearer to those personages who have partaken of immortality, and he realizes that their power shields and protects him, one evil after another is overcome until all his desires and aspirations, in fact his whole nature, becomes changed, his soul is filled with light, knowledge, and truth, the power of endless increase is sealed upon him, death loses its sting, and finally he finds himself enjoying the glories of the resurrection morn, when the beauties and powers of a celestial existence are spread out before him in the wide expanse of eternity, and he becomes another great radiating centre of life and intelligence to a succession of creations, the work of his hands. In fact, he becomes one among the infinite succession of Gods, who are bound together by the eternal and all-controlling laws of intelligence and truth.

Thus we find the first principles of the Gospel are the only foundation of the great superstructure of salvation and eternal lives, and that the most constant obedience to them is a necessary requisite in order for men to make progress in those higher ordinances which will eventually bring them into the presence of their Father in heaven.—[Millennial Star.

Virginia in Self-Defense.

A vast deal of supercilious comment has appeared of late in the Northern Free Soil, Know Nothing, and Abolition journals, upon an article in The Richmond Enquirer, urging on the people of Virginia the probability of further aggressions and insults from the Northern section of the Union, (for we are always in "sections" now,) and upon the Legislature of that State the propriety of seeing to the organization of the militia, and the completion of railroads, and other means of military defense.

We read The Enquirer's article without surprise, and with a full recognition of the feelings which prompted it. Conciliation, persuasion, appeals to a common patriotism, a common nationality, a common blood, are at an end; and the South only awaits the result of the next Presidential struggle to learn whether the North will indeed force secession and disunion upon it, or whether the counsels of calmness and mutual interest will be permitted once more, and at the last moment, to triumph over the demand of fanaticism and domestic treason.

The article itself was a serious, a reasonable, a regretful one. It said to the people of Virginia: "the time for argument is past. Fanatics do not reason; and fanaticism is dominant at the North. Defend yourselves!"

Strange, sad, desperate is the hour in our nation's history, when such words need be uttered by the sentinels who keep watch upon the out-posts of any portion of our people. We are not yet eighty years from the date of our National Independence; and are we already playing the part of the Grecian States at the bidding of new Macedonian intriguers? Is it possible that the ruling party, and the chief popular organs of the oldest and most patriotic of States—of that honored member of our National Confederation which enshrines the ashes of a Washington and a Jefferson—see no longer a hope in the toleration, the sense of justice, the obligations of common honor of sister States? Are we in fact upon the brink not only of disunion, but of civil war?

Those who comment superciliously upon The Enquirer's warning article, sneer at such a supposition. The New York Evening Post (Van Buren and Marcy) thinks it "absurd and childish twaddle;" The New York Times (Seward-ite) "ridiculous gabble" and "arrogant menace;" and the New York Herald (Hindoo Know Nothing) is quite as contemptuous in tone and manner. Yet we cannot dismiss such sober and real expressions with such light and insulting remarks. The fact remains. Here is the oldest and most influential journal in the Southern Atlantic States—organ of a successful party—with no immediate partisan object to accomplish—with no inducement to exaggerate danger or ignore ameliorating circumstances—which sees in the future so dangerous a complication of national affairs as to call for armaments and preparations, for military roads and militia organizations; and which turns away from all other resources to seek safety alone in the ultima ratio civitatum! Is this a thing to sneer or mock at?

It were well for the agitators of the North to pause. The game of partisanship and demagogism has been played far enough. Those who do not intend to cause blood to flow and States to sever, have made all that can be made, with clear consciences, out of the farce they have been acting. Men who are prepared to go further should beware how they cross the line which separates demagogism from treason. The Southern States are the attacked party. They are assailed, insulted, offended, wickedly and causelessly. Those in the North who seek to quarrel with the South are temporarily in the ascendancy. Under these circumstances, it is right that the South should arm. It is right that it should exercise a double vigilance against its assailants. The best method of preserving peace—in their case, as in all others—is to prepare for war. The miserable place hunters and politicians who depend upon Northern excitements and agitations to get offices whereat, should be driven to the alternative of arming in their turn, or slinking away like the cowardly aggressors they are. The Enquirer, whose course we do not always approve, is for once right. Waste no talk, no reasoning, no persuasion on these fellows. Prepare to resist their aggressions as the best and surest method of avoiding them. And should the moment come when the blow must be struck—when this noble fabric of our Union must crumble in the dust—when one section shall hurl itself in wrathful war against another, and the blood of brethren be shed to satiate the animosity of paltry partisan intriguers—there will be thousands of Northern men who will strike for the right against the aggressive fanaticism which menaces the lives, the property, and the political existence of our brethren of the Old Dominion.—[New York Daily News.

Preserving Fresh Fruit by Hermetically Sealing.

A knowledge of the means of accomplishing this very desirable object is becoming more and more widely extended among housekeepers. The simple agent in the work of preservation is heat. After the application of heat for a certain length of time, if the fruit be sealed up so perfectly as to entirely exclude the air, it will continue unchanged for an indefinite period. For some years past, during the winter season, fresh fruits and vegetables, kept in this way, have been sold in all our cities; but the prices they bring have put them beyond the reach of economical housekeepers, except as occasional luxuries.

Now, the whole process of putting up fruits in this way is far more simple than making the ordinary preserves of "sweetmeats," which have come to be regarded by ladies as an almost indispensable article; and any housekeeper may do it for herself. The trouble, uncertainty, and, in very many cases, the impossibility of getting a tinner to solder up the cans formerly used for ripe fruits and tomatoes, have deterred thousands from attempting to keep articles in this way, although the choicest fruits were around them in cheap abundance. This difficulty is now entirely removed, and the work of hermetical sealing has been reduced to so simple a form that any domestic, or even a child, can accomplish the task.

In several previous numbers of the Home Magazine, we have referred to Dr. Arthur's "Self-sealing Cans and Glass Jars," as affording the readiest facility for doing what is proposed. They are made with a channel around the mouth into which a cover fits loosely. Into this channel a very adhesive cement is poured and allowed to harden. Thus prepared for sealing, the cans and jars are sold, and the housekeeper, after filling her vessels and applying the heat, has only to warm the cover and press it down into the cement, when the work of sealing is done. These vessels can be used year after year, and, as the cover goes over the whole top, may be as perfectly cleaned as any other open vessel.

As the fruit season has now commenced, housekeepers should by all means try some of these cans, and prove them to their own satisfaction. At small cost and trouble, they may now have fresh or stewed fruits, or tomatoes, on their tables all next winter, and at summer prices.

The method of putting up fruits in this way we will briefly give:

Fill the can or jar with ripe fruit, adding a little sugar—simply enough to render the fruit palatable—and set it in a vessel of water, (warm or cold.) Let the water boil, and continue boiling until the fruit is well heated through—say for half an hour. Direction has been given to simply let the water boil, but such direction is defective, and at this time the fruit in the centre of the vessel will be scarcely warmed. Should the vessel be then sealed fermentation will take place. The heat must thoroughly penetrate the contents of the vessel. As soon as the fruit is sufficiently heated warm the cover, press it into its place, and the work is done.

Another way is to make a syrup of two pounds of sugar for every six pounds of fruit, using half a pint of water for every pound of sugar. Skim the syrup as soon as it boils, and then put in your fruit and let it boil ten minutes. Fill the cans, or jars, and seal up hot. Some make a syrup of half a pound of syrup to every pound of fruit—and some use only a quarter of a pound of sugar to a pound of fruit—while some use no sugar at all.

To keep peaches, pare and cut them up. If thrown into cold water, they will retain their firmness and color. Heat them in the cans or jars as above, or boil them ten minutes in a syrup. In this way strawberries, raspberries, cherries, plums, peaches, &c., &c., may be kept for any length of time, in the same condition that they were sealed up, and with their flavor unchanged. For small fruit, it is best to make a syrup without water, and boil the fruit in it for only a few minutes.

Fresh stewed fruits of all kinds may be kept in these vessels. It is only necessary to stew the fruit as for the table, adding the amount of sugar required to make it palatable; fill up the vessel with hot fruit, and seal at once. All ripe fruits preserved in this way will be found as fresh in the winter season as if just taken from the tree and stewed.

Tomatoes.—Take off the skin; put them in a preserving kettle, or other convenient vessel, and boil them for a quarter of an hour. Fill the cans, or jars, and seal up hot.

Losses of the French Army in the Crimea.—The Paris correspondent of the London Times states, on authority of official information, that the number of French troops sent out to the Crimea, from the commencement of the war, is 182,000, of which number 120,000 are now effective. The loss consequently is 62,000.

The French.—Madame de Stael says the French never know when to stop; they go through liberty.

Money is defined to be a composition for taking the stains out of character.

Faith.

WHATEVER is undertaken by man, whether it be to till the earth, execute any piece of mechanism, or circumnavigate the globe, faith is the moving cause. If he wishes to accomplish any object, he examines pro and con, the intervening obstacles to be overcome, and if the circumstances are such as to beget in him a confidence, evidence or assurance (synonymous terms with faith) that he can accomplish it, he then commences to act with reference to its accomplishment. If on the other hand, he sees the object placed beyond the possibility of accomplishment, insomuch that he has no evidence or assurance within himself that his efforts will be of any avail, he will not undertake it; he will not even take the first step, unless he has faith that by that step, some unseen advantage may present itself, that thereby adding little by little to his very little commencement stock, he may proceed and peradventure attain to the object of his desire. But as we said before, without this faith, confidence or assurance in some form or shape, he will not act. Hence men frequently commence to accomplish some desired object, with high hopes, or strong faith, if you please, and after commencing, each step taken presents new and unforeseen barriers, gradually weakening that confidence so strong at first, until like Peter when he walked the water, he sinks, and fails of himself to continue the pursuit.

We say, then, faith being the moving cause of all action, it exists to a greater or less extent in every grade of the animal creation. By it the eagle soars above the clouds, to the wonder and astonishment of a Solomon, with all his accredited wisdom, and without it he would never have spread his wings to the breeze. It is true, that his faith and confidence was not sufficient at the start, to scale the mountain, but as he became acquainted with his construction, and seeing others of his species do it, he at length became sufficiently inspired with confidence to make the attempt himself. The same principle may be seen in the beasts of the forest, so down to the smallest reptile and insect.

We are informed in Scripture that faith is the gift of God, and we have endeavored to show that which is clear to our mind, that all and every species of the animal creation share in this inestimable gift, or blessing. Well, says one, we have always been taught by our fathers and ministers to have faith, and we should be saved; but according to your reasoning, not only mankind, whether good or bad, but all the animal creation, will be saved.

Yes, this would be true, if faith alone was required, and that, too, unqualified; but if we examine the Scriptures with reference to this, we will find that neither is the case. If we examine the plan of salvation, taught by Jesus and his Apostles, as recorded in the New Testament, we shall find that faith is the first principle in that plan, instituted by the Almighty for all who should come up to its requirements. And if we examine still farther, we find that faith essentially qualified. Instead of faith to accomplish any of those objects, we have named, unqualifiedly, we are pointed directly to Jesus Christ as the only object through which our faith will avail us in the least towards being saved in the celestial kingdom of God. The eunuch, when he asked Philip what hindered his being baptised, was told by Philip he might, if he believed with all his heart. Here the eunuch was only required to believe; but if we examine the context, we find that Philip had preached to him Jesus, and farther, that he believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, which showed that he had the kind of faith necessary, and he baptized him. Here, then, is the line of distinction drawn between those who have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, on the one hand, and the unbelieving among mankind, and the inferior brute creation which are not capable of receiving the gospel, on the other. This faith, then, is a different kind, if you please, a qualified faith, while the other is unqualified. Of the latter there is an abundance, and of the former there is very little lack, if we judge by the professions of men, but judging by their fruits, which is the scripture rule, there is much room for improvement.

The Saviour told his apostles on one occasion, when they had not faith sufficient to cast out devils, that that kind by which he accomplished it, came only by fasting and prayer. How does the faith required as the first principle in the plan of salvation or gospel come? Let Paul answer; Romans x. 17: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." It is not the letter then that bringeth faith, but hearing the word of God dispensed by a living oracle or minister of God, clothed upon with power from on high; it is not a recorded gospel, but the preached word which emanates with power from a man of God inspired by the Holy Ghost. The eunuch might have read the scripture till this time, and it would never have saved him; but when he heard the word, it was to him the power of God unto salvation, inasmuch as he obeyed it. The same in the case of Peter's preaching on the Day of Pentecost, when three thousand were pricked to the heart in one day. The word preached, and not read, was the gospel which was sharper than a two-edged sword. Thus the spirit "maketh alive," while the "letter killeth."

Barely to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, without adding works, is also insufficient; for James says, the devils also believe and tremble; but says he in chap. ii. 17, "faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone."

Faith without works being dead, it is evident that living faith, and that which is acceptable to God, is that which not only believes in God, but acts up on that belief. It is not only the cause of action, but includes both cause and action. Or in other words it is belief or faith made perfect by works. See James 11d, 22d, "Seest thou how faith wrought with his (Abraham) works and by works was faith made perfect?"

If then a man believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, let him exercise his fath, and that too by repenting of all his sins, and being baptized by one having authority for the remission of the same, that he may receive the seal of the spirit, and henceforth walk in newness of life. This alone, will satisfy the demands of the Gospel. He may believe and not obey, and his belief will avail him nothing. But if he have an honest heart, when he hears the Gospel he will believe and obey it, which obedience, will be to him better than sacrifice, for by it his faith will be perfected—it will be accounted unto him for righteousness—and if he continue in righteousness, he will be saved in the Kingdom of God with Righteous Abraham, who is reckoned as the father of the faithful.

Mobocracy in the United States.

GREAT excitement exists throughout this country at the present time, scarcely exceeded by that which preceded and ushered in the great revolutionary struggle that gave birth to us as a Nation.

This state of fermentation, though latent, at times portends, by the fearful rumbling beneath, and occasional outbreak over the now broad area of our country, a momentous crisis at hand. Is it for good or evil? In the days of our revolutionary fathers the extent of our country was comparitively limited, the population sparse, and the means of communication very uncertain, but the cause they advocated was liberty. Then the fierce loyalist, the wily tory and the unprincipled demagogue were met by the calm, stern determined advocates of freedom, true patriots and lovers of their country, men of sterling integrity who risked their life, property and every domestic tie to prove their unselfish offerings upon the alter of "equal rights" and freedom. Fermentation and outbreaks then, were against the minions of a parental oppression too severe for the most docile to endure; oppression heaped upon oppression, goaded an otherwise submissive people, into revolt, thence urged into concentration and union, they with calm deliberative and energetic action, (by the help of God) secured the inestimable boon of freedom, and national existence, and gave us a Constitution unsurpassed by the chartered rights of any government upon the earth, giving to every one the right of "Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" leaving open every avenue to the highest developement of man.

The great rapidity and wonderful advance in all that makes a nation glorious over this wide spread country, unequivocally demonstrates to every reflecting mind, the unexampled prosperity that we as a nation have attained. But what now meets the eye in every public journal of the day? "Trouble in Kansas," "Know Nothing outrages," Mobocracy in Cincinnati, Portland, Chicago, Louisville, and outbreaks over almost the whole extent of our much favored land, with incendiary declamations of partizan demagogues flinging their inflammatory speeches before an already excited multitude, not because of foreign oppression, or want of the necessaries of life at home; not from threatened invasion by foreign power, nor the want of liberal means and ability to meet it; not for the want of a liberal Constitution, nor the laudable purpose of encouraging union under its broad folds; No! these modern Cicero's, these disinterested patriots of the present day, as if in mockery of the noble fathers of our country, expend their eloquence in encouraging a lawless disregard or open resistance to enactments of the General Government, and open conflict with contitutional rights of other States, thus inciting the worst passions of the human breast, and arraying neighbor against neighbor, sect against sect, and community against community, crying loudly for dissolution, anarchy bloodshed and war.

Has the politics of this country become so corrupt that there is no hope of redemption short of a sanguinary civil war? Is the area so filled by unscrupulous demagogues, that honorable men, turn away in disgust, and hope to see it purified, by the tempest of contending factions, and the country only "saved though as by fire!" Where are our great men? Shall only echo answer where? Must it indeed be said that the United States reached the acme of its glory in Jackson's day, and is now vanishing with the noble stock that helped to rear it? Let us briefly review some of the causes of this degeneracy, for we have much reason to remember the rise and spread of Mobocratic tendencies in this country.

When the baleful influence of nullification manifested itself in South Carolina, and disorder, dissolution and misrule was about to assume the rampant over the Union, there was a veteran at the head of affairs that with a firm hand, turned back the torrent of misguided zeal into its legitimate channel; his acts were sanctioned by the great mass of the intelligence of the country. The strong arm of General Government was rightfully extended for the protection of all her citizens, and can be no respecter of persons. But mark the change that came over "the spirit of our dream." When Missouri drove out upwards of fifteen thousand of her citizens, whose lands had been purchased of the United States, to seek a home in the wild wintry prairies of Iowa or Illinois, and men, women and children were slaughtered in cold blood, there was one then at the head of affairs (Mr. Van Buren) that could, and did say, "Your cause is just, but we have no power to redress." And what then said the noble statesmen and worthy editors—the pillars and heralds of "the land of the free and the home of the brave." Not one word escaped their lips in defence of these despised people—they were Mormons. The same wretched scenes were again unblushingly enacted in Illinois, and twenty-five thousand American citizens were driven to find a home among the more friendly savages. These acts were not rebuked by the General Government "though their cause was just." And the people looked carelessly on, forgetting the time would come that "with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Thus was the integrity of the Union sold to Missouri, and again to Illinois. And the virus then introduced into the system, appearances now denote it to be preying upon its vitals; and the same principle that expelled the "Mormons" from Missouri and Illinois bids fair to run riot throughout the country, unless the contagion is stayed by selecting some firm hand to administer a purgative that should extend through all the ramifications of government—some one worthy to receive the mantle of the illustrious dead, some Savior to drive out the money-changers from the temple.

Free Love Union.

WE copy the following letter from T. L. Nichols to the New York Herald, as it gives a condensed view of the position and doings of a society already an item in our country's history. It would seem from this letter that the present Free Love Society is a fusion of Spiritualism, Fourierism, and such other branches of Socialism as subscribe to the free love philosophy. If a healthy state of society can be attained to, and maintained, without the institution of marriage, then we have only to say we have not learned aright human nature, or the laws of God with reference to it:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

The Herald of Friday contains an extract from a Western paper, and also an editorial article, assailing me and others, and inviting an explanation. I give it cheerfully.

The article copied from the Wisconsin paper, is a garbled and false account of the proceedings of a public meeting held at Ripon, Fond du Lac county, in which resolutions were passed against a Society of Free Love Spiritualists and Socialists at Ceresco. I send you a full report of these proceedings in the Ripton Herald.

Ceresco was the site of one of the earlier Fourieristic Associations, and most of its members are, or have been, Fourierists. The Hon. Warren Chase, so violently denounced at this meeting, was a Fourierist, and is now one of the leading Spiritualists lecturers. He is now on a lecturing tour in New England. The people of Ceresco, or the members of the Union, are mostly Individualists, of the school of Josiah Warren and S. P. Andrews, holding to the "sovereignty of the individual," but also Spiritualists, and partial Fourierists, or Associationists. Of course, as Fourierists, or Individualists, or Spiritualist, they repudiate marriage as an arbitrary institution, and accept, more or less, the "free love" philosophy. Fourier demonstrated the utter incompatibility of the civilized marriage and his plan of association. (See Passions of the Human Soul, Love vs. Marriage, &c.) Warren and Andrews have equally demonstrated that marriage is opposed to individual sovereignty; while all advanced Spiritualists—though few may have the courage to confess it—repudiate marriage in its legal sense, and believe in the doctrine of affinities. Consequently, large bodies of Spiritualists are now emigrating, or preparing to emigrate to favorable localities, where they can protect each other in freedom, and especially in freedom of the affections. One such settlement is now forming in Southern Minnesota, in a beautiful country, pointed out by the spirits for that purpose. Others are looking to an early settlement in Northern Texas. "The Progressive Union, a Society for Mutual Protection in Right," is one of these associations, numbering some hundreds of members, with an aggregate property of over a million of dollars, and made up of men and women, mostly Spiritualists and Socialists, who are banded together with the earnest purpose of either reforming the present social order or founding a new one.

My writings on physiology and sociology can scarcely be misapprehended by any intelligent reader. I am no lecturer, "miserable" or otherwise, on woman's rights, but have vindicated human rights, as I understand them, and particularly the right of men and women to the control of their own persons—the right to do right. The principles taught in these works are briefly stated in the enclosed extracts, which, if of interest, are at your service.

Your "neighbor Raymond" heads a notice of "Mary Lyndon," "A Bad Book Gibbetted." It seems to me a self-gibbetting of the critic, who in this single article has covered himself with the infamy of most grossly libelling a delicate, pure-souled, estimable woman, and as such known and admired by thousands. But her life, with all pure persons, is her best defence against such libellers.

It is probable that a Wisconsin mob will attempt to break up the Ceresco Union, for a Vigilance Committee was appointed for that purpose. There is no social freedom in this country, unless you are either in a wilderness, beyond the boundaries of civilization, or in a great city. It is probable that within the next five years the spiritualists and socialists of this country, tired of contending with the bigotry, selfishness and despotisms of civilization, will concentrate on some unoccupied territory in sufficient force to organize a State, in which they may realize freedom and justice.

I have written this more to set you and the public right respecting certain important movements, than to vindicate myself. For several years I have borne the abuse and slanders of conservative donkeys and knaves, who make a trade of radicalism; but such personalities are of no consequence. My worst slanderers are a clique of socialists and so-called reformers, who are too cowardly to stand by the logical and legitimate consequences of their own principles—sneaks who villify others to save themselves. Such men all true reformers must despise, while honest conservatives will never trust them.

Senator Benjamin's Prophecy.

SENATOR BENJAMIN is a member of the United States Senate from Louisiana, and said to be as well posted in the affairs of State as any man in the South. We give below an extract of his reply to some Citizens of New Orleans in answer to some enquiries on the subject of the American organization, Slavery, &c. It will be seen he is quite prophetic:

"A majority of the next House of Representatives will be Freesoilers. Prominent members of the last House, leaders of that factious minority which sought by an abuse of Parliamentary rules, to defeat the ascertained will of the majority, were heard to threaten that they would return to the next Congress prepared to repeal the Nebraska law and the Fugitive Slave law, or break up the Government in the attempt. Most of these men have been re-elected after pledging themselves to the people of their districts, to carry out their treasonable designs by means of amendments to be offered to the appropriation bills at the next session of Congress. Thus, the very existence of this Government will be put at issue within the next twelve months.

"Permit me, for the purpose of making myself more clearly understood, to develope the effects of such a course of conduct as is threatened by these traitors.

"The General Appropriation bill, as its name imports, is that which provides for the payment of nearly all the current civil expenses of the Government. The salaries of all public officers, of the judges of the courts, of those who collect, keep and disburse the public revenue, are provided for in this bill. If it fail to pass, your public offices would be closed, your courts of justice shut up, your revenue officers arrested in the discharge of their duties, and the whole Government brought to a stand still.

"The bill of course requires the assent of both branches of Congress, and the scheme is, to add a clause to it repealing the Fugitive Slave Law and the Nebraska Law, so as to force the Senate to assent to these unconstitutional measures, or to assume the responsibility of stopping the wheels of Government by rejecting the whole bill.

"I state my deliberate conviction that this attempt will be made in the House of Representatives. I state my most serious apprehension that it will succeed in that body, and my entire confidence that the Senate will resist the infamous project to the end. If these apprehensions be realized, the next session will be closed without providing the supplies necessary to administer the Government, and the representatives will go home to their constituencies, to render an account of their action. The President will be compelled to call an extra session of Congress in order to provide means to carry on the Government; and the only hope left to save the country will be the returning sense of justice in the masses of the North when brought in view of the appalling danger that will then have become so manifest and impending as to force immediate and decided action. If they shall fail to choose the wise course of obedience to the Constitution; if they shall supinely acquiesce in the mad and treasonable warfare waged against the South, the Constitution, and common humanity, the days of this republic will have been numbered; and I have neither heart nor courage to seek further to penetrate the veil that darkly hides the future."

Yellow Fever in Virginia.

THE yellow fever which has raged to quite an alarming extent at Norfolk and Postmouth, Va., for the last few weeks still continues unabated. Many of the inhabitants have moved away especially from the latter place. A few cases have occurred also at Richmond. A thousand dollars was sent for the relief of the suffering of the two places from the relief committee of Philadelphia, on the 17th inst. For the same purpose there had been contributed at Baltimore up to the 16th inst., five thousand dollars. Provisions and other necessaries are sent down by the boats daily.

A demonstration is being made in this city to the same end and we understand some two thousand dollars were raised on the 18th to be forwarded to Norfolk immediately. Tuesday the 14th was observed in Norfolk as a day of fasting and prayer, and religious services were held in all the churches.

Death of Abbott Lawrence.

HON. ABBOTT LAWRENCE died at his residence at Boston on Saturday morning the 18th inst. Mr. Lawrence was a man of extensive property, and noted, not so much for his public life and acts, as his great capacity as a financier, and his philanthropy and benevolence to his fellow men. A meeting was held in the Fanuel Hall on the 20th by the prominent citizens of Boston, to give a public demonstration of their feelings towards the deceased. Quite a lengthy and pertinent address was delivered by the Hon. Edward Everett. His funeral took place on the 22d.

Foreign News.

THE news from Europe is dull, almost stale. It is affirmed that preparations are being made by the Russians to act on the aggressive. People in England are beginning to consider what good Sebastopol will do them if it is got. Turkey, with its variant races, is more and more falling apart. Its revenues are found to be cut lamentably short by the enlistment of Bashi Bashouks, who, when not at the plow, are good for little but pillage and murder. This loss of revenue is a serious matter. All kinds of extortion must be resorted to, and with less and less avail. As the war ministry of England but just saved itself, with the popular Palmerston at its head, by a majority of three in the matter of the Turkish loan, it is certain that they will not venture to propose the thing in like shape again. Turkey will be called upon, as Russia now is, for the material guarantee, and has no choice but that of selling herself.

The Ins and the Outs.

IT is astonishing what a difference the being in or out of power makes with men. Lord John Russell, that crafty old phœnix, no sooner finds himself discarded than he veers to the popular side, and talks about liberty in the Italian States. He would forsooth put an end to political imprisonment in Naples, establish toleration and what-not in Tuscany, and, in fact, have British legislation proceed to any extent in interfering with the internal affairs of foreign nations. He would curry favor with the liberal party by bidding as high as they, whilst no one knows better how to retard and delay, by all those checks with which a minister in power is furnished, any actual progress. Scrambling, shuffling and clucking, he is the last of the school of statesmen who can escape without disgrace the non-fulfilment of their pledges. They must be swept away before good government can be secured. At present the people of England are as much led and swayed by aristocratic schemings as any subjects of other eastern governments. The people is a strong army without leaders. If statesmen do not now learn a lesson of progress they are dull minded. There is springing up a common sense in England which will no longer submit to be embarrassed by mystery and perplexity. Common sense goes in favor of a systematic, radical and comprehensive reform.

Plurality of Wives.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

REPLY TO MR. ABRAHAM SMITH'S LETTER, CONTINUED.

THIRD QUESTION.—"How can you prove a plurality of wives to be in accordance with the will of God as taught in the Bible?"

In reading the Scriptures, we find the first great commandment of the Almighty, to his children on the earth that we inhabit, was to multiply and replenish the earth. This was emphatic, and no person need be dubious with regard to this matter. As we have no account of the commandment ever having been repealed, no person was or is exempt from this law so essential in accomplishing the designs of God in peopling, and appropriating the earth to the use for which it was created. The uniformity of construction in each sex, show that all were and are created with capacity to carry out this great law.

If the Almighty had made an order of the human specie, unqualified to obey this commandment, He would probably have made exceptions to the law, or made another adapted to their capacities. But, as we have no such anomalies, (with the few exceptions common to all general rules,) this law is binding upon every son and daughter of Adam. This being conceded, no man or set of men or women, have a right to pass any law conflicting with, or defeating in whole or in part the above law.

They may legislate with regard to the manner in which it shall be carried out, in such points as are not specified by the same Great Law given; but never to curtail or prohibit its application.

Wherever then we find a Sect, State, or Nation that have instituted laws, that a man shall not have a wife, or shall have but one wife, we find a people that have transcended their prerogative, and are under condemnation to the same extent, that their laws counteract the law of God.

We are to bear in mind as we proceed that the first great law, named, was never repealed—was not a law of Moses, and done away with some portions of those laws. If we examine the institutions of the different Nations at the present day, we find about one-fifth of the inhabitants of the earth living under prohibitory laws, restricting men to one wife; the other four-fifths living without this restriction. Holding that marriage is the only legal process through which this first great commandment can be carried out, (which is conceded by all,) which of these two orders among men is in accordance with the will of God or the bible?

The fact that the latter or plurality of wives, can be carried out, and accomplish the design of God in peopling the earth, without transgressing any other of his laws, is sufficient vindication of the justice of the institution. Its legality is self evident, and would be were there no precedents or examples in those men who demonstrated its legality, by practising it under the sanction of the Almighty himself; With these precedents or examples added, the evidence is overwhelming. While on the other hand, the one wife restriction, or monogamic law, prohibits in a great measure the carrying out the great procreation law first named; for it is a well known fact, and one which I believe will not be disputed, that hundreds and even thousands of females in this country, and others where the same law obtains, are prohibited, through this very restriction, from carrying out one of the greatest and most important laws of their being, for the very best of reason on their part, that there are not males enough for each to have a husband. Statistics of any Nation, in any age, have rarely failed to show a majority of females, and in innumerable instances that majority has been enormous. There are a variety of causes for this disparity, which we shall not stop here to enumerate, but will simply give a short extract in evidence of the fact, from the New York Sunday Mercury:

Matrimony—Disparity of Sex.

"The census tables disclose one fact of melancholy importance, which at present has not sufficiently engaged the attention of our social philosophers. They show that, in the largest cities of the Union, the females outnumber the males in the ratio of ten per cent.; so that, if every man were compelled by law to take unto himself a wife, a vast number of the fair sex would still be doomed to the torturing 'hope deferred' of old maidenhood! If one dare apply figures to exhibit the result of this unfortunate disparity, what alarming conclusions would they bring us to! Of every two thousand inhabitants, one hundred must perforce be old maids. In a city containing a million, as New York will speedily do, every adult generation—say every twenty years—will cast upon society sixty thousand victims to female celibacy; so that persons now living may yet see one hundred thousand, or more, unmarriageable ladies in the city of Gotham!—at which period, we should say, it will be an exceeding ticklish place to live in.

But, alas for the ladies! inequality of number is not the only calamity they have to contend against. There is no legal compulsion for every man to marry. In this free Republic, each man may exercise a sultanic despotism over his own affections, and, in the matter of matrimony, consult only his own inclinations. The natural consequences is a growing propensity to bachelorhood, which will probably entail the forlorn doom of the perpetual sisterhood on another ten per cent. of female citizens. We leave it to statisticans, curious in such themes, to detail the moral and social results inevitable in a condition of female superfluity, contenting ourselves with suggesting, that while such a melancholy state of things exists, no man has a right to remain a bachelor, and ought, at any rate, to be taxed for the luxury.

"But the remedy!—who can propose an efficient one? The same enormous disparity does not exist in the rural districts, though even there the female population is the most numerous, generally; but, still, if proper attractions were offered, and institutions to facilitate matrimony were established by enterprising adepts in the science, becolic bachelors might seek their wives among the thousands of despairing city dames; some relief would then be afforded, but the evil, though lessened, would still remain. We can conceive of no positive cure but the immigration of the unmarried female 'element' to Utah, or the establishment of the 'peculiar institution' of the Mormons among us. He would be a bold man who would propose this last remedy, but our private opinion is that his proposition would not lack support."

This fact alone shows the utter impossibility to carry out the great first law, without breaking the monogamic law of the Land; and it is a well known fact, that among the ancients no greater curse was known among females, than to be unable to bear offspring, whether from barrenness, or any other cause, if there were any other. If they have not lost that peculiarity at any subsequent period, it follows that the law of the land must be broke, or those thousands of surplus females never contribute to the demands of the higher law named, or that instituted by the same great lawgiver, the law of their being and organization. Hence both laws are defeated, and corruption and gross licentiousness stalk abroad at noon-day, bidding defiance to the laws of both God and man. This is a natural consequence—when one law has been broken, it is a good beginning to break all others. We do not wish to be understood as placing departure from the good order of society on the females alone, but rather the reverse, as far as responsibility is concerned; we are merely showing the results of this disparity; men take the advantage of the circumstance in which the law places the weaker vessel, and use it to gratify their sensual propensities. And I do not hesitate to say that men are vastly more culpable in those illegitimate connections so common in our day, than their female victims. There are more reasons for this than one.

In the first place Monogamic law allows every man a wife, but prohibits (as we have already shown) the thousands of surplus females from ever having a husband. Add to this their natural inclination to confide in man, and all is in his favor. Hence unprincipled men, knowing the chances in their favor, make seduction their business instead of taking upon themselves the responsibility of a family. Here then we have in this Monogamic law, a bounty on the heads of illegitimate children, rather than an inducement to a wholesome family organization. In a word it is a law opposed to the law of God—opposed to the good of society, by throwing thousands of females on its surface (without a protector) inducing men by their temptations, to throw away the family they have, instead of increasing it, with all its endearing associations.

But take off the restriction, and give the primitive law its legitimate course, and the result is entirely different. Instead of a portion of the human family being debarred from fulfilling the law of God, all can do it; and the laws of both God and man, can be honorably sustained. The floating capital that is now used by speculators in seduction, would find a more honorable investment, and men instead of being old bachelors, and perverters of law, would take to themselves one wife, at least, while there chance was good, and thereby become husbands and fathers in accordance with the design of God. But what were the precedents among the ancients before tradition assumed the shape in which we now find it? Did they introduce a prohibitory clause into their matrimonial laws restricting man to one wife? I mean the old Patriarchs and prophets of God, who received the word and will of God from time to time—talked with angels, and even God himself. I find in the history of Abraham, (one of those worthies) that after he had been married to Sarah a number of years and had no children, that Sarah gave Abraham another wife, that he might perpetuate his honorable name on the earth; and that too without perpetrating some evil deed, that thereby they might get divorced, as many do at present. I next find the Almighty, instead of treating Abraham's second wife as vile, honoring her by a communication from the heavens, and instead of a reprimand for transgressions, counciling her with regard to her domestic affairs, and given her promises concerning her offspring, that gave her much consolation. Here then is the father of the faithful with two living wives at the same time, and the will of God to the contrary no were expressed in the scriptures.

The Drama of History.

IT was Pope who wrote in his Essay on Man:

"Of systems possible, if 'tis confessed
That Wisdom infinite must form the best,
Where all must fall, or not coherent be,
And all that rises, rise in due degree."

Such is the drama of history. There are those men who will impose their absolute elements of fixed laws, dogma or principle, but leading to an unsettling, dividing, shifting element of opinion and practice, but the progress whether of an individual or of nations is only that degree by which all the peculiarities of our nature are elevated and expanded. Without this there can be no harmonious action in the effects of outer influences, and men would be left stragglers on the great battlefield of life, with no unity of action, aim or effort. Yet men with these fixed principles have set about to find correspondences and confirmations in the past, each squaring his facts to suit his little hypothesis, and making out whatever number of acts to his drama he might choose. With their meshes, small and great, put down into the stream of time, a vast amount of truth has escaped them. Some have wandered in geographical, others in political directions, and all have lost those great social phenomena which at once determine the ebb and flow of the elements that make up human society. In estimating what has been realized, and the purpose of successive dispensations, we necessarily look to prophecy, even the details of the application are not left to conjecture if the system of the world be rightly viewed, and instead of the vain and empty tenets of pragmatical men we take into view the position and interests of the whole human race. Men who will not conform to the progress of this drama will not find peace. We see a vindictiveness displayed in the action of the Western Cabinets in regard to the present war, which certainly does not come from any conviction that they are working out the great drama, which nevertheless proceeds. The execution of righteous judgment does not make men vindictive, nor is the principle of mercy, as opposed to the present relentless war to be found in the maintenance of theoretical paradoxes and debateable abstract tenets, mercy is a thing to be matured gradually by those very influences which are thus practically ignored. Yet the drama proceeds, and amidst all the present desultory and self-willed movements, acts for the amelioration of the condition of the mass of the human race. The genius of improvement wins its way, and the basis is being constantly strengthened and extended for the prevalence of universal truth.

FOR THE MORMON.

Chinese Commerce.

A KNOWLEDGE of the Chinese themselves, of their institutions, and of their means of political economy, is necessary to the understanding of their commerce. Few suspect that they are the shrewdest of all nations thus engaged; that their bargains invariably redound to their own advantage; and that whilst in other countries there has been no end to theories on the wealth of nations, the Chinese have been practising the one most conservative and most enriching. Documentary evidence and the sanctions of local knowledge are the only grounds on which sound opinions can be formed. The large transactions of the East India Company will serve to introduce the subject. Parliamentary returns show that the gross amount of their sales have only averaged $17,500,000, out of which the prime cost in China has been $10,000,000, without making allowance for agency, freight, and other charges.

The character of Chinese policy in regard to foreign commerce is essentially unaccommodating—or rather, hostile. The spirit of the section of their laws respecting illicit exportation of merchandise is, that all foreign nations are enemies to China, that she allows no free or friendly intercourse, that she wishes to keep her affairs a secret; and accordingly such as trade with foreigners, except such as are licensed by government, are deemed traitors. One of the greatest obstacles to the formation in any country of foreign settlements, or to the growth of foreign commerce, was long since declared to be independence of the people of such a country, and "illiberality" of their governments—and nowhere are these asserted obstacles more dormant, this independence and conceived illiberality more prominent, than in China. If one advantage be nominally given, it is certain to be overbalanced. Thus, while the Spaniards, until the late treaty which decreed to western nations five free ports—three of which proved utterly worthless, and one of which had been previously possessed—had been privileged above the rest by having access to both Macao and Canton, besides the nominal exclusive privilege of trading at the port of Amoy, the exactions of the Mandarins so effectually impeded resort to the latter place, that for forty years after it was unvisited by a single Spanish ship. We have heard the fate of one of the latest expeditions.

Besides measurement duties and port charges, a duty was levied on export as import cargoes, and there being no fixed rate, a special negotiation was entered into with the Mandarins on the ship's arrival. The records of the East India Company show, that until necessity had set them upon their present system of union against Mandarins and Mandarin merchants, their single ships experienced even worse treatment, and serious thoughts were entertained of abandoning the trade, which then amounted to almost one-twelfth part of its present magnitude. Great Britain is still mutually, though not by treaty, confined to a single port of a single province, that single province divided from the rest of the empire by a barrier of high mountains, and chosen purposely by the Chinese government as the point farthest distant from the capital. In order to be consumed there, foreign woollens must travel a distance of twelve hundred miles, and cross the mountain barrier, at the feet of which they are unladen in boats, and are thence carried on men's shoulders across the pass.

The duties on internal transportation afford the government large revenues, which would be seriously curtailed by ports nearer the tea districts. After all, there is more wisdom in this Tartar policy than that of the "philanthropy" which has demolished the native manufacturer in India. In a commercial report which we have seen it is affirmed that not an article of British manufactures can be named which would realize in China ten per cent. of cost price. The sumptuary law of the Chinese, forbidding the use of things not sanctioned by custom, is another obstacle; the Chinese accept cash, but do not favor exchange, and will not have native industry interfered with. Yet, for the same reason, raw produce has always found its best market at Canton. Then, if comparison of material be instituted, the Chinese have always objected against the flimsy texture of foreign calicoes, in comparison with their own very strong and lasting goods. The Hong merchants themselves have a direct interest in discouraging European importations; being responsible for the customs, they have to make an advance of whatever may be the import duty, though the goods may have to lie unsaleable in their warehouses. They will enter into bonds and engagements for the Company's ships, but not without delay and difficulty for any private ship.

The temptation to avoid enormous port charges is very great, and this country has certainly its share in the great contraband trade which is now carried on at places of anchorage at the mouth of the Canton river. A ship of fifteen hundred tons is charged the same as a small schooner; and the indirect taxation falls heavily on the contingent profits of a ship's adventure. When adventurers of Great Britain in self-defence swarmed at the northern ports as a nation of smugglers, the Government, finding no duties coming in ordered them to Canton. When the Company's Chinese Secretary at Canton drew up, in 1814, for an American gentleman, an address to the Viceroy, requesting compensation for some severe losses he had suffered, it was returned unopened, with a written order from the Viceroy, directing the Hong merchants to inform the Americans in general, that none of their nation were permitted to address the Government in the Chinese character, this being a privilege exclusively granted to the Company—in fact wrested from them, so watchful are they even of bestowed immunities. This Company has done good service by keeping down the price of teas, and has constituted at all times a negotiative body. The commerce of China, in fact, is a constant negotiation. The Chinese refused opium only for the reason that it required the payment of specie; their moral defence was addressed to a large party in England, ready to give heed to whatever might arouse philanthropic sensibility. The Company being freed from the degradation of certifying what they have now on board, have the best possible opportunity of introducing it. In reviewing Chinese commerce we cannot fail to be struck by its disproportion, and the commercial as well as political independence of the country. Over the European commerce of this mighty empire some fifteen or twenty Hon-Kong merchants preside. As yet we have but the driblets from that immense empire.

Mormonism at Fort Riley.

We clip the following from the St. Louis Republican. Our brethren will be pleased to learn that Bishop Chard and his company are alive and well. Ten deaths are reported, but the deceased were sick before they left this city, and inasmuch as they were upright and honorable before their Lord, they will not lose their reward.

The bold, fearless and determined conduct of brother Chard and his company, at Fort Riley, is another evidence of the sterling character of our holy religion. It is not like the sickly sentimentalism, adopted by modern Christians, which they call religion, which causes them to fear the approach of death, lest they be cast into hell. Mormonism inspires no such feelings; it has delivered thousands, who through fear of death, have been subjected to bondage all their lives. It makes a man bold in the battle field—it makes him fearless when surrounded by the dead and dying. Some might suppose that Bishop Chard and his company of Saints, would have shut themselves up, and spent their time praying; but it appears that instead of praying, they commenced cleaning and whitewashing. If any want to know the reason, it is probably because they did their praying in advance, and when trouble came, they were prepared for it; and although hundreds precipitately fled, they were found on the ground, scrubbing, whitewashing, mounting guard, and manifesting to all around them, the superior spirit which governed their actions, establishing additional proof of the excellence of a living faith:

From Fort Riley.

St. Louis, August 14, 1855.

Mr. Editor: I have noticed several contradictory statements concerning the cholera at Fort Riley, the conduct of the laborers, &c. This morning, the death of Maj. Ogden was contradicted by the Morning Herald, on the authority of a letter received in this city, dated, Fort Riley, July the 30th.

The following letter has just been handed me by Mrs. Chard, of this city, whose husband has charge of fifty men, mostly Mormons, engaged by Maj. Ogden as masons and laborers. It was reported, you will recollect, that all the workmen left, but it will be seen from the following letter, that this company boldly stood their ground. The disturbance that has been reported arose among some Irish laborers, who demanded their pay contrary to agreement, and threatened violence unless they were paid. Mr. Sawyer paid their demand and the disturbance ceased.

Fort Riley, August 5, 1855.

Dear ———: I take this opportunity of again writing to you, as two of my company are going down in the morning. Since I last wrote to you, Maj. Ogden has died of cholera. He died yesterday, at twenty minutes past 12 o'clock, P. M. Such a day as yesterday I never wish to see again as long as I live; but, thank God, the worst is over, and all the brethren are alive and well, except John Sheppard and John Boon, who died of cholera last evening, the former about half-past six, and the latter somewhat later in the evening.

We have been all day white-washing and cleaning our quarters. All other work is stopped. There is nothing doing in the Government works. We have had no new cases of cholera to-day. I think half the men have run away. The men who bring this have been all day building a raft. God knows if they will live to reach St. Louis. I am here, and I intend to stand at my post, live or die. I, with my brethren, feel to be in the hands of the Lord. If I die doing my duty, I say, amen—God's will be done. The brethren who are with me, have stood up to their duties, like men of God. A better set of men I could not have had. They have been ready and on hand, night and day; and this is not confined to the Saints alone, but those who are not of us, who came up in our company under my charge.

Out of the companies that came here, our's is the only one that has stood the test of this trial. And I pray God to bless them for it; and I know He most assuredly will. But I must come to a close, as I am expecting to be called to go on guard. I am yours, &c.,

Charles Chard.

If men are required by the General Government, who will stand to their post and never flinch, like the Spartan band of ancient fame, Mormonism can furnish men of the right stamp, whether it be a battalion for Mexico—fifty men for Fort Riley, or if fifty thousand were required for the nation's weal, Mormonism could furnish the contingent, and challenge the world to equal their patriotism and determined bravery.—[St. Louis Luminary, August 18.

The Pacific Railroad.

The opportunity we possess calls upon us as a nation to achieve one of the grandest enterprises for subduing and civilizing the world that was ever offered to man. I refer to the building of the Atlantic and Pacific railway. Even the Union itself, from one extreme to the other, cannot long be preserved without it. It must be done. But why have we not yet set about it? The reason is, I think, to be found in the impractical nature of the schemes proposed for its accomplishment. The Whitney scheme demands that its inventor shall be made a nabob by public grant of a princely domain, sixty miles wide and two thousand miles long, and requires at least two hundred years for its completion. The proposition is absurd. This glorious work should be more national, more republican, more democratic than that. A joint stock company might be formed, to have a capital of, say one hundred millions of dollars. The balance of the stock not taken by individuals to be all subscribed by the United States government, which should, in addition thereto, gurantee an annual dividend of six per cent to all individual stockholders, to be paid out of the national treasury. The wild land taken for the roadway to be valued and taken as part of the government subscription. A temporary iron track to be immediately laid without waiting to have it graded, with stationary steam power wherever necessary to aid in the construction of the permanent track, and for the transportation of materials, provisions, workmen, passengers, &c. A line of telegraph should also be provided for. A single permanent track, graded and well constructed, to be next laid down from, say Council Bluffs to San Francisco, with a branch from Utah to Oregon. A double track to be constructed after the first has been put in operation. Government to establish an office for the sale and transfer of stock in amounts not less than $1,000, and to offer its stock for sale so long as any remains on hand. Stockholders to be entitled to a number of votes, according to the number of shares held by each. Congress to elect directors for the road annually of its part according to the number of government shares. The rest of the directors to be elected in stockholders meeting, by the individual stockholders. The President of the United States might also be a director ex officio, so long as government should be a stockholder. Treasury notes payable on demand at the various sub-treasuries might be authorized to be issued and a permanent loan also obtained to meet them when offered, and to aid in the construction of the road. Subscriptions to the stock to be paid into, and all payments to be made from, the United States treasury, until the management of the road shall be voluntarily surrendered to the company. By these means the locomotive could be sent through to California on a single track, in less than three years. The immediate laying of a temporary track, roughly graded, would facilitate the delivery of men and supplies at all necessary points, and afford a tolerable route to the gold regions. It would rapidly build up a business for the road, by inducing settlements along its line. The whole of the permanent track could be put under contract to different contractors at once, and passengers be soon carried to California in the space of a week, at the rate of one cent per mile, and yet pay good dividends. There would be no lack of subscribers to the stock, and in a very few years government could surrender the management of the road entirely to the company. The stock could never depreciate, and the company need contract no permanent debt. The six per cent paid by government to the stockholders would be a charge against the company, with other expenses, but future profits and services in carrying the mail, &c., would cancel the debt. The rise of lands on the route would more than pay the cost of the whole road. California and the Mississippi valley, would profit enormously by the trade that would spring up, and the commerce of the world would pour through American channels, and its wealth would fill the lap of the American Union. "The far East" would become "the far West." The New World would soon be too small to contain us, and our enterprise would make the shores of Asia resound, and its "wilderness to blossom as the rose." The iron track and the march of free institutions would progress until it had revolutionized the whole earth, and thus Asia, and even Europe, would become democratic and republican. Then a midsummer trip to the north pole, would be but a pleasure excursion, and two or three months would be ample time enough for a voyage around the globe.

A New German Colony.—On Wednesday last, the propellor Queen of the Lakes took some fifty-five Germans from Chicago, Illinois, as passengers, who are part of a colony about to settle on the Michigan coast, opposite the South Manitou Island. The colony has purchased about 700 acres of land there, and the settlement or town is to be called North Unity. Six or seven hundred Germans are preparing to join the colony, most of them recent imigrants to this country.

What's in a Name?—S. J. Holley, Esq., of Oswego, is now forming a line of new vessels, to be called the "Ebony Line." One of his new vessels has just made her appearance. She is called the Gerrit Smith. Another will be out soon, which will be called Theodore Parker. This will be followed by the Henry Ward Beecher. The Fred. Douglass and one or two other crafts, with equally appropriate titles, will be out next year.—[Boston Courier.

The Louisville Riots.

The Louisville papers furnish us with still futher evidence of the brutality of the mob in that city at the late elections.—We ask American citizens to read the following, and answer upon their consciences whether anything in savage warfare is more barbarous or cruel. The facts set forth are all substantiated.

"The house of John Chivers, on Main street, near Eleventh, was fired. His wife ran into the street with her child in her arms. She was surrounded by the ruffians and told if she did not return to the burning ruins and bring out her husband for them to kill, that they would kill both her and her child. Frantic with despair, she permitted one of them to take the child, and she returned to the house and told her husband what they said. He immediately rushed out to rescue his infant from the murderous wretches, and was riddled with shot and left for dead. He was afterward carried to the infirmary of the Sisters of Charity, and has since died. He had not attempted to vote, and had offered no violence to any human being. The above particulars were detailed by his wife.

"Martin Connelly, now lying dangerously wounded at the infirmary, informs us that he was at supper when he discovered that the house had been fired. He and his wife ran out. As soon as they reached the street his wife began to plead for his life. A few gentlemen attempted to save him, but one of the ruffians placed a pistol at his left breast and fired. Connelly is a peaceable and inoffensive citizen.

"Dennis Long, another of the wounded, lying at the infirmary, informs us that he was reading a newspaper on the street, when George Thompson, a friend of his and a Know Nothing, came and told him that the crowd at the polls were meditating an attack upon the row of houses occupied by the Irish, and advised him to keep in his house. He went to sleep, and was awakened by the shots. His two brothers were in the room when he awoke. They discovered that the house was on fire. They attempted to escape. But no sooner had they reached the streets than his two brothers were fired at and fell. He rushed on through the crowd, but was himself shot, and remained unconscious until he was carried to jail. His two brothers were killed. He heard the murdered Quinn tell the mob that he would give them all the money and all the property he possessed, if they would spare his life and the lives of his tenants; but the savages shot him before the words were scarcely out of his mouth. No offence is alleged against any of these men.

"George Hubert, an old German living on the corner of Ninth and Chestnut-streets, left home about four o'clock in the evening for Portland avenue to see a cow which he intended to buy. While passing down Main-street he saw two crowds. He was between them; heard some shots fired; looked and saw a man lying on the pavement; saw two men, Americans, go up and fire two shots at the prostrate body, and would have fired the third but the pistol would not go off. The crowd immediately surrounded the old man. One of them cried out, "Let us kill the d—d old Dutch s—n of a b—h." He begged them to spare his life. Another cried out that he would shoot him for the fun of the thing, and immediatelely placed a pistol to his right breast and fired. Hubert is now lying in a most critical condition at his residence on the corner of Ninth and Chestnut-streets."

Suggestions About Depth of Plowing.

Luther Tucker, Esq.:—I have noticed with some interest in the late numbers of the Country Gentleman, several articles in reference to the practical advantages of deep and shallow plowing. Though my occupation in life has never been that of an agriculturist, I have always felt an interest in, and respect for, those who are, and hope therefore that you and they will not think me impertinent in offering a few suggestions that have occurred to me on the subject.

In some of the limestone districts of our country, I have observed that the tops and sides of sharp hills and ridges, are equally productive with the valleys between them—whereas in gravelly and sandy districts, the tops and sides of the ridges and hills are quite barren, and the valleys between fruitful. My inference from these facts is, that in the deep limestone soils, the natural wash of the hills removes the exhausted soil and brings within the reach of plants new earth of greater fertility, about as fast as is required. On the contrary, in gravelly and sandy soils, there is little or no productiveness except in the top soils, which are probably the product of ages of vegetable decomposition, and when once removed leave the land almost entirely barren.

From these facts, reasoning would lead me to the conclusion, that in deep limestone soils, it will be found to be advantageous to plow somewhat deeper each succeeding rotation of crops; but that in sandy or gravelly soils, it will not do to go below the productive surface, unless artificial means are used to make the new surface as fruitful as the one turned under by the plow. The same observation may be applied to soils having unproductive clay below the top soil. If no artificial means are used to make the clay fruitful, it will, I think, do more harm than good to bring it to the surface.

I suppose there will be but one opinion among agriculturists, of the superior advantages of the deep soils to resist the evil effects of great drouth: and the necessity of them for the cultivation of root crops. Whether he can make it profitable, to make thin gravelly or clayey soils productive by deep plowing and high manuring, is a matter that depends upon so many contingencies, that one must determine it for himself; but unless he can do so, I doubt much whether he will ever make himself rich by plowing deeply on thin gravelly or clayey land.

News from Europe.

The arrival of the Pacific since our last brings four days later news. A portion of which is as follows:

Liverpool letters announce the failure of Latham Brothers, in the Buenos Ayres trade, with liabilities for £78,000.

Twenty-five shocks of earthquake were fell at Broussa. Abd-el Kadir is sick.

Gen. Canrobert has embarked for France.

Spain forms alliance with the Western Powers.

The news by this arrival is very unsatisfactory. There are many rumors and few facts. Private reports state that Revel has been bombarded; yet we don't hear with what effect.

Gen. Markham is spoken of in certain circles as likely to succeed to the command, but the statement is doubtful; Sir Colin Campbell's appointment would be more popular. The Queen is desirous to nominate the Duke of Cambridge, but he prudently declined the honor, offering, however, to go out as second in command. Meantime General Simpson continues with the army.

Omar Pacha is appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Turks in Asia. Some operations, of no great moment, have been executed by the allies in the Sea of Azoff. The Black Sea fleet is still concentrated for some great movement. A coup de main is confidently expected in the Baltic. Ninety ships are assembled at Nargen, and opinions on board are divided as to whether their destination be Revel or Sweaborg—most probably the latter.

It is once more stated that the Empress of the French is enceinte, and the fact has been communicated by various diplomatists to their Governments.

The well-informed Paris correspondent of the London Times, states, that Austria has just made spontaneous advances of more friendly relations towards the Western Powers. Lord Palmerston, in Parliament, conveyed a similar meaning, but the public are slow to believe in Austrain friendship.

CRIMEA—SIEGE OF SEBASTOPOL—LATEST DISPATCHES.

July 28th.—Gen. Simpon telegraphs since my despatch of the 24th, I have nothing of importance to relate.

We continue to strengthen and improve our advanced works, which are now so close to the enemy's defences that I regret to say our casualities are necessarily considerable.

The enemy exhibits great activity in adding to and improving their defences, and the conveyance of military stores from the North to the South side is increasing. Cholera had nearly ceased in the ranks of the army.

August 2d, (evening,) Prince Gortschakoff writes: Nothing of importance is going on. The vigor of the (Russian) fire prevents the works of the besiegers from advancing, and their fire is weaker.

August 4th.—Gen. Simpson telegraphs that the Russians made a night sortie on the Woronzoff road, as far as the cheveaux de frise, but were repulsed without trouble.

August 7th.—Pellissier telegraphs: Nothing of interest to communicate. The enemy has not undertaken any thing against our trenches. Some cases of cholera have re-appeared.

August 8th.—Nothing except repetition of report that Revel had been bombarded.

BRITAIN.

On the 9th, the Queen reviewed the Foreign Legion at Shornecliffe, and immediately afterwards 1,000 men of the German regiment were ordered to the seat of war. Parliment was expected to close on Monday, the 13th; the Queen would not prorogue the houses, in person. Nothing of much interest had occurred in Parliament during the week.

In the Commons the bill for the creation of £7,000,000 sterling exchequer bills was read a third time.

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF POLAND.

Another meeting in favor of the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland' was held in St. Martin's Hall, on the 8th, the Earl of Harrington presiding. The meeting was extremely uproarious, and a Mr. Collet moved as an amendment, that—

"Cordially desiring the restoration of Poland this meeting cannot forget that the destruction of that nationality was mainly owing to the perfidious conduct of Lord Palmerston while he remains in office, no proposition for the restoration of Poland can be any thing but a delusion and a snare."

In the disturbance that ensued the Chairman left the hall. George Thompson put the amendment, which was declared carried. Sir Robert Peel spoke in favor of the original motion.

A subscription to buy a freehold landed estate for the Raglan family is rapidly filling up,—£6,000 are already subscribed, mostly in sums of £100 each from the nobility.

The King of Portugal had been on a brief visit to Queen Victoria.

The Turkish Loan bill has now passed both Houses of Parliment, and as soon as it has received the royal assent a notification will be issued by the Turkish Minister inviting the attention of capitalists to hear the conditions on which the amount is proposed to be raised.

It is understood that in all renewals of Government contracts for transport steamers, the terms will be reduced from 50s. to 45s. or 40s.

The Earl of Sefton, Lord Lieutenant of Lancashire, had died at an advanced age.

The Report of the Parliamentary Commitee appointed to consider what rewards are due to the Arctic explorers has been published. The report which is very lengthy, recommends the gift of £10,000 sterling to Captain McClure and his companions of the ship Investigator. An honorable mention only is made of other navigators.

FRANCE.

A recent regulation reduces the price of admission to the Exposition on Fridays, from 5 francs to 2 francs, and transfers the 4 sous admission from Sundays to Mondays.

General Count Alexandre de Girardin, father of the journalist, died recently in Paris, aged 75.

Great preparations continue to be making in Paris for the reception of Queen Victoria.

An Italian, name unknown, had been arrested at Biaritz, on suspicion of having followed the Emperor with evil intent. A dagger and pistol were found on his person, but the case is one of suspicion only.

SPAIN.

Some further arrests have been made at Barcelona.

It is confidently stated from Madrid that on the 4th instant, the Spanish Government decided to give formal adhesion to the Western Powers, and to send to the Crimea 25,000 men, to be paid and outfitted by France and England. The official Gazette totally denies this statement, while the Epoca and other journals as firmly maintain its truth, and add that the project will encounter great opposition in the Cortes. In return for this accession, Napoleon promises to put down all attempts against the throne of Isabella.

The present visit of the King of Portugal to London is said to be with a view of including Portugal in the alliance.

PORTUGAL.

Advices from Madeira give an unsatisfactory account of the condition of the Island. The vines are completely withered, and there is no other culture on which to rely for the means of subsistence.

ITALY.

The celebrated General, William Pope, is dead.

General Percey, appointed by the British Government to organize the Italian legion, had arrived at Turin.

A telegraphic despatch states that the Emperor Napoleon has made an energetic demand that the Pope shall reform and secularize his government, with the view of remedying the present state of disorganization in the territories of the Church. Two congregations had been held, and decided to refuse the request.

THE BALTIC.

Despatches have been received from Capt. Yelverton, relating that on 26th July he took possession of the island of Kotka, without resistance, and destroyed the fortifications and stores—the garrison having evacuated.

Letters mention a general anticipation that Sweaborg and Helsingfors will be immediately attacked.

RUSSIA.

Mercantile letters from St. Petersburg state that business goes on quietly on a reduced scale, and that the exchanges are steady, and the funds well supported. Nothing can be gleaned from these letters as to the state of opinion on the war.

The Russians have burned all the remaining stores of grain at Kertsch, to prevent exportation by the allies.

Voluminous correspondence is published respecting the Hango affair—including the letter of Geneste.

RUSSIAN CIRCULAR TO FRIENDLY POWERS.

The Russian Government has forwarded to its ministers at foreign courts, a circular dated June 24th, in reply to Lord Clarendon's note of June 6th, which, itself, was a reply to a Russian document, of date May 10th.

The object of both the Russian circulars is to announce to friendly powers, that Russia adheres to the doctrine that "the flag covers the cargo," but that Britain has infringed on and repudiates that principle.

Apple Crop.—Probably the coming crop of apples throughout the country was never before so abundant. In many sections, propping up of the limbs of the trees, on account of the great quantity of fruit, has already become necessary, to save the branches from destruction. On the Western Reserve, Ohio, farmers have made contracts to sell them on the trees, the buyers to pick them, at six to ten cents a bushel. Throughout the East, where so many thousand barrels were shipped last season, the market will be well supplied from New England orchards. Unless there is a foreign outlet for them, the prices will rule low.—[Rochester Democrat.

Women's Rights Convention.

The women's rights convention at Saratoga Springs, commenced on the 15th inst. Among the speakers on the 16th we notice Rev. Antoinette L. Brown, Mrs. Ernastine L. Rose, Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell, and a Rev. Mr. Samuel J. May.

Many incontroveratable facts were presented and some poetry of course.

Irish Remittances from America.—If the emigration drain from Ireland to the United States is being gradually diminished, as no doubt it is, the influx into Ireland of American money, earned by Irish hands, is steadily on the increase. Just take a few figures in illustration of this statement. The number who left Ireland for all parts of the States, British America, and Australia, in the year 1853, was 192,609; whereas the number who left Ireland in the year 1854 did not exceed 150,209. Of these 111,095 emigrated to the United States, 22,909 to British America, and 16,203 to Australia. In 1853 the amount of money sent home by Irish emigrants to their relatives in Ireland, for payment of passages as well as for various other purposes, was £1,439,000; but in 1854 that amount, vast and wonderful as it was, was far exceeded, it having reached to £1,730,000, or nearly £300,000 over what it was the previous year. In the history of the world there is nothing like this amazing proof of the strength and intensity of the feeling of affection and family attachment which has ever distinguished and adorned the calumniated Irish race.—[Cork Examiner.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation! Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Pére et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur, présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "The Mormon" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "The Mormon" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL

ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liver ool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Be Gentle to thy Wife.

Be gentle—for you little know
How many trials rise;
Although to thee they may be small,
To her of giant size.

Be gentle—though perchance that lip
May speak a murmuring tone,
The heart may speak with kindness yet,
And joy to be thy own.

Be gentle—weary hours of pain,
'Tis woman's lot to bear;
Then yield her what support thou canst,
And all her sorrows share.

Be gentle—for the noblest hearts,
At times must have some grief,
And even in a pettish word,
May seek to find relief.

Be gentle—none are perfect here—
Thou'rt dearer far than life;
Then husband bear, and still forbear;
Be gentle to thy wife!

A Voice from Virginia.

"In Times of Peace, Prepare for War."

Military Defences of Virginia—Duty of the Legislature.

Long life to the Union—may its shadow never be less! It was designed to "establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," and, therefore, we love and cherish it. It was the work of demigods, and hence we revere it.

But we have fallen upon evil times There is reason to apprehend that it is to be perverted from its noble ends and used for far different purposes. If it pass under the control of fanaticism, then will justice be overthrown rather than established, domestic tranquillity give place to intestine convulsions, the common defence and general welfare be disregarded, and the blessings of liberty lost to ourselves and our posterity. Anti-slavery agitation threatens to accomplish these fell purposes. It was a union of slave States in its birth; and when the institution of slavery comes to be a source of inequality and injustice, the Union, as originally constituted, will have ceased to exist.

That condition, we fear, is already in sight, and nothing can avert it but the gallant stand for the Constitution made by Northern men. We of the South must be, in the main, passive spectators of the strife. All that we can do is to save our friends from reproach, by the moderation of our conduct, and to strengthen them by the firmness of our attitude. This is all we can do for the Union; but there is much to be done for ourselves, and but little time to perform it.

In a few years, Kansas will probably ask admission into the Union as a slave State, and may be refused. It needs but Free Soil predominance in the House of Representatives to achieve this end. If refused admission into this Union, she will undoubtedly be received by another, and the United States South will begin their career. This proposition is too clear for argument. Nothing but rank cowardice could induce the South to acquiesce in the exclusion of a slave State on the score of slavery. We assume, therefore, that the South will not acquiesce, and, consequently, we fear that, in a few years, Mason and Dixon's line may be the boundary of foreign powers.

The possibility of this event creates grave responsibilities. Virginia will be a frontier State. Should war unhappily occur between the two republics, she will receive the first shock. The bare possibility of this thing demands instant preparation, so far as it may be made without hastening the event and with strict fidelity to the Constitution.

If constitutional retaliation can be devised, and will probably be effectual, let us try it, but let not the failure of constitutional expedients find us unprepared for the change in our political relations that must ensue.

The next Legislature will find the Commonwealth threatened with this contingency, and, in the main, unprepared for it. They will find her without an organized military force, save a few companies of volunteers, and without the means of concentrating troops with the rapidity indispensable in modern warfare. The Constitution prohibits us from keeping troops or ships of war, but it does not prohibit a well organized militia, or a judicious system of military communications.

The Legislature will be faithless to its gravest duties if it adjourn without organizing the militia and providing for the completion of such lines of improvement as will subserve military as well as commercial purposes.

We are civilians, and wholly incompetent to plan a system of military defences for the State, but there are some general considerations, dictated by common sense, which even civilians may present without presumption.

It is generally conceded that a whole population cannot be drilled as soldiers. The abandonment of the old militia musters shows the opinion of our people on this point. Nothing therefore, remains but to classify the adult male population and to drill such portion as may be withdrawn from their usual avocations without public detriment.

According to the census returns and the lists of tithables, there are not less than 200,000 fighting men in the State. One-tenth of these might be drilled without injury to themselves or to the public.

We see no reason why each of the existing regiments, increased in numbers to 200, might not be required to furnish a company of volunteers, or of draughted men, at their option. These companies should be armed, assembled periodically at the regimental muster grounds and drilled.

The graduates of the Military Institute might be required to conduct these drills, instead of teaching school, as they are now required to do.

The companies might be organized into regiments, brigades and divisions, and into infantry, artillery and cavalry.

The advantages of such a system would be that, while no man would be carried out of his county, or injuriously withdrawn from his business, yet every county in the State, except some of the smallest, would have one or more military companies, ready to assemble at a moment's warning, to suppress insurrection or for police purposes. The State would possess a corps of 20,000 men armed, organized and drilled, and capable of being assembled, in whole or in part, at short notice, for the purpose of offensive or defensive warfare, without seriously interfering with the ordinary pursuits of the people at large, or burdening one section more than another.

We know of no objection that can be urged to such an organization, except the difficulty of assembling the companies for battalion drill. This difficulty is incident to every system except the impracticable and exploded one of drilling the whole adult population. The moment this is dropped and the principle of classification adopted, it becomes difficult to assemble the requisite number of men without transporting them a considerable distance. Nevertheless the difficulty is not insurmountable. Where the population is dense, it does not exist; and where the companies are widely dispersed, they should not be assembled so often as in other cases. The service would not be harder than in the present volunteer companies; and, therefore, the men might be kept enrolled several years; and by the periodical discharge of a certain proportion and the incorporation of an equal number of new men, it would be rendered still easier

The present volunteer companies would form a part of the proposed force; and where such a company was formed, of course drafting could not be required.

By such system, an elite corps would be always at command to suppress insurrection, repel invasion or act offensively, if required.

Only one thing more would then be needed for the present. Armies without the means of concentration are useless, and in modern warfare this is effected by steam, and with a rapidity not dreamed of thirty years ago. Twenty thousand men, dispersed through the State, would be available to suppress insurrection, but not to repel invasion, unless other means of transportation than their own legs be provided. A system of military communication is, therefore, indispensable to the safety of the State, and should be looked to forthwith.

To our unsophisticated view, the commercial lines already marked out are, in the main, such routes as military defence requires. We call attention to the map of Virginia. It will be found that the northern frontier presents what, in military parlance, we believe is called a salient angle. The north-western face of this angle is covered by the Ohio, and the north-eastern, to some extent, by the Potomac. Neither of these rivers could be crossed by an invading army if well defended, but the space between them, constituting the point of the angle and a portion of its right face, has no such protection. Moreover, the ranges of mountains and the rivers run from the centre of the State towards this open space, and thus present avenues of approach instead of lines of defence. Here, then, is the weak point on the northern frontier. On the east we are wholly exposed to maritime invasion. An enemy, master of the ocean, could land where he likes. There is but one protected point, and that is Hampton Roads. A fleet entering the capes, with an army on board, might land it in Lynnhaven bay, within twelve miles of Norfolk, or in York river, within forty miles of Richmond.

Fortunately for us, however, the railroads already constructed, or under contract, radiate from these two points to the interior, and need but completion to afford the desirable means of concentrating a force at either point. We should say, then, complete without delay the Petersburg and Norfolk and the Richmond and York River roads, for they are military roads of the first importance.

On the north, matters are not so favorably situated; but still, even here many of the roads tend in the right direction. The road from Harper's Ferry to Wheeling, partly on our own and partly on friendly soil, furnishes a means of communication from one flank to the other of the weak position on the northern frontier. The Parkersburg branch runs off in a south-westerly direction; the Hampshire and Loudon road to the south-east, and the Harper's Ferry and Charlestown road, together with the McAdamized road from the latter place to Staunton, leads off to the south.

But it will be observed that two-thirds of the trans-Alleghany region is wholy insulated—that it has no communication with the northern frontier, except a precarious one up the Ohio, and none with Eastern Virginia. Yet, this very region is the seat of a large proportion of the military strength of the State containing as it does a majority of the white population. It is as if we had a citadel filled with men and outworks feebly manned, with no communication from one to the other. The Covington and Ohio road pierces through the heart of this region, and will, when finished, pour its military strength either upon the seaboard, by the way of Staunton and Richmond, or upon the northern frontier, by the way of Staunton and Harper's Ferry.

It is obvious, then, at a glance, that the most important military road in the State is the Covington and Ohio road, for it not only developes the strength of the trans-Alleghany region of our own State, but connects us with Kentucky. So long, therefore, as this road is unfinished, the right arm of the State may be regarded as paralyzed. It would be entirely useless to raise an army on the banks of the Kanawha to succor the exposed northern frontier, or the defenceless seaboard, for the campaign would be decided before it could extricate itself from the mountain ranges east of that river. The completion of the Covington and Ohio road, and the filling up the gaps between Staunton and Harper's Ferry, seem indispensably necessary to place the military defences of the State on a respectable footing. The Lynchburg and Charlottesville road is also important as facilitating the connection of the northern frontier with the south-west.

We call upon the Legislature to consider these matters, and to give us a military force and the means of using it. Let it be done calmly, and without threat or menace. Avoid every measure calculated to wound our friends but omit nothing necessary for our own defence.

Practical measures, and not abstract resolutions, are what the people wish and expect. No exception can be taken to the measures we have indicated, for they are strictly constitutional and eminently proper. Carry them out, and we shall be ready for whatever fate has in store for us.—[Richmond Inquirer, Aug. 10.

Mr. Jacob Coursen, of Sussex county, N. J. had a singular adventure lately. In binding a sheaf of wheat, he took up a rattlesnake and bound it so tight that it could not escape. He was unaware of the fact till his attention was called to it, and he then killed it.

More Annexation.

According to a correspondent of the Tribune, a portion of whose letter we quote below, a new Republic is to be created out of a portion of Mexico now in a state of revolution. And should this revolution succeed, as probably it will by American aid, the next step will be, of course, a re-annexation of the Territory, with the ultimate purpose of creating one, or more slave States The South never forgets herself. Will the North ever remember the past and consider the future? Of the statements of the Tribune's correspondent, there can be no reasonable doubt. A private letter from a gentleman in Western Texas has been handed to us which confirms them in every particular. The Tribune writer says:

"But what think you of the project of the new Republic of Sierra Madre? You need not laugh; it is a serious matter. Already diplomatic overtures have been made to the incipient Republic by the neighboring Texan nation. The prosperity of Western Texas is seriously retarded by the facilities for escape afforded to negroes on their frontier. Once in Mexico, they are free. This prevents men who own property in slaves from emigrating to Texas, and is a continual drain upon those already there. The rich planters, therefore, in the neighborhood of San Antonio, and other afflicted portions of that Independency, have sent an agent to Vidaurri with the proposition that if he will make a treaty guaranteeing the surrender of all fugitive slaves on this side, they, in return, will not only reciprocate the humane act by returning all persons who escape to Texas, but will place one thousand men at the disposal of Vidaurri, equipped and officered in the same manner as the regular troops of the United States—all the expenses of this foreign legion to be borne by the Texans until they arrive at any point that Vidaurri may designate. With this view, $200,000 have already been subscribed, and the principals in the affair pledge their honor for the good faith and discipline of the troops so raised. The agent passed through here last week to see Vidaurri, and is now with him in Saltillo. Of the sincerity and earnestness of the Texans there can be no doubt. Their agent is instructed to assure his Excellency that no fillibustering is intended; that the proposition comes from solid men; and that the troops will be obedient and return to Texas whenever he chooses to dispense with their services. How the General will regard this novel proposition remains to be seen. I think the feeling among Mexicans toward Texans is decidedly adverse to such a harmonious and agreeable settlement of internal difficulties. In any event it is not to be supposed that the United States would care to provoke the ire of Texas by any untimely interference in her national concerns. To be sure the Constitution of the United States confers on the Federal Government alone the right to make treaties with foreign powers; and I even doubt if that Government will ever be a party to a treaty that contemplates the extradition of a man guilty only of the crime of being in debt; but, then, the United States is not Texas, and in disputed matters heretofore we have seen who came out second best. It is improbable that Vidaurri will disregard the sentiment of his countrymen on so important a matter, and that is decidedly hostile to the interference of foreigners, particularly as regards their internecine feuds. But we shall see."—[National Anti-Slavery Standard.

From Liverpool to Chicago Direct.

We have often called attention to a direct route which the free navigation of the St. Lawrence opens for the commerce of Europe with the West. We notice now that the bark Arabia, Capt. Polley, arrived at Chicago direct from Liverpool, on the 2d inst., and, was to leave on her return voyage on the 6th. After crossing the Atlantic, the Arabia passed into the St. Lawrence, and surmounting its rapids by means of the British Canadian locks and canals, entered Lake Ontario, after sailing through which she overcame some 300 feet ascent by the locks of the Welland Canal, and entered Lake Erie; thence through said Lake, the Straits and Lake St. Clair, Lake Huron and Lake Michigan to Chicago. She overcame the same ascent that is attained through our canals, but without transhipment and without payment of such heavy tolls.—[Albany Atlas.

Moral Courage.

A rare virtue, and great as it is rare. We remember when we thought the courage of the field everything; the charge, the word of command, high sounding and clear amid the battle's fury, the clash of arms, the roar of artillery, the thrill of the bugle's note, as with more than magic sound it bids the soldier dare all for victory, the banner of your country in front, planted there to stand amid victory or defeat. Oh! how young hearts beat to be actors in such a scene; calling it glorious to mingle in, and fighting nobly, to lie down and die.

But what is the courage of the battle-field compared with the moral courage of every day life! Stand alone, see friends scowl, hear distrust speak its foul suspicion, watch enemies take advantage of the occasion, laboring to destroy, who would not rather encounter the shock of a hundred battle-fields, and lead a forlorn hope in search, than bear and brave these things. Why, the one is as the summer's breeze on the ocean to winter's stormiest blast. The common spirit may summon courage to play the soldier well. Use quickly fits him for it. But it requires a man to speak out his thoughts as he thinks them, to do, when like that stormy blast in winter, on old ocean, peace, honor, security, and life are threatened to be swept away. Ye who, looking back on the page of history, or forward to the hope of future, would hesitate which of the two to choose. The martyrs—what are they! Chronicled names in all hearts. The patriots who died for liberty, ignominiously, and on the scaffold, how fares it with them? Cherished as earth's honored sons. The good who spoke the truth, and suffered for it's sake where are they? The best and brightest—first in our thoughts and love. And yet what did they? Like men they spoke the truth that was in them. This was their courage. If they had been silent, if trembling before tyrants, or mobs, they had feared to tell what they knew, to speak what they felt, they would have lived and died like other men. But they had the courage to do this, and through their suffering and truth lighted it up with new glory and power.

Give us the moral courage before every thing else! It is the only bravery on which humanity may count for any real blessing. Give us moral courage! for while it serves a man for duty, it roots out of his heart hate and revenge, and all bad passions, making him wise amid excitement, just amid lawlessness, and pure amid corruption. It is the crowning beauty of manhood.—[C. M. Clay.

Woman's Rights.

Is it the right of a woman to crowd a man out of a railroad car, omnibus, or steamboat? Is it the right of a woman to crowd him out from a public dinner table? Is a man bound to rise, when a woman comes along, and give her whatever he has the enjoyment of in the way of luxury, or comfort? Dear Lucy Stone, and the Rev. Antoinette,—to say nothing of the Polish lady, Fran' Ernestine Rose, have never taken up these topics so interesting to us men, or settled them,—but, on the contrary, have so left us all in the dark, that our gallantry at present makes us generally yield.

Nevertheless,—as man has some rights,—one of his rights, as yet, is to a smile, or a thankee, at the least,—when he surrenders his comforts, or luxuries to a lady, or not a lady,—as one comes along, and thus robs him of what he has paid for, and expects to have. A thankee is worth something to him, in the way of compensation for a right thus surrendered,—but a smile,—especially if a lady is gracious or pretty, may quite pay him up for losses. But a thankee, even, is seldom what is got. "A Lady," often will look at you,—stare at you, draw you by her eyes out of your seat, and then coolly take it,—without so much as a look of thankfulness in return. She demands it as "a right,"—as a prerogative of her sex,—and don't thank you even for it, when the right is conceded.

It is rather important, then, for Lucy, and Antoinette, and Frau Ernestine,—the three Graces of eloquence peripatetic, just now, to settle in some of their convocations,—whether or not,—we, men, are "equal" with their sex. If we are,—we won't budge a bit,—when they want a seat, not a bit,—but will stick to "Fraternity," and "Equality" to the death. Petticoats under such a rule shall be nothing more to us than trowsers. All must get seats where they can, and as they can, Vive la Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite.—[N. Y. Evening Express.

Turkish and American Society.

This party was no other than the ladies of a harem. . . . They were thirteen in number, just a baker's dozen, and belonged to a pacha who was making his annual tour of the different posts under his government, and had sent them on before to have the household matters all arranged upon his arrival. And no doubt, also, they were to be in readiness to receive him with their smiles; and if they continued in the same humor in which I saw them, he must have been a happy man who could call them all his own. I had not fairly recovered from the cries of the poor camel, when I heard their merry voices. Verily, thought I, stopping to catch the last musical notes, there are exceedingly good points about the Turks: chibouks, coffee, and as many wives as they please. It made me whistle to think of it. Oh, thought I, that some of our ladies could see these things; that some haughty beauty, at whose feet dozens of worthy and amiable young gentlemen are sighing themselves into premature wrinkles and ugliness, might see these things! I am no rash innovator. I would not sweep away the established customs of our state of society. I would not lay my meddling fingers upon the admitted prerogatives of our ladies; but I cannot help asking myself if, in the rapid changes of this turning world, changes which completely alter rocks and the hardest substances of nature, it may not by possibility happen, that the tenor of lady's humor will change. What a goodly spectacle to see those who are never content without a dozen admirers in their train, following by dozens in the train of one man! But I fear me much, that this will never be, at least in our days. Our system of education is radically wrong. The human mind, says some philosopher, and the gentleman is right, is like the sand upon the shore of the sea. You may write upon it what character you please. We begin by writing upon their innocent unformed minds, that, "born for their use, we live but to oblige them." The consequence is, I will not say what; for I hope to return among them, and kiss the rod in some fair hand; but this I do know, that here the "twig is so bent" that they become as gentle, as docile, and as tractable as any domestic animal. I say again, there are many exceeding good points about the Turks.—[Stephen's Incidents of Travel.

Level of the Two Oceans.

The popular notion which has so long prevailed that the Atlantic Ocean was many feet higher than the Pacific at the Isthmus of Panama, has been formraly exploded. For a long period of years the alleged discrepancy in height was generally believed. It was variously estimated at from fifteen to twenty-five feet; and whenever the idea of a canal across the neck of land which separates the two oceans was made the subject of discussion, we were treated to grave and learned speculations upon the effect of a sufficient quantity of water passing from the Atlantic into the Pacific to bring them to the same level. One scientific writer, we remember, maintained that the Gulf of Mexico would be lowered sufficiently to drain the swamp lands bordering on the Lower Mississippi, and thus improve the sanitary condition of New Orleans. But hopes of that kind can no longer be cherished. Col. Totten has decided, after a series of careful tidal observations taken at Panama and in Aspinwall Bay, and connected by accurate levels along the line of railroad, that the mean height of the two oceans is exactly the same, although, owing to the difference in the rise of tide of both places, there are, of course, times when one of the oceans is higher or lower than the other; but their mean level, that is to say, their height at half tide, is now proved to be exactly the same. —[Buffalo Commercial.

Standing up for his Rights.—"Has a man," asked a prisoner of a magistrate, "any right to commit a nuisance."

"No, sir; not even the Mayor."

"Then, sir, I claim my liberty. I was arrested as a nuisance, and no one has a right to commit me. I move for a non-suit!"

A Cholera Patient Buried Alive

On the Mississippi.

A special correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, at Bolivia, Mississippi, writing under date of July 13th, says: I learn that there is considerable sickness on the river now, the boats often stopping to bury their dead. I was informed by a physician that seven were put off on Tuesday last at Napoleon. Our country continues healthy. I heard a good story the other day. It is tough, but my informant vouches for the truth of it. On the steamer ——, on her last trip, there were many cases of cholera—many died and were buried. At length, all the coffin plank was used up, and the carpenter was compelled to make his boxes out of old flatboat plank. At sundown another case died—a deck passenger. He was thrust into the box and the top loosely nailed on. The captain ran into a woodyard, and not liking to stop to bury the body, bargained with the owner of the yard, an acquaintance, to do it for him. The box was left under the bank, alone, until morning, when the wood merchant promised to hide it. In the morning he sent two of his negroes down to dig a hole, when they came back, their eyes dilated with horror, and their wool standing on end, swearing that the dead fellow was thumping and knocking to get out. The master went down and a strange sight presented itself. The corpse had revived, and finding itself in rather close quarters, exerted itself and burst the slight fastenings, thus releasing itself. The man was soon well, and is now chopping wood at the place. The boat has landed there since, but although the resurrected will come to the landing and talk with the officers, no persuasion can induce him to go on board. He is fearful of being served another trick.

A writer in the Richmond Christian Advocate went to hear Theodore Parker at the Musical Hall in Boston. He says:

"After the psalm was ended, Mr. Parker offered a deeply impressive and eloquent prayer to the Great God, in which there was not the slightest reference to a Mediator. He called God 'our father and our mother;' and the strain of thanksgiving for mercies temporal was unsurpassed by any thing we have ever heard. His discourse was an Independence Discourse. He announced no text. His theme was "America and her Opportunities." It was marked by great originality; and many passages in that discourse would compare most favorably with the finest things in the annals of oratory. There was nothing flippant—no attempt at display; but his whole manner was marked by the greatest solemnity, gravity, and earnestness. His feelings were frequently excited—tears came to his eyes, and his voice trembled with deep, unaffected emotion. But who ever heard such ideas! He thanked God that in Boston all religions, and creeds, and sects were tolerated. He thanked God that a club of Atheists could assemble and enjoy the rights of conscience, and none dare molest them. He thanked God that there was a Mormon temple in Boston."

[Pray who built it, Mr. Parker!—Ed.]

The writer concludes by saying that Theodore Parker is doing "immense mischief," but that he is a very different sort of a man from what he had been led to expect.

The Ice Trade.—According to the August number of Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, the first cargo of ice exported from this country was shipped from Boston in 1805, by Frederick Tudor, Esq. It was shipped to the West Indies, but, owing to various circumstances, the investment did not prove successful. It was not until 1834 that Mr. Tudor commenced realising a profit from this business. In 1832 this gentlemen, then the only person engaged in the business, shipped from Boston 4,352 tons. Last year there were sent from there 133,340 tons. The ice crop in the vicinity amounts to 285,000 tons.

To Pickle Eggs.—The mode in which the English farmers' wives pickle eggs is simply this: They are first boiled in a saucepan until they become quite hard.—They after removing the shell, lay them carefully in large monthed jars, and pour over them scalding vinegar, well seasoned with whole pepper, allspice, a few races of ginger, a few cloves or garlic. When cold they are bunged down close, and in a month are fit for use. As an accompaniment to cold meat they are unrivaled, and the late Emperor Nicholas, it is said never took his luncheon without them.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 1, 1855.

Foreign Influence.

AFTER travelling across the continent, and viewing the immense extent of our Country, stretching far off to the Rocky Mountains, and thence to the shores of the Pacific Ocean, and returning to the States, one cannot but be astonished at hearing so much unfounded fear, expressed by many, in regard to foreign influence; as though individual peculiarities, or national prejudices could outweigh the influence of enlarged and improved circumstances, with the well conducted, and free institutions of a new country, and we are forced to conclude, that "away down East" here, they are not altogether well posted up in relation to that far distant Western world.

It is very little thought of or realized in our crowded cities, that there are thousands of miles of unsettled lands with undeveloped resources sufficient to sustain the population of all Europe, and still leave abundant space to crowd in Asia, with yet room enough left for all farming or other useful purposes.

These immense resources themselves, if understood would be a rebuke to those who are endeavoring to narrow down, to their own contracted minds the broad and comprehensive views of the framers of the Constitution; for, when they threw the banner to the breeze, they intended it should waft over unlimited territory, and cover nations with its broad folds. They also provided for every improvement, by leaving the way freely open to the oppressed of every land to breathe an atmosphere of Liberty. While other nations have trampled down and extinguished the spark of divinity, that ought to burn in the bosom of every man; with us the broad portals of the "Goddess" should ever remain open, to the free exercise of the high abilities God has bestowed upon the human race.

Why should the mere local difficulties, necessarily arising from the temporarily overcrowded state of a part of our Country, lead us to forget there is yet an abundance of room? Why not turn our attention to the best mode of transfering this surplus population, to wider fields of enterprize, with sufficient room for the exercise of their pent up energies; and then we should no longer be jostled out of the remembrance, that but yesterday, we were all foreigners; when the necessity, would no longer exist, for secret oaths and Know Nothing organizations, to hurry us into enacting laws, to obviate local difficulties, and thus yoke ourselves and our posterity with evils we now little dream of. Let the people remember that while some are frightened by the phantom of dilapidated Popedom, or some other fearful chimera of the brain, with a selfish niggardly hand, we are refusing to others, the rights, which once guaranteed to us, constitutes our prosperity and present existence, among nations. We cannot therefore consistently close the door and bar the way to foreign emigration, while there are thousands upon thousands of miles of unoccupied land, and, where millions of untold wealth lay buried, only to be developed by the untrammeled energies of the Caucasian race, without materially retarding our growth, prosperity and power, as a nation; and nothing more treasonable to constitutional rights or the prosperity of the country, can be attempted by any party or clique, than to hedge up the way to foreign emigration; no surer way can be found to dry up our resources, cripple the enterprize and paralize the energies of a free people.

To stop the influx of a foreign population, we not only lose the wealth they bring with them, which is considerable, but we leave a long line of border settlements on the East and West to be protected at National expense, that otherwise, being settled by them, would protect themselves. We leave large tracts of barren wastes, that otherwise might be covered with cities, towns villages and fruitful fields, teeming with life, energy and industry, bringing to light its mineral and all its geological treasures, giving value to that which is now worthless, and pouring wealth into our National Treasury; making what now costs the Government a heavy annual outlay, a source of large and continued income. If these immense internal resources were cut off, what substitute can be offered to supply the rapidly increasing demand for revenue, to sustain, protect, govern and defend ourselves over so vast an extent of territory, as is now included in the United States. Foreign emigration, not only assists in filling this vacuum, but it also adds largely to the value of property already invested, making an increased home market for the various productions of the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, thus leaving us less dependent upon foreign markets, placing exchanges much in our favor, and leaving the gold in our own pockets.

Let every true American rest satisfied, that there is virtue enough in our institutions, if administered by men who have the interest of their country at heart, to save us from danger of foreign influence or foreign power. And it would be far better to look to the election of upright men to office, and the suppression of intrigue and corruption at home, than to listen to the pratings of selfish demagogues, whose only aim is party spoils.

The Value of Christianity.

WHO can doubt that Christianity to be properly appreciated, must be properly understood; and who can doubt that if it is of any value at all, the knowledge of it is of the most vital importance to the human race, inasmuch as it relates to their future destiny, and assumes to point out the way of life and salvation; or in other words, teaches a person how to obtain the power, to live forever.

Now if this assumption be false, then the whole fabric is false, and not worthy of the attention of any one; if it is, on the other hand true that Christianity points the way to life and immortality, then indeed, what subject can possibly be of more importance to man?

That Christianty is true, is admitted by a large share of what is termed Christedom, or, as generally understood the most enlightened portion of the world. This admission is endorsed by the immense expenditure annually devoted to its propagation with the endowment and paraphernalia of innumerable splendid edifices, said to be for the worship of God, all of which seems to prove their belief in its value and truth; or it proves too much, that is, that those who frequent these places of worship are hypocrites, one of these conclusions we are forced to adopt, but we prefer the former and believe a large share to be sincere believers in the christian religion. It is then, really a matter of extreme surprise, in consideration of the importance of true religion, and aside from a certain outward show, that we observe, comparitively so few, who after embracing, ever give religion that same close attention, usually bestowed upon there secular affairs. Indeed any one venturing beyond the limits of faith set by—not the scriptures, nor even their own convictions,—but by polite society, would be branded with fanaticism. There are many, very many pious professors, aye! preachers too, who bow their necks to its despotic sway, and in violence to their own convictions of right, follow in the popular current, and allow the world to qualify the scriptures, adulterate the word of God by their precepts, and dictate to the Almighty the terms of salvation, thus living the life of a polite christian, with no better hope or knowledge of immortality, or the resurrection of the dead, than shrew'd commentators or the wisdom of this world can give them. Whatever importance however there may be attached to Christianty, it is unquestionably drawn from the Bible, the only work extant that legitimately treats upon it as a whole, and takes up all its connections with the past, present and future, the creator of the Universe, and the created, their duty to Him, and points to the way by which to obtain eternal life; all of which is included in the term Christianity. We should therefore refer to the Scriptures of Divine Truth as we would to the written works, upon science, art, or any other subject of interest to mankind, with the presumption that they were given to be understood, and written to be believed in. How strange then it is, that a work of so great importance, is so little known and understood by the mass of those professing to believe in it. If it contained the art of becoming suddenly rich—pointed out the way to affluence and wealth, how well dusted every cover, how well thumb'd and worn every leaf, how assiduously every page and line would be perused, with what accuracy, perseverance and faith, would we follow every precept and direction given, what sufferings and martyrdom would be endured and impossibilities overcome to carry out its principles, and obtain the fleeting, insubstantial power of wealth. Oh! consistency! The Bible only relates to eternal life. Yet even with but a nominal importance attached to it, it is to be wondered at that its "Teachers" should say of its precepts and ordinances, "they are non-essential"—and who among them dare believe the words of the Saviour:

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do because I go to my Father."

Indeed, to whom do they dare teach some of its plainest assertions:

"These signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Aye, it would be thought by some folly to preach, and fanaticism to believe, still the Bible is the basis of the Christianity of the present day, and many there are who yet value it as the word of God, and if it was a work upon the usual science, arts, or philosophy of the day, it would be classified literally, and made tangible to almost every school boy, and if the Bible, the very foundation of their belief is of such importance; why not that? Notwithstanding the present age is one marked by rapid advancement in science and art, yet Christianity, the principles or science of life is not thought to be susceptable of being classified, or of sufficient tangibility to be understood literally, nor definitely or positively applied, so as to produce results, commensurate with a subject so great importance, and worthy of its great designer, God. It may be said that Christianity has done much for the enlightenment of the world, and in tampering and modifying the harsher features of man's character.

This is no doubt true, and one reason why it may do more in advancing him to a still higher sphere—why not follow it up, until results are obtained, such as it professes to give? It says that Life and Immortality is brought to light by the Gospel, and those pretending to have obtained its benefits, say, it assures them of its truth. Is the assurance they receive more than that given by Socrates, Plato and many other so called heathen Philosophers? If so, why do they not demonstrate it? But no, they have but the assurance of those who studied well the principles, and practically demonstrated the fact for themselves, but not for another. As before remarked, it is admitted that all that relates to Christianity has been gathered from the Bible, as the revealed will of God, to man. Yet the doctrines there laid down, are not strictly adhered to, indeed some of its plainest principles, evidently intended as initiatory, are openly repudiated by many who pretend to teach, and considered by them as non-essentials, in addition to which there is also a large share of the Scriptures revealed, said to be mysteries not to be understood by man. Now such kind of reasoning would be counted inconsistent upon any other than religious or theological subjects, for every other interest is thoroughly canvassed, particulars noted, and every part experimented upon until the fruits are produced and the true results obtained. But not so the Bible—if you are anxious to obtain a knowledge of Eternal Life, not only the fact of the existance of life and immortality, but distinctly the course you should pursue to obtain and secure to yourself such an inestimable blessing, you are told, by those you think ought to know, that it is among the mysteries, and not for mortals to understand. Now it might be presumed, that if it was ever known by man, upon the earth, it might be known again. But if that knowledge is obtained by any one, in the present age, it must be gained through the same process by which they obtained it in former ages. Hence the strictest attention should be paid to the rules laid down in the Scriptures. The Saviour, in sending forth his disciples to preach, says to them, (Matthew, 28th chap., 20th verse,) "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." It is not then unreasonable to suppose, that short of the closest adherence to those rules, we should fail in reaching so high an attainment as a living practical knowledge of Eternal life. For far less attainments in science are only gained by a thorough knowledge of and strict adherence to its first principles. Thus, it may fairly be presumed, that Christians have been led into error, discord and contentions, by a departure from these first principles of the Gospel, and lost sight of the importance of a living priesthood, endowed by direct revelation from heaven to administer in its ordinances, which by referring to the Scriptures any one can perceive was a very essential part of the order of God upon the Earth. Christianity is therefore left in their contentions, far behind every other science of the present day, in its order, system, consistency and advancement in the great object for which the Gospel was given. Most of the above considerations have been overlooked, more particularly in the present age, and we are informed by talented men that all that is necessary for the enquirer, to be saved, is, to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, not making it necessary to know what we should believe about him, nor remembering that even "Devils believe and tremble," and yet they are not saved. In fact, the Christian religion is made to consist of merely a certain set or kind of feelings rather than any attempt at learning, and doing something worthy of so great a cause, or pursuing a course of attainments by which we may come to a true knowledge of God. In addition to laws, ordinances, Apostles, Prophets, &c., so important and distinctly referred to in the Bible, there is a large portion of the Scriptures containing prophecies relating to a great work to be accomplished in the last days, not consisting in mere feelings, but bold, positive, active operations, in which are included laws, ordinances, Apostles, Prophets, governments, temples, cities, nations, tribes and kingdoms; yes, even a place actually located, a house actually to be reared in which instructions may be given upon the great plan of the world's redemption. For it says, (Isaiah, 2nd chap.:)

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all NATIONS shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord; to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths."

Showing that there were principles to be understood of sufficient importance to lead all Nations to go to specific localities to learn. For this purpose are Temples to be built—not precisely after the present order of Theological Schools, but after an order revealed from Heaven, and properly adapted to teaching the extended comprehensive and soul absorbing science of Eternal Life. Now who cannot see, if this prophecy of both Isaiah and Malachi be true, the necessity of some people being actively engaged preparatory to the fulfillment of the prediction, and how can any one know who are the favored ones, to carry them out and prepare for the assemblage of so great a concourse as the gathering of the nations. If they do not have, and believe in, modern revelation? Thus then we are forced to conclude, that when God has a people upon the earth to carry out his purposes, that people must not only believe literally in the revelations of former days, but believe in and actually receive revelations for themselves. Therefore either sect or party who neither believe in the literal fulfillment of the written word, nor the necessity of present revelation, are not God's people, nor have they the "Holy Ghost," for the attribute of that Spirit is to "take of the things of the Father and show them unto you, and teach you things to come."

There is another conclusion into which we are irresistably drawn in reading the Bible, that is, that true Christianity, according to the interpretation put upon it by its founders, must be the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; that which was needed to perfect the saints then is needed now, that order needed to bring them to a knowledge of Christ then is needed now. If Christ gave to some Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers, for the perfecting of the Saints, the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the son of God unto a perfect man, &c." The same gifts and organization is necessary now if ever they were upon the face of the earth, to gather together the honest in heart under one banner—one Lord—one faith, and one baptism, and unite the now divided contending factions of misnamed Christendom,

"For a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand." By these words of the founder of Christianity we are assured, the seeds of dissolution have long been germinating among those who assume to be the followers of Christ; and nothing short of a new covenant, a new dispensation can save the earth from the curse.

"For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev., vi. chap., 17th verse.

The Mirror Again.

WE see from a short article published in the Mirror, that it feels a little sore, and puts on quite a threatening attitude. Now we wish to inform the editor of that paper, in brief, that we are as independent of him or of his opinions as he can be of ours. We wish no personal difficulty with anyone, much less do we wish to interfere with their private affairs: but you can't spell coward in our name; we cannot be bullied; and when men gratuitously calumniate and misrepresent, they will always find us at home. Why did you not call your meeting at the Tabernacle that you talked so fiercely about, to investigate the horrors of Mormonism? Were you afraid that you would meet with us there? Remember the old adage, "Let them that live in glass houses," &c.

We are here to vindicate the rights of an injured, oppressed, and calumniated people; and whensoever, or by whomsoever they are defamed, we stand ready to hurl their base fabrications back into their teeth. If men suppose they can publish falsehoods about us with impunity, and think to intimidate us from replying by their threats, we wish to inform them they have waked up the wrong passenger.

Mail! Mail!! Mail!!!

WE are just now in the receipt of the Utah mail of June to 1st of July, over due at least three weeks, not only so with this mail but the mails of April and May were brought to the States at one time, quite a convenient mode; would it not be a good idea to adopt the plan so successful for the last year or more in the valley, that is by a good substantial ox trains and take the mail once a year. It would be a very great convenience to Mr. McGraw and economise on the last appropriation of $36,000. The gentleman certainly must have kinds friends it. Washington to overlook his "faux pas." Or do they share the profits? Now like most of the Mormons we are inclined to be very passive and non-belligerent, but when we are continually receiving letter after letter, complaining of repeated failures in receiving our letters and papers and refering to numberless letters we ought to have received it is too bad, and really raises the dander.

Our agent in Utah says, "You will probably loose some three thousand subscribers in Salt Lake City, from the irregularities of the mail, for very few are willing to invest in anything they are so uncertain of getting, it is the same with all the Eastern publications, there are thousands of dollars subscribed here for publications they never receive. Why don't the editors and publishers stir them up with a long pole in Washington."

If this is the case with one city what would it be over the Territory. Another says, "We have been fortunate enough in getting three or four numbers of your valuable paper, but they were via California, for no dependence can be placed upon the Eastern mail."

Can it be possible that the department at Washington are aware of such culpable neglect on the part of the contractors, and wink at or sanction it? Is it possible that an extra appropriation of thirty-six thousand dollars can be made by Congress, and no notice taken of failures occurring almost every month.

These hatched up stories of Indian difficulties, is all sham and too ridiculous to be any longer forced upon a credulous public. There never has been a time since California gold was first discovered that the route has been so free of Indians or the mountains of snow than last winter and spring, and never has the mail transportation been so wretchedly conducted as since the appropriation of thirty-six thousand dollars to supply the deficits of Mr. McGraw. What does it mean, will the knowing ones at Washington please explain? A population of 60,000 people besides the Eastern portion of California, Oregon and Washington Territory, and only a mail once in two or three months.

It is too bad gentlemen, and we shall be forced to the inquiry of who appropriates the public funds. Those that are interested in this matter had better see to it or they will have a whirlwind about their ears before they think of it, for there are many thousands who are interested in the States as well as in Utah, who think they have been bamboozled long enough and are determined they will not put up with it any longer.

CALIFORNIA.—There has been a terrible earthquake at San Angelos. Nearly every house was deserted by the terrified occupants.

Utah.

OUR news from Utah is not of the most promising kind, what with grasshoppers, bugs and crickets there seems to be any amount of devourers. In some places they have planted three, and even four times, and as frequently their labors have been destroyed by the devourer. Their attempts to raise grain have in many instances been entirely futile; we did fear at one time, that there would be a scarcity of bread. From carefully looking over the details, as given from the papers and various communications that we have read, we think, however, there is no present danger; and unless some of these young grasshoppers referred to, should speedily commence to devour, or a fresh influx arrive from the mountains, we are inclined to think that although there will be no surpluss of provisions, there will with care and economy be enough to sustain the inhabitants; perhaps however horses and cattle may have to go without grain. We hear from some districts in Salt Lake that the fall wheat, barley and some other things have been harvested, that peas, beans, potatoes, and other vegetables are doing well; whilst in others every thing is destroyed, upon the whole with care we think they will not suffer, and we know of no people so well adapted to sustain themselves under trying circumstances.

Death of Hon. Leonidas Shaver.

THE last mail brings us a "Deseret News" Extra, clothed in mourning for the death of Judge Shaver, who was found dead in his bed on the 29th of June. A coroner's inquest was held over his body and a verdict rendered of death by disease in the head. His funeral was numerously attended and an address given by Orson Pratt. We will give more particulars next week.

Mississippi and Missouri Railway.

THE Nebraskian says, a meeting of the stockholders of the above-named road was held at Davenport, Iowa, on the 7th of August; and a President, Vice-President, and Treasurer were re-elected. It was agreed to hasten the completion of the road as fast as possible. The iron is purchased, and grading done from Davenport to Iowa city, and a contract for the work from thence to Des Moines will be made this season, the road having been already located. It is expected soon to extend it to Council Bluffs city. The distance from Davenport to Council Bluffs is about three hundred and ten miles. We are happy to see this road progressing, as it will tend much to facilitate the travel of our Utah as well as other trans-Rocky Mountain immigration.

The Foreign News.

SINCE our last issue we are in receipt of tidings from every part of the globe. Not the remotest nook nor cranny but seems to have sent forth its say. The king of the Sandwich Islands has been delivered of a speech; we have heard with our own ears the imperialists and rebels of China at their quarrels; Sir John Bowring, the British envoy, has written from Siam, telling of its wealth, the polished manners of its people, their multiplicity of gold and silver, and their intention to be not behind anybody in having ambassadors at European courts.

For on a throne of royal state, which far
Outshines the wealth of Ormus or the Ind, we have heard of a case of constipation of the bowels, and of one more thriving infant, and would as readily announce that the allied squadron have successfully bombarded the fortifications of the Amoor river, but that we remember the fate of the famous but dire portent: Sebastopol est prise. The world is getting to fighting, and it is well nigh impossible for any nation to "keep cool."

Australia.

THE Legislative Council opened on the 5th. Sir William Dennison, the new Governor General, appears to be very popular.

Heavy rains have fallen in many parts of the colony lately.

A stream of emigration seems at length to have set in towards New South Wales; and though the increase to the population in some cases has had the effect of reducing wages, and has thus caused a depression among some classes of workmen, there is no reason to doubt the capabilities and resources of the colony for the reception and maintenance of any number, however large, of industrious persons who may come to its shores. At the same time intending immigrants are warned not to allow their imagination to hope impossibilities as easy of realization.

Flight of Santa Anna.

RECENT telegraphic dispatches from New Orleans, inform us that Santa Anna has abdicated the dictatorship of Mexico, and fled to Havana just in time to save his neck from the revolutionists under Alvarez. Go it Santa Anna wooden legs are cheap and Mexico you know must perform her periodical revolutions without regard to men of consequence or real worth.

PETROPOLOWSKI.—In the early part of last May, the Allied fleet, augmented by the arrival of other vessels of war, appeared before the devoted town and commenced preparations for the attack. When they approached sufficiently near to be able to discern objects on the shore, they were greatly surprised to find that the American flag had been substituted for the Russian, and that a most extraordinary stillness reigned around. On landing they found that the town had been deserted. They then proceeded to destroy the arsenals, magazines, and other public buildings.

FOR THE MORMON.

Plurality of Wives.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

REPLY TO MR. ABRAHAM SMITH'S LETTER.

IN perusing the Scriptures still farther, we find Jacob, a man blessed of the Almighty with visions, and the ministering of angels, having a plurality of wives. And in endeavoring to ascertain the will of God concerning it, we find it nowhere expressed against it, but, on the other hand, learn from what one of the wives says on the subject, that it was according to His will, and that she was blessed of Him for giving her husband another wife. See Genesis, chap. xxx. verse 18, as follows: "And Leah said, God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband, and she called his name Issachar."

The context shows that Leah had already ceased to bear children, after having had four sons. She then gave her maiden Zilpah to Jacob (who bore him children also,) after which she (Leah) gave birth to the fifth son, and declares, in the passage quoted, that the cause of so great a blessing from the Lord was, that she had given her husband another wife. Whether it was for the increase of Jacob's posterity, or for Zilpah's benefit, that she might be blessed with offspring, we are not informed; but judging from what David says on this principle in his 127th Psalm, 3d, 4th and 5th verses, I conclude it was both. It reads thus, "Lo children are an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward; As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, so are children of the youth; happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them; they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate."

The Almighty has never expressed dissatisfaction at the increase of the offspring of righteous men and women, but on the contrary, has encouraged such increase. Hence, he gave to David, a man after "his own heart," a plurality of wives; but after David transgressed, in cohabiting with another man's wife, and added sin to sin, in that he became guilty of the innocent blood of Uriah, the Lord was displeased, and declared he would take his wives from him and give them to his neighbor. See 2 Samuel, chap. xi. xii. The institution of marriage is recognized in scripture as a sacred ordinance; and although it does not restrict men in the number of wives they shall marry, it is severe on the adulterer or adultress, whom it punishes with death. David, after he had committed adultery with Uriah's wife, was worthy of death according to the then law, but according to the mercy of the Lord through the prophet Nathan, the penalty in this case was revoked. See 2 Samuel, chap. xii. ver. 13, as follows: "And David said unto Nathan I have sinned against the Lord, and Nathan said unto David the Lord also hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die." Why the penalty of the law was not executed in the case of David's transgression is best known to the Almighty, whose prerogative to cancel as above I presume none will dispute.

This instance of the Lord's anger being kindled towards David, some have undertakan to show, was because of his taking another wife; but a careful perusal of the whole affair will not furnish a single idea of the kind, but on the contrary, show that it was according to the will of the Lord for him to have a plurality of wives, from the fact that He gave him the wives of Saul when he already had a number. If it had been contrary to his will, instead of giving him more, he would have taken from him those he had, or as monogamists would have it, reduced them to one.

We have now presented the examples of three acknowledged men of God, holding a plurality of wives in accordance with the "will of God as taught in the Bible!" Were these not sufficient, we could swell the list by adding that of Moses, Gideon, Solomon, Josah and a host of others who practised the same things, under the same divine sanction.

But we deem the above sufficient, and more than is called for in answering the question before us. Some people, owing to their tradition under monogamic law, entertain the idea that the Scriptures sustain monogamy, and condemn Poligamy; but I am satisfied that a more careful examination, with prejudice laid aside, will show Poligamy to be a divine institution, and the one wife restriction or monogamic law nowhere recognized. The monogamist will have to go to the history of the heathen nations for the origin of his institution; and if he considers it a blessing, he may thank the Roman Power for its introduction into the Christian Church, as one among many of the inovations introduced by that Power, which have finally become characteristics of the modern Christian religion. Paul had a foreboding of these things in his day, and told Timothy of them, and one of them he said would be "forbidding to marry." The monogamy and celibacy of the present day show Paul to be a prophet, by fulfilling his words.

But have any of the prophets ever seen a time yet future, when men shall again have a plurality of wives? Yes! Isaiah in his iv chap., 1st verse, has plainly predicted that such shall be again. It reads as follows; "And in that day seven women shall lay hold of one man, saying, we will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." To show that the fulfilment of this prediction is yet future, read the two next verses, as follows: "In that day, shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel, and it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem."

Well, says the monogamist, if the women are going to do the courting, and then support themselves, I don't know but I will submit, rather than to be thought ungallant. But you need not give yourself any uneasiness about that; women are not going to throw themselves away by uniting with a man whose principles are governed by dollars and cents. In fact, I doubt whether a man with a soul so "little" as to be circumscribed by gold, will be able in those times to obtain a wife on any condition. The precedents we have named in the practice of plurality of wives, show that those who obtained a number of wives, were men of talent and ability; and were favorites with the Almighty as well as with the women. If the same order obtains again, which we have shown by Isaiah will be the case, talented women will neither be the first or seventh wife of a man inferior in those qualities to herself, as hundreds are obliged to at the present day, for the want of a better chance. In fact, there are many men that now occupy the position, or rather bear the name of husband, that are controlled by their wives, not from a particular desire on the part of the wife to rule, but a lack of ability in the husband. Such a position is unnatural to her, it being contrary to the order of heaven, and she is never satisfied with it. Monogamic law, compelling "Hopkins' choice," that or none is the cause of this, as already shown, while poligamy gives the woman the man of her choice, and that choice is in behalf of one who is capable of governing her and her offspring, though he may have other wives beside.

These are facts that I have already had the privilege of seeing demonstrated in a community of polygamists. In fact, the greatest recommendation that a man can have in that community, in order to obtain more wives, is to have at least one, and a number of children, under a well regulated policy. There is but little opportunity to know what kind of a husband or father a man will make, until he occupies that position; hence, those who first engage to a young man, untried, run the greatest risk of getting deceived in the qualifications of their husband; and it is with no little reluctance that they make such a choice. And it oftener happens that dissatisfaction occurs after marriage under such circumstances than any other.

But again "to the law and the testimony." Paul says in Galatians iii. 29: "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

The christian world profess to be Christ's, which makes them the seed or children of Abraham, according to Paul. Jesus says, according to the testimony of John viii. 39: "If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham." Christians, then, that are such, will do the works of Abraham, if Paul and Jesus have not made a miscalculation.

Do the so-called christian world do the works of Abraham? No. They neither do it themselves, nor suffer others to do it; they condemn, in the flattest terms, the works of Abraham. They say of those who do the works of Abraham, that they are adulterers and wicked—not fit for christian society. Oh! ye foolish Gentiles, "who hath bewitched you?" You have turned things upside down—you have called bitter sweet and sweet bitter. "You have changed the ordinances and broken the everlasting covenant." You proscribe a man in his rights under the law of God, and drive him to desperation and all manner of iniquity, by your perversions. You condemn the order of heaven, and connive at iniquity, debauchery, and obscenity, occasioned by your proscriptive course. Verily "you strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

Yes, but says the monogamic christian, we do those works of Abraham that are good, and the balance we condemn. Who, I ask, made you the judges of Abraham's works, to say which is good and which is bad? Do you, in the person of the Pope, "sit in the temple of God showing that you are God," and by this prerogative judge the works of father Abraham? It is true you have protested against your venerable old mother, but you are her offspring, and you have inherited your monogamic institutions from her; and it is true you have allowed her to go a little farther than yourselves, and forbid to marry even one wife, but you are of the same stock; and you venerate many of her absurd perversions of the order of heaven. But I forbear—the truth is not to be told at all times; and especially these times, "'tis so unpopular." However, "what is written is written," and Mr. Smith and his friends can chew it over at their leisure. But, in conclusion, there is one thing I insist on, and I am quite sanguine in the claim—that is, how Mr. Smith, or any other monogamist, can prove monogamy, or the restriction to one wife, to be "according to the will of God as taught in the Bible!"

CIVIL WAR IN KANSAS—seems to be brewing,—organized civil war—the natural result of tumbling people together, under an unnatural excitement, to settle the question of slavery or anti-slavery. The Free State people, naturally enough, are arming themselves, to protect themselves from the atrocious laws of the Kansas so-called Legislature.

If the Kansas Herald, Free State paper, be right, the Free State people must in the end carry the day, or at least make slave property so valueless,—that slaves cannot be safely carried there. The Editor says:

"The tide of Pro-Slavery emigration toward Kansas has begun to ebb, and at this time the Slave State emigration is larger from Kansas to Missouri than vice versa. It is a notorious fact that there is not an election to-day but would poll three votes of the actual voters, in such a district, for Freedom, to one for Slavery."

The day for voting, however, seems to be about over,—and the action of the Federal Government alone, now, is likely to save the Territory from civil war.—[N. Y. Express.

Correspondence.

From Our Utah Correspondent.

Great Salt Lake City, }
June 20th, 1855. }

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Sir: The grasshoppers are still continuing their ravages throughout the Territory; young broods of them continually hatching out on every bench. Large crickets are also making their appearance, and the sound of the locusts is continually in the ears of the husbandmen.

The weather has been oppressively hot, and until the 28th inst., there has been no rain of any amount; so that the drouth was uncommonly great, and the streams very low. There is not as much snow on the mountains now, as there was last August, and the common house flies are as thick as they were in August and September. On the 28th the weather turned a little cooler, and there was a refreshing shower in Davis County, and a little rain in this.

The grain is all destroyed at Parowan and Paragoona; they are fencing the public square at Parowan, and planting it with potatoes, men, women, children, geese, ducks and chickens all conspiring to try and raise something. Some of the brethren, because of the water failing at Parowan, have gone to the Rio Virgin to plant corn, and a number of hands have gone lumbering for the Iron Works. They have also organized a company to go and fish at Pan-gwitch Lake, at the head of the Sevier River, where there is beautiful trout in great abundance.

At Cedar City the brethren are quite busy casting machinery for the Iron Works.

At Fillmore the wheat is entirely destroyed, Chalk Creek being very low. The finishing of the State House is progressing rapidly.

The fields in Juab County present the appearance of a desert.

About two-thirds of the grain in Utah County is destroyed, and a large black bug is devouring the potatoes.

All the farms south of this city are nearly a desert; the northern Counties and Tooele have fared considerably better, but within the last few days the latter have had a visit from the enemy, and the result is, the wheat stalks have lost their heads; and moreover, as the farms have been located on small streams, a large quantity of wheat is being burnt up for the want of water. This is rather a dark picture, but I regret to say it is not overdrawn. Myriads of grasshoppers, like snow flakes in a storm, occasionally fill the air over this city as far as the eye can reach, and they are liable to alight wherever they can distinguish good feed. A great portion of them, however, alight in the Great Salt Lake, which appears green at a distance, and the shore is lined with their dead, from one inch to two feet thick, and which smell exactly like fish.

Wherever there is a chance for water the brethren are still planting corn.

Elder Ezra T. Benson has got the frame up for a large flouring mill at Richville in Tooele.

We have heard from Elder Hyde at Hawes' Ranche, en route for Carson Valley, and he is getting on well.

The Indians are very quiet, and are disposed to learn to raise grain. Wa-she-kik has sent a request to Gov. Young to select him a farm on Green River, as he is unacquainted with farming. He is anxious to farm, as game is scarce.

I learn from Mr. Alpheus Hawes that there are two thousand Indians living in the neighborhood of his father's ranche who speak the Cheyenne (pronounced Shian) language. The overland emigration to California has scared away the game, so that they have to live on fish and reptiles. They are also anxious to learn to raise grain, &c.

The Court House in Davis county is enclosed, and the finishing progressing.

The G. S. L. County Court House has been contracted for by Judge Smith and the Selectmen. It is building on a very beautiful site in the Fourteenth ward, and is to cost about twenty thousand dollars. The Music Hall, which is building by Capt. Ballo and his band, is under way, the foundation being ready for the adobe work.

The foundation of the Temple is now up to the height of eight feet, ready for the basement, and is assuming quite an imposing appearance. Above one-third of the coping is also on the wall around the block.

The basement of the Historian's Office is built, and ready for the Adobe work.

Loren Babbitt is building a new store on 1st South-street, west of East Temple-street, and Gilbert Clements has built a brush manufactory on East Temple-street.

Elijah Thomas and Edmund Pugh have entered into partnership, bought out Judge Kinney, and opened a store in the house formerly occupied by Holladay and Warner.

Governor Young and a select party have just returned from an excursion northward, and have succeeded in locating the boundary line between Utah and Oregon; and his Excellency intends shortly to take a similar trip north-eastward.

Preparations are being made on a grand scale for the celebration of the 4th of July in this city and other parts of the territory.

I am sorry to say there will be no beets this year and very few onions, the grasshoppers having eaten them as fast as they appeared above ground. The prospect, however, for fruit is very good.

I regret to inform you of the sudden and unexpected death of Judge Shaver, who retired to his rest late on the night of the 28th inst., but as well as usual. He locked his door, as had been his usual custom, and apparently went to sleep, in which position he was found lifeless on the 29th at 1 p.m., he having laid so long as to create anxiety on the part of the lady with whom he boarded, though he usually did not rise, or at all events come out of his room, till from 10 to 11 o'clock. His funeral was attended to-day by the Governor, the members of the bar, and a multitude of the principal citizens. A eulogy was delivered by Judge Kinney, and a funeral address by Prof. Orson Pratt. Major Burton's battalion of Life Guards escorted the procession to the grave on horseback, accompanied by the Nauvoo Brass Band, who played solemn music. He was universally respected, not only for his straightforward course but for his eminent legal attainments.

George A. Smith.

Salt Lake City, June 27, 1855.

Dear Father—Your letter of April 9th, came to hand on the 5th of June, and we have received the 7th No. of the Mormon, but the 6th No. is yet behind. We have also received the 4th No. of Harper's Magazine, which we find very interesting, only one No. of Musical World has yet come to hand. * * * *

About two weeks ago we had quite a high wind, which swept all the grasshoppers into Salt Lake, until the Lake and shores were perfectly covered with their dead, much to the joy of the farmers, who again commenced planting, some for the fourth time; but alas! a week since, the grasshoppers appeared again coming down in immense swarms from off the mountains, and ate off all that was left by the others. We have not been so much troubled by them, but down in all the lower part of the city and on all the low grounds, they have consumed almost everthing green. * * * The coal found in San Pete Kanyon, is said to be very good, they have already brought several loads to the city. The bishop sent to get three loads for the office, and as they started to return with the coal, the chief San Pete (of the San Pete band) with his Indians stopped them, and ordered the men to take it back, and said it was theirs, and we should not have any more without we paid for it; and said if the Governor would give them twenty fat oxen, twenty horses and some other things they might have it. He with his band have camped there and will allow no one to get the coal. The bishop sent up to the city to know what to do about it, but I have not heard what answer has been returned yet. There was a lump of coal, found by some boys after wood, in Emigration Kanyon, just above the Lime Kiln, and a company of men went up and are now digging, the prospect is good but they have not yet come to coal.

I have a piece of native brass presented me by a gentleman from Box Elder, it was found in Bear River Kanyon, I intend sending it on to you by the first opportunity.

The weather for some time has been extremely hot, and what little air we have, seems as though it had passed through a furnace.

Gov. Young, Professor Pratt, Carrington and others, are now on a visit to the North part of the Territory. Yours &c.,

Joseph Henry Felt.

Great Salt Lake City, June 28, 1855.

Dear Brother,—I wrote to you by the last California mail but suppose you have not received my letter, and send again.

The post officers, or masters, good Lord deliver them from justice! We can scarcely rely on getting one letter in a year by steadily writing, it is just like a lottery.

I find after settling here awhile that my general health is much imparied, I was in hopes the pure air of the mountains would have renovated my half murdered system but it has proved otherwise, well "whatever is is right" I suppose.

We have had rather strange times here this season; scarcely any snow last winter and not rain enough this Spring to moisten the ground; some of the wheat that was sown before Conference has not come up yet, and it is just as well; so far, all the spring wheat that did come up has been devoured by the grasshoppers; as far south as the Territory extends, the crops with few exceptions have been destroyed.

The fall wheat has escaped generally, that and the corn we have just planted, will have to supply our wants the ensuing season.

I think the soldiers would not fare so well this season as they did last, were they to pay us another visit. They, perhaps, will not come, as the subjects of Uncle Sam generally like to live pretty well. We consider that a little hunger is preferable to being polluted by such licentious visitors. By replanting, we are yet in hopes of raising sufficient to keep us from eating hides or digging thistle roots, as our potatoes look pretty well.

They are beginning to harvest the fall wheat, and we shall soon have some new-potatoes. Peas and beans are plentiful, but flour is very scarce, still it is not so dear as it has been; eight dollars per hundred is the most that has been asked for it, and it has generally been sold at six, but it is hard to find at that price. Our farmers found that the wheat was scarce as soon as the Gentile merchants did, and did not let them have it to speculate on, as they have done before, which was a blessing to the poor; the merchants used to sell flour at twenty-five dollars per hundred when not as scarce as it is now.

Potatoes are worth one dollar a bushel, but very scarce; wheat two dollars per bushel when it can be got; corn ditto; store goods, notwithstanding the great amount that was brought in last season, are almost sold out, a great many articles cannot be got at all.

* * * * * *

If the grass is as scarce on the plains as it is here this season it will be very hard for the emigration to get in, but there is not any going to California, which will give them a better chance.

We have had broken numbers of your paper up to the 7th. But, oh! the mails. By these you lose the sale of from two to three thousand copies in this place alone, besides what information we lose by not having them and other publications: it seems as though they thought we were common stock, and all our mail matter belonged to them; they have preached that doctrine about us and want to carry it into practice. Time and space will not allow me to continue further. Lovina joins me in love to you and all our friends in the east. Your affectionate Brother,

William Taylor.

Letter from Orson Spencer.

Mormon Grove, K. T., Aug. 4, 1855.

Dear Bro. Hart: This city of camps and saints is now nearly depopulated. These beautiful hills that a few days since were lighted up with the camp-fires of eight or ten hundred saints, (even since I came,) and since the first of June, with several thousands of glad hearted saints, are now comparatively vacated. The great herds of lowing cattle are now gone. The whips are now cracking to move the last lingering wagons of the last company of the season. A great work has been accomplished in fitting out with teams and provisions about three thousand saints. Imagine more than half the thousands of cattle, to be wild and unaccustomed to the yoke. and a much larger portion of the drivers as unacquainted with driving as their oxen are to the yoke, the labor of supervision becomes considerable.

A system of order in the distribution of provisions and cattle, and wagons and drivers, and conductors has been arranged mostly out of the raw materials, with all the precision that attends a regular army, and all without salary or pay. Some indeed have sunk under the accumulating circumstances, and their bodies now lie under the turf of the green prairie, until the resurrection morning. But the number is few out of the large multitude. But sympathy with surviving friends pays tribute to their graves as we linger where distant friends are even denied this melancholy office to the departed. Peace to their ashes and blessings upon the heads of absent mourners.

The camps are healthy and in good spirits. President Erastus Snow gave us the parting hand yesterday at four o'clock, p. m., in company with Elder C. H. Basset. They went in a light carriage drawn by four mules. The Mail Stage bearing Capt, Hooper and Kinkead left our grove the same hour for Salt Lake with two carriages—six mules to each carriage.

The whole company will probably reach Salt Lake about the same time. And while I am now writing, the Salt Lake mail due at Independence five or six days ago is passing in sight of us. Most gladly would we snatch some letters from their bags and learn some news from our dear friends and Zion.—But we have no such right. But we had just petitioned the General Postmaster to establish a postoffice in this Grove, to be called Mormon Grove postoffice. This place is situated about seventy-five miles from Independence, Mo. It is a charming spot.—The farm is large, and the crops look flourishing. Claims for settlement are multiplied on every hand. Brother Daniel Spencer leaves to day for St. Louis, and thence to England, to renew his former labors in Britain, having shared in the multiplied duties of forwarding the entire emigration of Saints over the plains.

You, with many others, will be surprised to learn that brother Milo Andrus was yesterday suddenly appointed to take charge of a company over the Plains to Salt Lake. Several circumstances combined to render this appointment prudent and desirable. The absence of brothers Snow and Andrus will be deeply felt in St. Louis and the Mississippi Valley. May the blessing of the Great Shepherd continually attend them in all their labors.

You will receive by brother Brown the statistical account of all the companies and the time of their departure over the Plains, &c. I intend to proceed on my journey to the Cherokee Nation to-morrow or next day, in company with Elder James McGaw, who is appointed to take charge of Mormon Grove Station. Accept my kind regards and remembrance of all the Saints. Yours, truly, Orson Spencer.—[St. Louis Republican.

Doings in Kansas.

A late Missouri Republican, informs us that the Kanzas Legislature in joint session, August 8th, declared Lecompton, to be the capitol of the Territory.

The Republican's informant says: "Yesterday, shares in the Lecompton Town Company could have been bought for one hundred dollars; to-day they cannot be bought for less than one thousand, except when a party is compelled to sell by a money pressure. This evening, men are considered worth $10,000, who, last evening, was considered worth nothing. To-day, men are regarded as good for fifty thousand dollars, who, yesterday, were regarded as good for several hundred less than nothing. What is it that fickle fortune will not do for lucky people! This result adds much excitement and a great deal of log-rolling, and splashes with cold water, many high hopes of fortune. Some are elated; more are depressed.

"Last evening President Shannon, delivered an address on Slavery, to a large assemblage in front of the Morris House. The speech was read from manuscript, but was a masterly production. The address was frequently interrupted by applause. General Atchison, who left here this morning, was called out, but declined speaking on account of the late hour.

"President Shannon spoke two hours and a half, and had the close attention of his auditory throughout."

A Pic nic of Spiritualists took place yesterday at West Flushing, as we learn from the Tribune, and according to the report, their doings were, to say the least, not very decorous. It seems that being in the forest, once inhabited by the red man, they were all "influenced and controlled by the spirit of the red man." We are told that:

"All at once a gentleman gave a shrill whoop, leaped into the middle of the circle, and with closed eyes began to dance like an Indian. His example became contagious, and pretty soon eight or ten joined in the performance. They were all apparently imitating the Indian, some well, others poorly. They sang, they danced. Some whooped and yelled, some only gesticulated, and some talked and conversed in what sounded like the Indian tongue."

It is stated, that about twenty persons in all were "sensibly effected." We should on the contrary consider, that they had taken leave of their senses.—[Eve. Mirror.

Dreadful Accident.

Twenty-three Persons Killed and Seventy Wounded.

A terrible accident occurred on Wednesday noon between New York and Philadelphia.

The morning train with six passenger cars attached, left Philadelphia at 10 a. m., reaching Burlington at 10 3-4, after waiting the usual time, started out and about two miles this side, met the up train from New York, the trains saw each other, and that which had just left Burlington commenced to back; and at a cross-road half a mile from Burlington, ran over some horses driven by Dr. Hannegan, which threw off the hind car and the rest followed, crushing over and piling up on the top of it. Four out of the six cars were thrown off the track, and three utterly destroyed; they were all well filled with passengers nearly all of whom were injured more or less, and it is feared that the number who were killed outright, was even greater than we have announced. The names of the killed as far as we have learned, are as follows:

Catharine Bigelow, D. F. Haywood, G. W. Ridgeway, Mrs. C. M. Barclay, Edward C. Bacon, Wilson Kent, Alexander Kelly, M. J. Houghton, Baron De St. Audre, (French Consul) Master Ingersoll, and a female not known of Philadelphia. John Dallam and Thomas J. Meredith, of Baltimore, Md. Mrs. Margaret Prescott, of Salem, N. J. Martin Connell, Livingston, Del. Jacob Howard, Lebanon, Tenn. Harry Rush, Georgetown College. Major Boyce, U. S. Navy, and wife. James Lincoln, Elliott's Mills, Md. Charles Bottom, Trenton, N. J. Mrs. Humphries, Peoria, Ill. Catharine Brown, (colored.)

Latest News from Europe.

The entire destruction of Sweaborg by the allied fleets, and their advance towards Renel is announced. We have not received, as yet, the Russian accounts. Dundas, in his despatch of August 11, says:

"Sweaborg was attacked by the mortar and gunboats of the allied squadron on the morning of the 9th. The firing ceased early this morning. Heavy explosions and very destructive fires were produced. In a few hours nearly all the principal buildings on Vargo, and many more on Swarte, including those of the dockyard and arsenal were burned. Few casualties have occurred, and no lives lost in the allied fleets."

In the south of Europe, we have a reduplication of the battle of Inkermann, as far as the Russians are concerned, these having been beaten off with tremendous slaughter by the French, and Sardinians stationed on the Tchernaya, and whose line they had attacked. The Russian attack was under command of Liprandi, and in force some 40,000 men. The loss of the allies was small. These concurring events have seemed to excite the highest expectations and warmest gratulations in England and France, as well as in the army and navy. In England Parliament has been prorogued; the Queen had left for France, escorted by six ships of war. Much anarchy is caused in Denmark by the persistence of the United States in claiming the abolition of the Sound Dues. Affairs in India are tranquil.

Telegraphic.

From Washington.—Washington, August 27.—Although the policy of the government respecting the acquisition of Cuba is said to be unchanged, it is believed here that Minister Dodge's recently reported movement, which called forth the declaration of the Spanish official Gazette in opposition thereto, was not in a specific form, the American administration well knowing that Spain is now hostile to the cession of the island. Brigham Young is merely acting as Governor of Utah until a successor is appointed, Col. Steptoe having in effect declined.

The Will of the Late Abbott Lawrence.—Boston, August 27, 1855.—Besides numerous private gifts, the will of the late Abbott Lawrence bequeathes $130,000 for public benevolence, as follows: The Lawrence Scientific School, $50,000; for building model lodging houses, $50,000; Boston Public Library, 10,000; Franklin Library, in the city of Lawrence, $5000; American Bible Society, $5000; American Tract Society, $5000; and Home Missionary Society, $5000. One-half of the net rents of the lodging houses is to be annually distributed to various charitable institutions in Boston, and the other half is to accumulate, in order to constitute a fund for keeping the lodging houses in order.

The Virginia Know-Nothings.—Baltimore, Aug; 28.—In the Virginia Know-Nothing State Council at Richmond, an informal resolution was offered by the Hon. John M. Botts, embracing the sentiment that both secrecy and the religious test of the party ought to be abolished, and that the naturalization laws ought to be totally repealed. The object was merely to ascertain the sense of the council on the question, and it was unanimously in the affirmative.

The Late Liquor Riot at Portland.—Boston, August 27, 1855.—The Grand Jury of Cumberland, Maine, have refused to find a bill of indictment against Mayor Neal Dow for connection with the death of Robbins, in the late Portland liquor riot. Several of the alleged riotors, however, have been indicted.

Bishop Meade, of Virginia, speaks of the immense disproportion between the number of male and female professors of religion in the Episcopal churches—it being often double, treble and quadruple in the case of females over males. He says he has administered the rite of confirmation to thirty persons, only one of whom was a male, and has often done it to a smaller number, when there was not one male. The bishop expresses the fear that the disproportion between professors in the two sexes is but a just representation of the difference in religious character.

A Monument to Gerrit Smith.

We are happy to learn that Gerrit Smith contemplates a disposition of his great property that regards the good of the living, and is local, practicable, and full of promise. The Oswego Palladium says that it is his purpose to found and endow a great educational institution somewhere in central New York, to which he will dedicate the bulk of his property. His plans are nearly matured. The institution is to be a University of the highest class, and established on the most liberal principles. It is to be surrounded with an ample farm to give the opportunity of tillage to such students as desire to strengthen and invigorate themselves by labor, and is to make suitable provisions for cases of struggling merit. During the past few years the gifts of Mr. S. which have been made public, amount to $755,000, as follows:

Library to the City of Oswego	$25,000
$500 each to 500 poor women	25,000
500 lots of 50 acres each to colored men, making a total of 25,000 acres at $5	125,000
50 acres each to 500 poor men, and $10 to each in cash	130,000
20,000 acres in Madison County, where he lives, to an association of young men—$20 per acre	400,000
To the anti-slavery cause, over	50,000

He has now pledged a fund for education, double the sums already bestowed. Mr. Smith's father was a partner with John Jacob Astor, in the fur trade, He purchased near 2,000,000 acres of land of the Six Nations, before the right to sell was taken from them by the State. They are in Central and Northern New York—a large tract in Madison County and at Oswego and vicinity.—[N. A. S. Standard.

A Catholic Church Blown up.

The following letter to a gentleman in this city will inspire the mind of every good man with horror and alarm:

Sidney, Shelby Co, Ohio, Aug. 19, 1855,

Dear Sir: Last night, about 11 o'clock, the Catholic frame church of this place was made a pile of ruins. A keg of powder was put under the building, with a train scattered along the street, which was fired with burning shavings. There is no doubt here that the incendiary deed was committed by a set of Know Nothing rowdies, such as have just wrought devastation in Louisville.

I trust, for the welfare of our country, that the better class of the American people will soon arouse to a proper sense of what this awful spirit of blind persecution for opinion's sake is fast leading to. The better class of Know Nothings here appear to look with disgust upon these terrible proceedings; but who can tell whether they are sincere? The real friends of religious liberty in our community charge, without reservation, that the destruction of the Catholic church here is one of the fruits of the Know Nothing crusade.

We have also received the following from a prominent citizen of the town:

Sidney, Aug. 20, 1855.

Col. Medary—Dear Sir: Our villlage has been in much confusion since yesterday morning, caused by the blowing up of the Catholic church on Saturday night.

It is one of the boldest and most daring acts that I have known, being done about 10 o'clock on Saturday night—the church standing only the width of a street from a dwelling house.

No clue has yet been had to the fiends engaged in this outrage. A reward has been offered by the Council, and a meeting of the citizens will be held to-day. I will advise you again. Yours, &c., S.

Inter-Oceanic Ship Canal.

The Washington Star learns from a reliable source, that some enterprising citizens of the United States and New Granada have discovered and explored the long sought for route for connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by means of a ship canal. This great desideratum to the commercial world is certainly the most grand and important enterprise of this age, and worthy the attention and consideration of every civilized people and government. The plan, as the Star understands, is to go up the Atrato River some fifty miles from its mouth, with a depth of from six to ten fathoms, and from thence to the Pacific—a distance of some sixty miles more—without a single lock or obstruction in the contemplated canal. A liberal grant has been made by the government of New Granada to the persons engaged in this grand undertaking; and the whole route, from one ocean to the other, has been actually surveyed, and the facts developed are beyond doubt or question so far as the feasibility of the work is concerned.—[Democratic Press.

The official organ of St. Petersburg, expresses the opinion that the Allies, by their inactivity and want of enterprise, have allowed the opportunity to slip by when Sebastopol might have been taken. It now says the city is impregnable; that it can replace one hundred dismounted guns in a night, or can exchange 50,000 fatigued troops against 50,000 fresh troops: that the Allies cannot, with double the force they can dispose of, cut off the communication of Perekop; that the Russian army fighting for its country and its sovereign, is animated by a better spirit than the heterogeneous mass of French, English, Turks, Egyptians and Sardinians, contending for an abstract idea and a confused interpretation of the duties of civilization.

The Cincinnati (Ohio) Price Current makes an estimate of the amount of cattle, sheep and lambs consumed in the United States during a year, in all the cities and towns containing over 5000 inhabitants, based on calculations deduced from the statistics of the New York market. It gives these towns an aggregate population of about four millions of inhabitants, and sets them down as consuming 800,000 head of cattle, and two and a half millions of sheep and lambs, besides three millions of hogs, the whole valued at seventy-one and a half millions of dollars. Two-thirds of the immense product comes from the States in the valley of Ohio.

Mortality in New York.—The deaths in New York city last week were 585, a decrease of 48 from the mortality of the previous week.

President Pierce, has recovered from his slight attack of fever and ague at the Sulpher Springs, Va., and was enabled to exercise the "fantastic toe" on the 27th ult.

Gov. Shannon, was in St. Louis on the 27th ult., on his way to Kansas.

Central America.—It is said that Col. Kinney purposes moving into the interior soon to confer with the Government authorities of Nicaragua, and probably to offer them his services in case a war should break out between that country and Costa Rica, which is at present anticipated.

Simple Cure for the Bite of a Rattlesnake.—The Journal, printed at Madison, Wis., relates the following singular recovery from the bite of a rattlesnake:—"We are informed by Dr. Ward that the child of Mr. White, that was bitten by a rattlesnake last week, has recovered. The remedy used was so simple and attainable by every one that it ought to be generally known. The hand which was bitten and arm were enveloped in a poultice of moistened ashes and the child made to drink freely of whisky punch."—[Exchange.

Letter Notice.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature. and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"'The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé; tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL

By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Poetry.

The Lamanite's Prayer.

BY CHARLES W. PENROSE.

"Great Spirit! listen to the red man's wail;
Thou hast the power to help him in his woe,
Thy mighty arm was never known to fail;
Great Chieftain! save him from the pale-fac'd foe.

"His broad, green hunting grounds where buff'loes roam,
His bubbling streams where finny thousands play,
The waving prairies, once his happy home,
Are fast departing to the Christian's sway.

"With curs'd fire-water's stupifying flame,
(Which lull'd the senses of our chiefs to rest,)
And soft mouth'd words, the cheating pale-face came,
And stole our lands and drove us to the West.

"Our grey-hair'd med'cine men, so wise and good,
Are baffl'd and confounded with the dread disease,
Which ne'er was known to flow in Indian blood,
Till white men brought it from beyond the seas.

"And shall our nation, once so great, decay?
Our children perish, and our chieftains die?
Great Spirit, help! Thy glorious power display,
Destroy our foes; oh, hear the Indian's cry."

The red man ceas'd, and trembl'd with delight,
Far, brighter far than the meridian sun,
A dazzling vision burst upon his sight—
A glorious angel from the Holy One.

"Thy prayer is heard," he said, "and I am here
To tell thee what shall shortly come to pass—
A day of joy for all thy tribes is near,
Thy foes shall perish like the sun-scorch'd grass.

"The holy book your fathers hid, is found,
Your Mormon brothers will the truth reveal;
Though troubles press, and all seems black around,
Obey their words, your souls' deep wounds will heal.

"Not many moons shall pass away, before
The curse of darkness from your skins shall flee,
Your ancient beauty will the Lord restore,
And all your tribes shall dwell in unity.

"The arts of peace shall flourish, ne'er to die,
The war-whoop and the deadly strife shall cease,
Disease shall then depart, and every sigh,
And health and life shall flow in every breeze.

"Farewell! Remember! I was once on earth,
And serv'd the Lord of Hosts on this fair land,
Observ'd His sacred precepts from my birth,
And now I dwell in bliss at His right hand."

The angel left, and darkness came again,
But light and joy dwelt in the Indian's soul.
Oh! may the day soon dawn for Ephraim's reign,
When all the "glorious land" he shall control.

Death of Hon. Leonidas Shaver.

Remarks by Prof. O. Pratt.

At the funeral of Hon. Leonidas Shaver, in Great Salt Lake City, June 30, 1855, the following remarks were made by Prof. O. Pratt, and reported by J. V. Long, for the Deseret News:

Friends and Brethren: We have assembled ourselves together on this solemn occasion to commemorate one of our departed friends who has suddenly been taken from our midst.

It is customary among most of the nations of the earth, on an occasion of this kind, to deliver what is termed a funeral sermon. I have been called upon quite unexpectedly this forenoon to perform this office. I do not expect to be lengthy in my remarks, but shall endeavor to say something in relation to the present condition of man and his future state.

We have been placed upon this earth for a wise purpose, in a state and condition of being to prepare ourselves for a higher state and order of things. These are the objects for which man exists here. Generations have come and gone. Millions and hundreds of millions of human beings have peopled this globe, and have departed hence, and we must all follow in the footsteps of the generations that are past.

It is a decree of Jehovah who governs and controls the destinies of worlds, who controls all intelligent beings, that man should die.—No one can escape this decree! No one can prevail with the grim monster death, and overcome him, but we must all sooner or later meet that enemy of mankind, and be laid prostrate in the tomb!

Why is it that so great and good a Being, a Being who is full of benevolence and love, a Being who is filled with mercy and compassion, should suffer such a dire calamity to befal the human race? Why is it? Is it because he delights in the sufferings of mankind? Is it because he delights to see them writhe in pain and distress? No: it is because man has sinned; it is because he has offended his Maker—because he has transgressed sacred and holy laws, because he has subjected himself to the monster death, to the miseries, wretchedness and vanities of this life. It is not however, because we ourselves have sinned that death comes upon us; but it is because of the original sin; for all will admit that infants that are incapable of sinning against God, who are unacquainted with his revealed will, who discern not between good and evil, fall victims to the destroyer, as well as others. If then, this curse seizes upon the innocent and upon those who have not transgressed the laws of heaven it must be in consequence of the original sin that so great a calamity is in the world.

"By man came death," says the apostle Paul. Again the same apostle says, "As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto the justification of life," (Acts v.; 18). What free gift? The free gift of salvation from the grave, the salvation of our bodies, or in other words, of our corporeal systems. The redemption of our bodies from the grave is brought about through the atonement of Jesus Christ; hence we have had no agency in bringing death into our world, and we have no agency in the redemption of our world. One man brought death into the world, and one man brought redemption from death.

This redemption is just as extensive as the curse, so far as the body is concerned. The curse affected all, and the bodies of all will be redeemed. When I speak of this redemption, I wish to be distinctly understood, that I mean the redemption of the body from the grave. If the fall lays all mankind low in the dust, the redemption will bring them forth from the dust. If the fall shut them out from his face and presence, the redemption will bring them back into his presence to behold his face.

Jesus was lifted up by sinful man upon the cross; what for? That all mahkind might be lifted up from the grave to be judged before God; not for Adam's sins, but for their own personal sins; hence there is no person dwelling upon the face of the earth that is free from the original curse that came in consequence of the transgression of Adam.

If we had no sins of our own, we should ever remain after this universal redemption of our bodies, in the presence of God, but if we individually have committed sins, we shall be again cast out from the presence of God, unless we have complied with the great plan of salvation revealed by our Saviour.

The great question raised by many with regard to the extent of the atonement, is. Will all mankind be saved eternally in the presence of God, in the celestial kingdom, who have personally sinned? No; they will not. There is a certain class of mankind that will be saved in the fulness of celestial glory, and partake of all the blessings held forth by the plan of redemption. But this applies only to those who are faithful and obedient.

There are others who will partake of a portion of this redumption; but they will differ from the first, as much as the moon differs from that bright luminary of heaven—the Sun. Hence Paul, in speaking of the redemption of man, says, "there are bodies celestial, and bodies terrestrial, and the glory of the celestial is one and that of the terrestrial another," and by the glory of the stars he represents a third class of beings. And again in order to show the difference existing in this third class he says "as one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurection of the dead."

Here, then, are three distinct classes of beings in the eternal world, all of whom partake of happiness, each to be rewarded according to their works: one is represented by the sun another by the moon, and a third by the glory of the stars, that is, by the apparent glory of the stars, or as they appear to us, and not as they would appear to individuals who are in their immediate vicinity.

This third class, it appears, differ in glory while the others are alike. In this third class there is a difference according to their works. Some will shine forth like the brightest stars of the firmament; while others whose works have not been so honorable, will be like some of those stars that appear to the naked eye in the heavens much inferior.

Who are those individuals who will enter into the higher state of glory? I answer; they are the individuals who keep the law of God, who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who repent and forsake their sins, who receive the ordinances of the gospel, who are baptised in the likeness of Christ's death, who arise from the liquid element in the likeness of his resurrection, who receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, who walk steadfastly in all the principles revealed for the salvation of man, and who continue faithful to the end.

These are the righteous who will be admitted in the highest glory. Their glory will be full; it will be like the glory of the Son of God; as the Apostle John has said, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; it does not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Their bodies will come forth from the grave fashioned like unto his glorious body, and in every respect they will inherit the same glory that the Son inherits, and hence they are one as the Father and Son are one.

Now many religious societies are so uncharitable in their feelings, that they suppose that all who die, not having received the plan of salvation, will sink down into a night of endless darkness. I speak of a certain class of Christians; they suppose there will be only two places—heavon and hell; and that all those who do not enter into heaven will sink to hell, where they must remain eternally.

But these are not the views of the Latter Day or Former Day Saints. They believe that all will be judged according to ther works. If they do not receive the fulness of the plan of salvation, yet, if they are among the honorable men of the earth, having dealt uprightly and honorably one with another, and have lived up to the light which they are in possession of, they will in due time be redeemed, and partake of a degree of glory; such will be exalted to all the happiness and greatness, wisdom and knowledge, light and intelligence which they are prepared for or capable of receiving. It is true, they may have to associate in the intermediate state with beings and powers, and principles that will not be pleasant; for the spirit world is, in some respects, like the world we live in.

Beings that enter the spirit world find there classes and distinctions, and every variety of sentiment and feeling; there is just as much variety in the spirit world as in this; consequently, they have to grapple with those powers and influences that surround them. Spirits have their agency between death and the resurrection just as much as we have here. They are just as liable to be deceived in the spirit world as we are here. Those who are deceived may assist in deceiving others, for they have their classes, their theories, and their opinions. Almost everything that we see here is the same in the spirit world, They are mixed up with every variety and are as liable to be deluded there as here.

Although the righteous enter into a state of rest and peace, and enjoy happiness in a great degree; yet their happiness is not complete; they are not perfected in glory. It is only their spirits that are there, and they will have to mingle more or less with inferior minds, and different dispositions; but still they will enjoy a great degree of happiness, for their own consciousness of having done right imparts pleasure, consequently it is a state of rest of peace, free from the imperfections of mortality; but to say that they will be free from all association with beings that are sinful and inferior to themselves we do not believe. It is true, they will go back to where Jesus is; they will have communion with him, and behold his face, but they will not always remain in one particular place or position, they will have their works to perform, as we have in this life.

If they are clothed with power and authority in this life they do not leave their priesthood, when they leave this body; hence John heard them sing: "Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof, for thou hast redeemed us by thy blood, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, and hast made us kings and priests unto God and we shall reign on the earth." We perceive that the priesthood do not die with their bodies: the kingly authority does not cease with the immortal bodies: it is an office that continues for ever, that continues in the spirit world, as well as after the resurrection. Those that receive their authority from heaven, will have to magnify it, and set a good example; and every person receiving an office in this priesthood and afterward dying will have to perform all the duties, and exercise the functions thereof in order that they may be useful to those spirits in an inferior state. If they hold the priesthood before the resurrection, do we suppose that they will sit down and have nothing to do? No: there will be other individuals that will not hold the priesthood, and that have not had the gospel, and they will be sent to them, to enlighten their minds and enable them, who will, to rise in the great scale of moral and intellectual excellence.

They will naturally have to mingle with all as we do in this life; and this will be calculated to make it rather unpleasant; but they are willing to do this for the salvation of those who have died without the gospel. Jesus himself set the example and pattern for others. While his body lay in the silent tomb, his noble spirit was not idle, hence, Peter says, that Jesus, being "put to death in the flesh, was quickened by the spirit, by which also he went and preached to the spirits in prison that were sometime disobedient in the days of Noah," &c. Jesus entered the prison house of those persons who were destroyed in the mighty flood, and preached to them. Those antediluvian spirits had suffered in the prison some two thousand years, and upwards; they needed some information, and Jesus went to enlighten them.

Why were they shut up in prison? It was because they rejected some light in the days of Noah. It is true, that Noah and his three sons could not preach to all the world, but they had rejected some light, and they had to go to prison to atone for that sin.

It is not as some have supposed, that such characters have to go into a lake of fire and to welter there for ever and ever. These persons were destroyed by the flood; they were shut up in prison and confined there; and after a long period, light broke in upon them, and the prison doors were thrown open. Jesus came for that purpose, not only to benefit the living, but also the dead,—to open the prison doors, and break the chains of darkness. Jesus went and preached to the antediluvian spirits. What did he preach? Did he preach, you must remain here to endless ages without hope of redemption? If this were the proclamation, what was the use of going to proclaim it? What would be the use of telling those beings that they were to remain in misery, and that there was no chance of escape? No use of proclaiming such news in the ears of any one. Peter tells us why he preached to them; he said, "For, for this cause was the gospel preached to them also that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, and live according to God in the spirit."

This was the object, then, that they might have the same Gospel that men have in the flesh. If we acknowledge they had not the opportunity of receiving it in the flesh, they must have it in the spirit world; for in the great judgment day all men are to be judged by the same Gospel, and consequently, in order to judge them, it was necessary that they should hear the same Gospel that was preached upon the earth that they might have the privilege of entering into the presence of the Lord their God, or if they rejected it, be justly condemned.

Jesus has set us the pattern, he held the priesthood which was conferred by his Father, to redeem those spirits that they might come forth in the morning of the first resurrection and receive eternal life, and partake a portion of that glory of which I have spoken. If Jesus did this, may not his servants do it also, being blessed in this life with the same authority from heaven, and holding that authority after death? May not they be engaged in the same benevolent purpose? Yes they may.

These are our views, the views of the Latter Day Saints. And we believe that the spirits of the just will be sent on missions of mercy to those in prison who had not in this life the opportunity of obeying those principles that I have referred to.

Much might be said with regard to the future state of man between death and the resurrection. We might go on and contrast the difference between man in the flesh, and man in the spirit world.

There are many points of contrast, as well as of agreement, in these two states of existence.

But we have not time to take up and contrast the difference between disembodied spirits, and those that are in an embodied state.

By way of conclusion, we will say, that all men will come forth and take bodies, some celestial, some terrestrial, and telestial, to occupy degrees of glory and be rewarded according to their works, unless they have sinned against the Holy Ghost. There are certain sins that cannot be forgiven in this world nor in that which is to come; to say that such shall be forgiven, we are not authorized, but all others, after suffering for their evil deeds, will come forth from the grave to receive for their good works, those that have done evil, having suffered according to their evil deeds; and thus the justice and mercy of God will be displayed. All will partake of them according to the degree of light that has shone forth in their day.

We are called upon on this solemn occasion as a Territory to mourn the loss of one who has occupied a distinguished position among us,—one whose course has been an exemplary one to all mankind, that is, so far as we are acquainted with him. He has now left us, but we expect to meet with him again and see his face. And it is not long before all, now present, will again meet with this distinguished individual.

May God bless us and enable as to be prepared to meet with each other in the eternal worlds, and to receive according to the justice and mercy of God. Amen.

North Boundary of Utah.

Governor Young and suite returned from their northern tour on the forenoon of the 25th inst., having been absent within a few hours of seven days.

In going out the party stopped for the night at Bishop William Kay's, in Kay's Ward; at Bishop Harvey E. Pierce's in the old fort at Box Elder; on the right bank of Bear River 3-4 of a mile above the ferry and ford on the road to Fort Hall, having crossed the river at the lower ferry 8 7-8 miles below; 24 3-4 miles from the ferry and ford, and on the Fort Hall road, by a beautiful spring run, having crossed several spring streams between the river and this most northern camp, all tributaries to the Malade. Returning, the nights were passed on the left bank of Bear river at the lower ferry; at Bishop Bingham's in Bingham's Fort; and at Bishop John W. Hess' in Farmington.

On the evening of the 18th, President Brigham Young addressed an assembly of the Saints at Bishop Kay's; on the evening of the 19th, President J. M. Grant addressed the Saints in Box Elder Fort; and on the evening of the 23d Elder O. Pratt preached in the school-house at Bingham's Fort; Sunday, 24th, there was a large meeting in and around the school-house in Ogden City, which was highly edified in the forenoon with a very instructive discourse by Pres. Young, upon the past course and present duties of the inhabitants of Ogden City and the contiguous settlements, which was followed by applicable remarks from Pres. Kimball, all tending to encourage the inhabitants of that region to make Ogden a beautiful and mighty city.

The Malade rises in the mountains of Oregon, and running a general course about south by east enters the right bank of Bear river below the lower ferry.

The Malade Valley, as far north as the company went, and for several miles further which were in plain view, is thickly covered with rich grasses, is well watered by numerous spring rivulets, in addition to the main stream, and has an abundance of fuel easily to be procured from the west slope of the mountain range bounding this valley on the east. These facilities make that valley a very choice location for numerous herds of stock, and it would be an excellent policy to drive herds to that region from settlements where the animals, grasshoppers and drouth have used up the grass.

In Weber county the wheat crop will be very light, the still constant destruction by grasshoppers rendering it doubtful whether even seed for another year will be saved; and the numerous large wheat fields in Davis county, which bid so fair on the outward trip, on the return were covered and blackened with grasshoppers feeding daintily upon the tender wheat heads, and many were cradling their young grain for fodder, while a dense cloud of grasshoppers rose at each stroke of the cradle.

Amid all this wide spread destruction of crops and herd range, one seldom saw a downcast or gloomy countenance, nearly all appearing as cheerful as though surrounded by the most favorable prospects, thus plainly demonstrating the strong confidence in the wise and just dispensations of Providence which pervades the masses of our population, and that too under circumstances which would pale the cheek and scatter the population of any other community but Latter Day Saints.

On the afternoon of the 21st, and at the most northern camp of the party, Prof. Pratt obtained an excellent observation for time, and in the evening took eight observations for the polar star, calculated each by Bowditch's method "for finding the latitude by an altitude of the pole star," the mean result of which gave a north latitude of 42 deg. 6 min. 27 sec. .2 or 7.4747 miles north of latitude 42, which is the boundary between Utah and Oregon. Early on the 22d Surveyor-General J. W. Fox, with Dimic B. Huntington for flagman and Allen Taylor and Isaac Chase, chainmen, began to chain the distance from the camp south to 42, and by the time the balance of the party could eat their breakfast, hitch up, and drive back to the termination of the chain line, it was finished before the President's carriage reached the point where it crosses the Fort Hall road. At this point trenches were dug on the line on each side of the road where it crosses, and a stone slab with O chiseled upon one side and U on the other was set in the ground close by the road, and on the east side of it, and near the base of one of the foot hills, Prof. Pratt piled up a few stones on an outcropping rock a few feet south of the line.

Returning by way of Cache Valley, was prevented by Bear river's being too high to ford with carriages, as going by way of the ferry would have delayed Governor Young and others too late for transacting important business in time for the next eastern mail.

Brick Without Burning.

The Dixon Telegraph mentions the formation of a company in that city to manufacture brick by the new process which dispenses with burning, a description of which we gave some months since. The bricks are made entirely of lime and sand mixed with water, and then pressed with a powerful machine. The size is ten by six inches, four inches high, being equal to three and one-eighth of common brick. They are made hollow, so that they lay up a hollow wall. They are dried in the sun and in ten days are hard enough to lay up.

Recent Railroad Accidents.

It is a lamentable fact that less regard is had for the safety of the traveling community in the United States than in any other country. Our people seem oblivious to the necessity of passing stringent laws, similar to those in Europe; and the acts relating to the responsibility of railroad and steamboat companies, and for the better protection of travelers, passed in the several States, are, as a general thing, shamefully lenient, and seem to be drawn up only to be evaded. We never hear of these terrible disasters occurring in France, or Germany, or England; while it is our mournful duty to repeatedly chronicle events similar to the Burlington slaughter.

The following extracts from the Herald record of railway accidents show how frequent and fatal those disasters have been:

Another Arctic Expedition.

The Montreal Herald states that the Arctic expedition fitted out by the Hudson Bay Company was to have started from Great Slave Lake some time since. The object of this expedition is to visit the locality where, according to the information furnished by Dr. Rae, Sir John Franklin and his unfortunate companions perished, and to ascertain more fully, if possible, respecting their sad fate. It is to be hoped that they will also hear some tidings from the American Expedition, under Dr. Kane, concerning the fate of which considerable anxiety is felt throughout the civilized world.

Cure for Rheumatism.—Lemon juice is recommended as a certain cure for acute inflammatory rheumatism. It is given in quantities of a table spoonful to twice the quantity of cold water, with sugar, every hour. The effect of the lemon juice was almost instantaneous in one case mentioned; in ten days the worst case was cured, and in seven the other was able to go out, and there was a flexibility of the joints of the cured quite unusual in recovery after other modes of treatment. We knew of several recent cures of severe cases.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 8, 1855.

Popular Sovereignty.

A GREAT deal has been said and written lately in regard to the doctrine of Popular Sovereignty; and the peculiar position of Kansas has naturally tended to stir it up and bring it more immediately before the people; and any difficulty that may exist there is attempted to be made use of by politicians in the opposite ranks to repudiate the doctrine of territorial or squatter sovereignty. Now, we conceive that the acts and doings of Kansas have nothing to do virtually with the subject, nor have the acts of any other State or Territory.

The doctrine of Popular Sovereignty is either true or false, and is as independent of any action of the inhabitants of Kansas, as it is of the proceedings of the Japanese or Tartars. As well may you charge the acts of the Barnburners in New York, the Lynchers of Vicksburg, the safety committee of California, or the mobbers of the Mormons in Missouri and Illinois, to the effects of popular sovereignty, as the acts of the citizens of Kansas. If the doctrine of Popular Sovereignty is constitutional; if it is true that the people are the sovereigns, that the representatives of their Legislatures and of Congress are their representatives; that they go there to represent, not themselves but the people; that they are not their dictators, but their servants; and that these representatives are amenable to the people that send them; if the above is true, no circumstances, no acts of any or all of the inhabitants of any town, city, territory or State, can alter this truth. We have yet to learn that the mal-administration of law, or the perversion of any principle, would prove the principle incorrect, or that law bad. Because an esteemed friend in whom we had confidence betrays our trust, uses our property, and proves himself unworthy, shall we then do away with the principle of friendship and confidence, and treat all men as rogues? We must confess that we are at a loss to discern wherein the acts of the citizens of Kansas, Missouri, or any other place, have any bearing upon this question.

There are many, however, that while they admit the doctrine of Popular Sovereignty, as applied to a State, repudiate it when applied to a territory. Now we wish to examine this doctrine fairly and impartially. We have seen the subject as fully presented in the Chicago Weekly Democratic Press of Sept. 1 as it is probably capable of being represented; we therefore quote:

The Present Aspect of the Question.

"Much as certain demagogues have tried to misrepresent and cover up the true issue involved in the dogma of popular sovereignty, it remains nevertheless patent to the public that the only difference of sentiment on the subject relates to the application of the doctrine to territorial governments. As applied to those representative assemblages of the people, through their chosen delegates, called together for the purpose of framing a fundamental law for the government of a State just emerging from a territorial condition, the doctrine of popular sovereignty has not had an opponent in the Democratic party since the formation of our national constitution. But it is the policy of those who have disorganized the party for their own personal aggrandizement, to do away with the distinction between a territorial or inchoate condition and a sovereign or complete one subject only to the limitations of the constitution of the United States. They labor to delude the public into the belief that those opposed to the exercise of sovereign power to its fullest extent by the people of a Territory are also opposed to its exercise when the Territory lays aside its subordinate relations to the confederacy and assumes the individuality and independent relation of an integer in the Union. To cover up the infamy of violating the compact known as the Missouri Compromise, they strive to create the inference that such procedure was necessary to enable the people of Kansas and Nebraska to frame satisfactory Constitutions when applying for admission into the Federal Union, while it is a part of their party creed that such compact could only be binding while the country subject to it remains in a territorial condition. This fact being clear, and we beg our readers never to forget it, we proceed to discuss briefly the present aspect of the question which seems to threaten the future harmony and integrity of the democratic party."

The above may be very conclusive to our cotemporary of the Press, whose opinion we would not wish to treat lightly—to us it is not so clear. A nice spun theory is one thing, a matter of fact another; and we cannot but think that the editor of the above-named journal has made a slight mistake in relation to one of the fundamental principles of our Government—the rights of the people. We cannot see what difference there is between the people of a State and the people of a territory; or what influence the place of their location has upon their individual and political rights. If a man holds rights, we maintain that he holds them as an American citizen, and not because he happens to live in a State; and we hold that a man cannot be disfranchised because he simply removes into a territory. If the people are sovereign, they are as much so in Kansas, Nebraska, or Utah, as they are in New York, Pennsylvania, or Massachusetts; their simple location can make no possible difference, providing they are equal. If the inhabitants of States possess privileges that territories do not, then are they not equal? We beg to be excused therefore, if we cannot see those things which appear so clear and conclusive to our cotemporary. We cannot comprehend the nice transitions from incompetency to competency, weakness to power, incapacity to suffrage, and vice versa, as above indicated. Whenever we deny the territories the rights of States, we assume that the power lies in Congress to dictate, and not with the people; that Congress is the sovereign, the dictator, and the people subjects, the dictated; but if members of Congress are the people's representatives, which they profess to be, and go to that body to represent their rights; then are they the people's representatives; they are the directors, and Congress is a body that assemble to represent, and not to rule or command either States or territories; consequently, if they do not possess this power over the citizens of the States, they do not over those of the territories.

We are necessarily led to the inquiry: Does the doctrine of Popular Sovereignty apply to land, property, or people? If to land, why did our fathers complain of the treatment of England; of England's dictation, and of rulers being sent out from that government? Why not acquiesce in all things that the parent government dictated, "as good loyal subjects," until they became free? Property indeed is represented in the South, but by whom? By the popular sovereigns. We are forced then to the conclusion that the people are the sovereigns. Now, upon what principle of justice, equity, or right, can we make the people sovereign in the States, and deprive them of that privilege in the territories? Just the same as that upon which England controlled her colonies, that France makes her conscriptions, and that Russia sends her hordes to war—the principle of power—an assumed national power, growing out of centralized, organized combination and legislative assumption, but certainly at war with the spirit of our institutions and Constitution, and with the rights and liberties of the subjects or sovereigns. Constitutionally, "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States." If they are not, then are they reduced to the position of Russian serfs, who are disposed of with the land.

But let us here inquire what the power of Congress in relation to Territories is. The Constitution says: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory, or other property belonging to the United States." Now the question necessarily arises, Is it the land or the people? Is it the people and other property, or the Territory and other property that the Congress of the United States are empowered "to make all needful rules and regulations for?" If the people are not the land, property, or territory, then have they all the rights, privileges, and immunities of any other citizens of the United States, and are sovereigns; for as no such power or authority as to rule, legislate for, or dictate to Territories has ever been ceded to Congress, and as the Constitution expressly provides that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the public," it necessarily follows that the people of the Territories hold just the same rights that the people of the States do, and are the sovereigns or rulers, and not the serfs disposed of with the land.

But, again, reason and common sense would lead us to the same conclusions. If it is not property or land that we are legislating for, and all American subjects are "free and equal," what difference can it make where we reside? Is not the enterprising yeoman, who makes the first roads, builds the first bridges, and kills the snakes in a new country; "who turns the wilderness into a fruitful field, and makes the desert to blossom as the rose;" those hardy pioneers who have nerve to grapple with the Indian and to brave all the dangers of a frontier life; we ask, are not they as capable of judging for themselves? of knowing their wants, of choosing their own rulers, and regulating their own affairs as the more effeminate and vitiated fogies of the older settlements? Shall we deprive those stalwart, enterprising, intelligent pioneers of their sovereignty, and let their interests be represented by street-sweepers, hod-carriers, and counter-jumpers? Shall we shut out Crockett, Wayne, Boone, Harrison, Houston, and ten thousand other such spirits as incompetent, and admit the very scum of our cities to this privilege?

But these men are in new Territories. What if they are? They are Americans and not aliens; they are still on their own land, settling their own country, and carrying out and living according to the very geninus of our institutions. We would here ask, Is the States' soil consecrated and the Territorial common polluted ground, that the moment an American sets foot upon it he is disfranchised? If one, fifty, or five hundred men move from the State of New York to Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Utah, or any other Territory, does the very fact of their removal deprive them of their rights? They were sovereigns in the States, what are they in the Territories? Do they lose brains, rights, or caste by the simple removal? If they are not sovereigns in the Territories they assuredly do; for a man would be a fool to give up his rights and privileges, as a freemen, to settle a desert; to deprive himself of his social position for the uncertain honor of being shot by an Indian, or of being the pioneer of civilization, improvement and wealth, to build up a nation that would thus rob him of his rights. These antiquated old fogy doctrines may do for the ancient regime—the supporters of antiquated monarchy; but they will not go down with the free and enlightened citizens of this great Republic; they are contrary to the very genius of our institutions, are at variance with the Constitution, and are opposed to liberty, reason, and common sense.

It may be further urged, Does not Congress represent the people, and have they not a right to dictate to the people, through their representatives, in regard to Territorial matters?

We answer, They are the representatives of the people; but we opine they have no right to take from any portion of the people that which the Constitution does not authorize them to do. Neither would one portion of the people have a right to legislate for and deprive another portion of their rights. The Congress have power to legislate for the Territory and property, but not the people. But is not the other power implied? No; we consider it an assumption. Can Congress, by virtue of the right vested in it by the people, prevent the people in the States from voting for President? The answer is—No. By what right, then, do they assume it in the Territories? The Missouri Compromise itself was considered by Calhoun, and is considered by many of our wisest statesmen, to be unconstitutional, simply because it said what a people north of a certain line should adopt; and wise and prudent as that measure was considered by many, as tending to calm the troubled elements that then threatened the contending parties, yet, being based on false premises, it could not stand the sweeping influences of constitutional rights, and has been virtually destroyed both in California and Kansas; and however we may deprecate a state of things brought about by an apparent breach of national faith, yet when we probe this to the bottom we shall find that however well meant, that compromise was perhaps the innocent cause of the tremendous upheaving of society throughout the Union when a plain constitutional doctrine came to be applied. The State of California lays both north and south of the line; yet was she admitted, though her admission was in contravention of the Missouri Compromise; and Kansas, in the exercise of this doctrine, has virtually repealed the Compromise also.

We believe, as Americans, in holding inviolate the Constitution of the United States; that if that is the standard, the above is the true doctrine.

Castle Garden.

WE took the opportunity of visiting the Castle Garden on Tuesday evening, and must say that we were pleased with the arrangements made for the comfort and convenience of emigrants. Notwithstanding the strong opposition this measure has met with, we must say that it reflects the highest credit on the Commissioners of Emigration, and we have had some little experience in these matters. On our entrance we were received by Mr. Kennedy, the superintendant, who in the most gentlemanly manner took us over the whole of the premises and explained the various offices in a way that gave much satisfaction.

On our arrival we were first shown the landing, which is about one hundred feet or more in length, alongside of which lay the lighter for the conveyance of passengers from the ship—this lighter is run alongside the vessel, the luggage placed on the centre, the passengers being on either side, and then towed to the landing without trouble or expense to the emigrant; after the luggage is landed a ticket is placed on each package, and the passengers enter the Amphitheatre, give in their names, where from, where going, and what property they may have about them, all of which is entered opposite their names, and every information required readily given, thus preventing much confusion, expense and robberies that have previously taken place in the landing of the emigrants at this port.

We were also much pleased with the various offices about the building, such as washhouses, baths, &c., and could not help expressing our entire satisfaction at the whole of the arrangements within the walls of the Castle Garden.

On inquiry, we found that 8,145 persons had landed at this place during the month of August, and the amount opposite their names, reached the sum of $561,963 33, averaging per head, $68 14, and on the 1st and 3d of this month, the amount brought in or acknowledged, was $69,666 64. The system, economy, comfort, and cleanliness everywhere displayed, reflect honor upon its projectors, and manner in which those affairs were managed. In this great commercial city where, for years past, every inducement has been held out and encouragement given to the emigrant, yet on reaching the shores of this great Republic, the stranger has been left to wander or be picked up by the sharks that surround the ship the moment she appeared in sight—and not unfrequently stripped of every cent they brought to carry them to their journey's end. We can speak from experience, we know too well what it is; we have witnessed it, and congratulate the Commissioners, the Emigrant, and the City of New York on the great improvement in the landing of Emigrants.

WE learn by California papers that Bro. Hyde has been at San Francisco, and returned to Carson Valley, at which place he probably is at this time, having gone there under an appointment as Probate Judge for Carson county.

BRO. P. P. PRATT was at San Francisco at last accounts, about leaving for Salt Lake City. He is probably there ere this.

Shall Utah be Admitted to the Union?

THERE appears to be much anxiety expressed by certain wise and benevolent moralists of this very enlightened age of ours, as to the propriety of admitting Utah into the confederacy.

We presume their anxiety arises from a disinterested desire to warn people of their weaknesses, the great danger of contact with that distant portion of our country, and perhaps to recommend to Congress some plan of quarantine regulations to fumigate Utah, and all who shall be deemed, at Washington, worthy of the fraternal embrace. But, gentlemen, have you any constitutional objections to urge against the admission of Utah? If you have, you certainly have failed to show them.

The only objection we have seen urged against it, is their belief in polygamy.

"A rose by any other name will smell as sweet."

If the abuse of those pure principles that influenced the acts of righteous men in former days, is the question, then the objection refered to would millitate against all the States of the Union and some of those who make the laws, only they are not so honest about it as Utah.

Those who go so far out of their way to strike at Mormonism through the principle of polygamy, are like John Randolph, who, while in Congress, said he "would go a mile out of his way, to kick a sheep," because he was opposed to woolen manufactories; and so far as we have observed, those who are most vociferous in the cry of "mad dog" in ninety-nine cases out of the hundred, are themselves subjects, most liable to attacks of hydrophobia and more to be feared then "old tray" so much for the morality of the question, as for the legality of the admission, any child that can read, can show that the spirit of the constitution is diametrically opposed to any infringement upon matters of faith, it is a matter of supererogation in any one to attempt to make religious belief a criterion of admission, and we are free to say to such, it is none of your business.

The opinions of people drawn from flying reports and nursed by prejudice, against individuals or communities, from time immemorial has been the cause of more tyranny, bloodshed, and wrong to the innocent, then perhaps any other cause in the world; and allowing public report to influence the acts of government at the present time, is made more criminal, as none can excuse themselves from the want of easily obtained correct information relating to the Mormons, a community so often visited and so well known by thousands.

As the "wise man" says, he that judgeth a matter before he heareth it is a fool; which is often exemplified in relation to that people. If there can be no objections found in the Constitution against the admission of Utah by these "strict constructionists," we again unhesitatingly affirm, it is no more their business to object, then to interfere in the affairs of the most distant nation on the earth. Whatever rights are withheld or oppression exercised towards Utah, by General Government without better evidence of her disloyalty than has been shown, it will be done in direct conflict with the spirit of the Constitution and an assumption by Congress of a power never conceded to them by the States or people, and will affix the brand of perjury upon those who advocate such measures, for every citizen of the United States in his allegiance to the constitution is virtually committed under oath to his country, and before his God.

The United States lamentably stooped from the dignity of her high position, and permitted a foul blot upon the bright escutcheon of her liberties, when she looked with unpitying eye and pulseless heart upon the cruelties practised upon the Latter Day Saints by Missouri and Illinois, and descended still lower when she received of them, in the midst of their afflictions, five hundred men for the Mexican war, of those upon whom in their poverty they depended for support; and now, for this government to deny them either rights or privileges freely extended to others in every other instance, would be an act worthy of the reign of Robespiere, and bespeaking a future of equal terror and injustice for the country. There are those in the States who shrunk at that time from filling their quota of volunteers at their country's call, who now, like barking curs, are ready to snap at their heels while stepping up to receive, not a boon, but their rights as American citizens, of whom no impeachment has ever yet been found. Our fathers fought for the privilege we claim; our ancestors died contending for the rights of freemen to worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience. Thousands and thousands of the inhabitants of Utah hold the same strong claim; and who are you that would withhold her rights from her, because, forsooth, she dare retain a belief of her own?

Pshaw! such contemptible, narrow-souled hypocrites are not worthy to stand with Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of final settlement, for even the Scribes and Pharisees, whom Jesus rebuked, admitted the righteousness of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but these pious souls raise their eyes and hands in holy horror at the mere suggestion of admitting to this pure Confederacy a people who think it an honor to believe in the same faith and follow in the footsteps of men whom God respected and blessed. But enough of this.

We, American citizens, inhabitants of Utah's vallies, have not learned, as the duty of free men, to come bowing and scraping, like sycophants of despotism, or whining curs after the spoils of party, to get admission into the Union, or any other rights belonging to free-born citizens of the United States.

We have been, are, and shall continue to be loyal to our country and Constitution, whatever these bigoted, self-constituted judges of other's faith may do. And when parties and cliques have broken down all Constitutional barriers, and trodden into the dust the glorious emblem of liberty, there will be found a standard in Utah, from which will yet proudly float the flag of our Union, and the stalwart arms of an upright people to defend and sustain the greatest of all blessings—Freedom and the Constitution.

"Stolen Thunder."

MR. FRED. W. LANDER, late Civil Engineer, Pacific Railroad Exploration, in a late N. Y. Herald, charges Mr. C. A. Rand of Lancaster, Mass., (whose letter we published a few weeks since, on the Pacific Railroad) with publishing ideas dearly earned, and presented by himself to Gov. Stevens of Washington Territory, in Feb. 1854, and to Congress in November, 1854, and afterward published by him (Lander) in pamphlet form, and laid before both houses of Congress. We say, "honor to whom honor is due." He concludes his article as follows:

"I will conclude this article by saying that the route advocated by Mr. Rand, extending from some central position to the Mormon City, and thence by a forked road to San Francisco and Puget Sound, is that which I have invariably advocated; and as to his plan of construction, I offer the following extract from my report to the Congress of the United States, viz.:

"'As the result of such professional experience as I am able to bring to bear upon this subject, I wish definitely to state that the whole engineering question resolves itself into obtaining some rapid and effectual means of transportation along the route of the grand trunk road, that it may be constructed at all, and that the entire question of the construction of a first class grand trunk railway to the Pacific resolves itself into the prior construction of a railroad to the Pacific of less elaborated character.'"

I transmit documents to substantiate the above, and remain very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRED. W. LANDER,
Late Civil Engineer, Pacific Railroad Exploration.

Goods for Salt Lake.

WE learn by Mr. T. S. Williams, of the firm of Hooper & Williams, that they have started three trains of merchandise from Atchison, K. T., for Salt Lake, this season.

The first left June 15th, conducted by P. A. Jackman; second, July 16th, conducted by George Knowlton; third, August 1st, conducted by G. W. Moore.

In the three trains are employed 130 men, 1,074 head of cattle, and 107 wagons, containing about two and a half tons each. The cost and outfit, when off, amounted to about $187,000.

Mr. Williams is on his way to Washington on business, and does not expect to return to Salt Lake until the next mail from there arrives.

We learn further by Mr. Williams that the firm of Livingston & Kinkead have sent out about eighty wagons, comprising an adventure of about $140,000.

Also, Gilbert & Gerrish, fifty wagons; S. M. Blair about twenty wagons; Snow & Co. about twenty-five wagons; and Mr. Godby an eight or ten thousand dollar stock of drugs. Other stocks, amount not known.

Salt Lake Items.

LATE advices from the valley inform us that the Salt Lake Co. Court-house is being built in the Fourteenth ward. Messrs. Cuningham & Burton have contracted for the outside work for ten thousand dollars, to be enclosed before winter sets in, the finishing is expected to cost ten thousand dollars more, its size is not given. A portion of it is expected to be occupied as a county jail for the time being.

Capt. Ballo's Band are building a music hall in the Fourteenth ward, also near the Court-house. Success to Br. Ballo.

A two story school-house is being built in the Fourteenth ward, to connect with the two wings previously built. These wings are one story 20 by 30 on the ground, built at different times with a space left between them for the present main building.

These "in connexion" with other improvements tell well for the bishop and male members of the Fourteenth Ward "in very deed."

Utah News.

WE have cheering news from Utah by this mail to date August 1. The crops are doing well; through the indefatigable industry of the pleople and the blessings of God they will have a sufficiency, though obliged in many instances to plant their fourth crop.

The Fourth of July was celebrated at Salt Lake City with great eclat by the firing of guns, and display of mottoes and flags from all the public buildings, and the stores of the merchants, and a grand procession, including the Governor and suite with the United States Territorial officers, and strangers of distinction, and a fine display of military. After passing through some of the principal streets of the city they proceeded to the river (Jordan) where the Nauvoo Legion were reviewed by Gov. Young. At 12 M. the procession returned to the city.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENT.—Col. J. C. Little, H. S. Eldridge, S. A. Richard and H. W. Clawson.

We will give a more detailed account of the celebration in our next.

We learn with regret that fires have raged to a considerable extent in many of the Kanyons around Salt Lake valley, to the great distruction of wood and lumber, which will be seriously felt by builders in the city and surrounding country, from the scarcity and great difficulty of getting at lumber through those mountains. The cause of so great destruction is the extreme dryness of the season.

Arrival.

WE learn, per Star of Sept. 1st, that the packet ship Isaac Wright had arrived in safety. It will be recollected that we reported her clearance for Liverpool a few weeks since, with a number of Salt Lake Elders on board. We quote:

"ARRIVAL.—On the 15th inst., we had the pleasure of welcoming to these lands Elders Hector C. Haight, J. L. Smith, Daniel Davis, D. D. Curtis, William S. Muir, R. F. Neslin, John Scott, and John Kay, who were appointed at the last April Conference in the Valley to labor in Europe. They arrived per packet ship Isaac Wright, which left New York July 18, all in good health and spirits."

Death of Hon. Leonidas Shaver.

WE give the following extracts from the Deseret News, Extra, concerning the death of Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER:

In publishing the circumstances and ceremonies of the death and burial of Judge Shaver, who, beyond all kind of doubt or question, died of disease during the forenoon of June 29, 1855, we have been more minute than is customary, not only from a high personal regard to the deceased, but for the greater satisfaction of a large circle of friends both here and elsewhere, and more especially for the consolation of his far distant relatives, inasmuch as his last hours were providentially unattended by those soothing cares, attentions and amenities, which so many were able, skilled in, and ready to extend to smooth his pathway to the silent repose of the tomb.—[Ed. Deseret News.

INQUEST

On the body of Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER, who was found dead in bed at his residence in Great Salt Lake City, at 1 o'clock, P. M., on Friday the 29th day of June, 1855.

IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE LAWS OF UTAH TERRITORY.

Steps were immediately taken to hold an inquest on the body. The Mayor, Hon. J. M. Grant, acting, by virtue of his office, as Justice of the Peace, administered the usual oath to the following jurors:

William Bell,	C. C. Branham,
Wm. C. Staines,	Andrew Cunningham,
Daniel Carn,	Bryant Stringham.

At 4 o'clock, P. M., Dr. Garland Hurt, Indian Agent for Utah Territory, and Dr. William France, were called in to make an examination of the body.

The Mayor having requested Dr. Hurt, Judge Shaver's medical attendant, to state when he last saw the deceased, and to give his opinion respecting the cause of death—Dr. Hurt said:

"I saw the Judge some four or five days ago, and he then told me that he purposed getting bled. I remarked that I was fearful of the propriety of his getting bled copiously, as he was constantly under the necessity of taking stimulants to strengthen him and to alleviate his sufferings; and as he had brought himself under the influence and custom of taking stimulants, I believed in my own mind that the loss of blood would be calculated to prostrate his system, and I therefore discouraged the idea of his being bled, and he gave it up. I saw him again two days ago, and he was in better spirits, and said that he felt better. Since then I have understood that he had taken cold. He complained to me, some two weeks ago, of a violent pain in his ear; I looked at it but could not see any distinct marks of inflamation, that is to any great extent; and I arrived at the conclusion that if inflammation existed it was at the internal ear, or what is called the tympanum, and if the disease was seated there, the pain would be very violent indeed. Persons acquainted with the anatomy of the ear know that the tympanum is the part upon which sensation is felt, and by which hearing is produced, and of course that involves the nerves, and hence such a complaint must have acted powerfully upon the brain; but when I last saw him I had hopes that he would soon be better, from the fact that he seemed more cheerful. The disease of the brain would come under the name of Neuralgia. It is possible that some inflamation might have been there for some time, and have gradually increased, and it might be possible for it to have traveled until it reached the lining membrane of the brain. We are not certain that such was the case, but if it were so, the cause of death is easily explained. And it is more to be expected that this is the fact for the reason that I have before named, viz: that he has spoken of his suffering in the head, that he felt a deadly sensation in his head which extended to his ear.

* * * * * * *

Dr. France said: "I am aware, for a certainty, that there was no other disease that he was laboring under than the disease in the head; but he has taken opium, and if he were without it for any length of time it would produce those deadly sensations. I have used opium for years, and therefore know something about its effect. When persons take tobacco, or any other stimulant, and then are left entirely without it, or give it up altogether, a paralysis follows. I have experienced it under those circumstances; and this would produce inflamation in the ear, and it is possible that it might burst and discharge into the brain, and a very small portion of pressure upon the brain would produce death. His complaining of heaviness might have arisen from the formation of an abscess, or rupture, and this bursting and running in upon the brain would produce death."

Then follows the testimony of Edward Barr, W. C. Staines and Mrs. Dotson, which we have not room to give.

The decision was, that deceased came to his death from disease in the ear and head.

At a subsequent meeting of the Judiciary and members of the Bar, the following Resolutions were adopted:

Resolved—1st: That with feelings of sorrow, we deplore the sudden demise of our esteemed fellow citizen, and able statesman, the Hon. Leonidas Shaver who is now no more, but lies in the cold embrace of death; and, while we humbly bow to the mandate of Heaven's King, we mourn the loss of him we cannot restore.

Resolved—2d: That in his acquirements as a lawyer, jurist, statesman, and scholar—as a high minded and honorable man, whether on the bench, in his official capacity, or in private, and in his sterling integrity and impartial administration of justice in all cases—he had but few equals, and less superiors.

Resolved—3d: That for nearly three years he has been in our midst acting in his official capacity as Associate Justice of the Supreme and First Judicial District Courts of the United States with honor to himself and to the office he held, and with perfect satisfaction to the public, being ever attentive to the discharge of his duties, courteous to strangers, and forbearing, a friend of right, and meriting the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

Resolved—4th: That we condole with his surviving relatives in the East, or elsewhere, in his loss, and tender our unfeigned sympathies to them, and hereby inform them, that although he died far away from the land of his birth and the scenes of his childhood, which were bedewed with his earliest tear, yet he was gathered to his fathers in a land not of strangers but of true, devoted, and warm hearted friends who drop heart felt tears to his memory.

Resolved—5th: That we will attend his funeral in procession, this afternoon.

Resolved—6th: That in memory of the deceased the Judiciary and members of the Bar will wear crape upon the left arm, the usual badge of mourning, for thirty days, and that the Executive and other Federal officers of the Territory be respectfully invited to do the same.

Resolved—7th: That the Hon. Chief Justice Kinney be invited to deliver a eulogy upon the life of the deceased.

Resolved—8th: That the Court be requested to record the proceedings of this meeting, together with the eulogy (when delivered) in the Journal of said Supreme and Frst District Courts.

Resolved—9th: That the Editor of the "Deseret News" be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

J. F. KINNEY, Chairman.
W. I. APPLEBY, Secretary.

At the Council House, June 30th, at 11 A. M., the house being filled with citizens, a truthful and affecting eulogy was delivered by Judge Kinney, which we have not room to insert.

The following resolutions were then offered in behalf of the citizens of Utah by Hon. J. M. Grant, and unanimously adopted:

1. Resolved, In behalf of and for all the citizens of the Territory of Utah, that Leonidas Shaver, Judge of the First Judicial District of said Territory, did in life merit and have our full and entire confidence and esteem, as a wise and impartial Judge, who did mete out justice to all without courting favor, or dreading frown.

2. Resolved, That we will hold his name in honorable remembrance in all time to come, and when the Archangel's trump shall give the signal to bring the sleepers forth, those who hold the keys of LIFE AND DEATH will not forget Judge Shaver.

Professor Orson Pratt, by invitation, then addressed the audience, which address will be found on the outside of this sheet.

The Mayor then gave notice that the Battalion of Life Guards and the Nauvoo Brass Band were in readiness to attend the procession.

Col. J. C. Little, City Marshal, read the order of the procession.

Prayer was offered by President Brigham Young.

The congregation were dismissed at 1 P. M. Reassembled at 2. The Procession was formed by the Marshal at 2½ P. M., and proceeded to the burying ground in the following order:

1. Battalion of Life Guards on horseback, commanded by Major R. T. Burton.
2. Nauvoo Brass Band, which played solemn music.
3. Hearse bearing the Corpse, accompanied by pall bearers.
4. Intimate Friends.
5. Governor and suite, including the Hon. John M. Bernhisel, Delegate.
6. The Judges of the Supreme and Probate Courts, Secretary of the Territory, and Indian Agent.
7. Members of the Bar, and officers of the Courts.
8. Citizens.

After the coffin was lowered, and the lid of the outer box fastened by the Sexton, Mr. J. Gibson, prayer was offered by Col. George A. Smith.

Dr. Hurt made some very appropriate and felicitous remarks, and tendered his warmest thanks, as a fellow Virginian, for the kind and courteous ceremonies which had been extended in suitably depositing the remains of our highly respected departed fellow citizen.

The Mayor dismissed the spectators, and announced that the procession would return in the order in which it came. It was accordingly reformed by the Marshal.

Arriving at the Council House the Battalion of Life Guards opened to the right and left, and while the Band played, the procession passed between the ranks, and sadly separated to their places of abode.

Going to, at, and returning from the grave, the Band played appropriate music.

The Submarine Telegraph.

Loss of the Submarine Cable.

THE steamship James Adger arrived at this port yesterday morning from Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, after an unsuccessful attempt to lay the Submarine Telegraph Cable between Cape Ray and Cape North. The company which went out with her returned in excellent health and spirits, notwithstanding the disappointment they naturally experienced at the failure of the Expedition, and in spite of sundry inconveniences experienced from other causes.

The James Adger left New York on Tuesday, August 7, having on board a large number of passengers, guests of the Company, which last was represented by Mr. Peter Cooper and Mr. Cyrus W. Field, as Directors, and Messrs. Lowber and Morse, as Stockholders. The Company chartered the James Adger for the trip, at a cost of $700 per day, her owners paying all cost of pilotage, etc., and fully provisioning the ship. She was moreover bound, by her charter, to be subject to the orders of the Company, and to tow a ship a distance of seventy-four miles, more or less.

After touching at Halifax for coal, the James Adger proceeded to Port-au-Basque to look for the Sarah Bryant, arriving at this obscure but picturesque fishing station on Sunday the 12th of August.

The two vessels, owing to a variety of causes, did not get fully under way paying out the cable until the 28th. That same night, at twelve o'clock, it was signaled that the cable was injured, and both vessels halted to have it mended. By 8 o'clock A. M. on Wednesday it was repaired, and the vessels once more went slowly on their way, the cable being gradually paid out, and every one watching its progress with the utmost anxiety. At 1 o'clock P. M. the wind freshened to a gale, and the frequent signals for a halt from the bark betokened distress. The waves swept over her every moment, and as a considerable portion of her decks were open to admit the paying out of cable, fears began once more to be entertained for her safety. Every one was on deck on the James Adger, watching the fated ship. Between the two the huge hawser rose and fell with convulsive jerks, burying itself deep in the waves, when it slackened after every tug. The gale increased in intensity, and on the deck of the Sarah Bryant no man could stand upright. Behind her one could see, falling like a thin thread into the seething waves, the slender cable that still held its own.

Then came the signal that two of the wires had ceased to act. There was still a chance left that, by the bounty of Providence, the remaining wire might reach Cape North, or, at best, St. Paul's Island, in safety. Every heart was brim full of anxiety. It was no common loss that all sorrowed over by anticipation. One of the arteries of civilization was about to be severed. Still the cable held. All on board the Adger knew that Mr. Canning would give no order to cut the cable as long as a plank of the ship held together—yet all knew full as well the danger of thus being dragged sternmost to the sea, with exposed decks. Still the cable held. One daring man tried to speak to the Adger by climbing out on the bowsprit of the bark, but the storm was too high and hoarse, and his voice was drowned. He shook his head, however, three times, sorrowfully, and all then knew that the last wire had ceased to act. Still the cable held. The wind rose higher and higher. The bark pitched as if she would cleave her way to the bottom, and a gloomy anticiption sat upon every countenance. At last, at 4 o'clock P. M., Captain Poseland gave the fatal word. A few strokes of the axe, a snap, and 40 miles of the cable sunk forever in the sea.

The Crops.

FROM Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, reports are most flattering concerning the crops; wheat, corn, oats, potatoes, everything is yielding the greatest abundance. A gentleman from Michigan writes that the wheat crop in his county—Traverse—will average twenty-seven bushels to the acre. A writer from Wisconsin writes to the Democratic Press, Chicago, "Our harvest is more abundant then ever before in five years." Accounts are most encouraging from all parts of the Union.

"The United States Economist estimates the wheat crop of the United States and Canada at 125,000,000 bushels; the New York Courier and Enquirer at 175,000,000; and the Rochester Democrat puts it at no less than 202,000,000. Of course nobody can tell within a good many millions what the aggregate crop will be."

WE are happy to learn by a letter in the Deseret News from Bro. Orson Hyde, that the trip of Marshall Haywood to Carson Valley has much improved his health. Success attend him, and the rest of the brethren on that mission.

THE MORMON.

Letter from the Plains.

We give the following letter handed us by Brother Miles of Brooklyn, written by his son on the plains, thinking it may not be uninteresting to many of our readers unaccustomed to those little occurrences incident to a journey across the plains:

Nebraska Territory, near Fort Kearney, Sunday, June 16th, 1855.

Dear Father:

We left the camp at the Grove on Thursday the 7th of June, at noon, and travelled six miles and camped; the next day we made twelve miles, and the next eighteen, when we camped until Monday, since which time we have averaged nearly twenty miles a day. Yesterday we camped at noon, to allow the women to wash. The road we have travelled over is better than any I have seen east, perfectly even; the prairies are not perfectly level, but consist of long stretches, sloping off into valleys every mile or two, sometimes more and sometimes less; often, however, the descents are quite abrupt; this is along the road which generally winds so as to cross as few valleys as possible.

We crossed the Big Blue river on Friday at noon, when we met several Pawnee Indians; they are great beggars. We expect to meet one thousand of them to-morrow; they are preparing to go on a buffalo hunt. The old chief whom we met at Big Blue got five dollars out of the company for crossing his bridge on a creek twelve miles distant, but when we got there no bridge was to be met with; he wanted sixty dollars after the captain paid the five, saying, "Mormon rich."

The arrangements of the camp are as follows: get up at half-past three o'clock; all cows to be milked at four o'clock. The guard over the herd, who are always well armed, take the cattle out for feed and water at six or seven o'clock; the herd is driven inside the corral and yoked up, and we prepare to start. Each company of ten takes its turn to go first, bringing up the rear of the train the next day; at noon we halt for a couple of hours to get dinner and let our cattle rest and drink. We usually hold up at half-past six o'clock; the cattle are herded until nine, when they are driven into the corral. When the night guard comes on, there being two watches of three hours and a half each, three men guard the mouth of the corral, and three are put around the camp, the tents and horses being on the outside of the corral; each man's turn to guard comes every four nights, herding every three days about. Two nights we camped far from wood and water, having to lay in those articles at noon. On Tuesday night I was put on guard over the cattle from nine to half-past twelve o'clock, and they were left outside that they might feed, as we did not arrive until late; when I came on, the cattle were all lying down except two or three. About ten o'clock I caught about twenty oxen going by the lower end of my beat toward the creek a hundred yards distant; I spent considerable time in getting them back, and then found the whole herd in motion, moving outward to every point of the compass, each individual ox on its own hook, which made it more troublesome to drive them back; No. 5 calling to Nos. 6 and 4 for help, and they were also calling for aid; after spending a quarter of an hour's time in vain, I called to the serjeant of the guard to rouse the camp; the cattle kept moving away from the camp, eating while going though rapidly; we have chased them two or three miles away, lost sight of the camp, drove the cattle by guess (the sky being obscured by clouds) until we struck the creek, when the small portion of the camp which had been roused came to our assistance, and succeeded in getting them inside of the corral by twelve o'clock, not an ox being missing. The next day it rained, and we did not leave until noon. I forgot to mention, that I wondered at first at the cattle moving as they did, but ceased to do so when I learned that they had not been watered; the creek banks being too steep, they were after the dew, which covers the grass in large beads.

Persons belonging to the camp kill one or more rattlesnakes every day; I have not come across any alive yet. The prairie rattlesnakes are spotted different from the other kind (both kinds are found however,) and are smaller, but make less noise; they rattle when they hear anyone approaching, and generally endeavor to move out of the way. The moccasin snakes are just as deadly as rattlesnakes; I have seen two, but both got away; they are very large. We have not seen any game yet, except a few long-legged birds, and a sight by a few persons in camp of a squirrel or two. My rifle is not thought much of in camp, it is said to be for squirrel shooting; they have rifles in camp capable of shooting a large ball five hundred yards, they cost but twelve dollars new, and United States rifles that cost only ten.

Yesterday morning we met a train of about a dozen wagons, with horse teams, five weeks from Salt Lake; they were missionaries, and report very few Indians along the route, buffalo in millions however; report the road safe, but grass and water not so plentiful, and passing the May mail, we will come to Buffalo this week. Our company is mostly from St. Louis, and comprises an equal proportion of English and Americans.

Sunday, 24th.—Last Sunday evening I stood guard from nine o'clock to half-past twelve; I was then serjeant of the guard, my duty being to place and see after the rest of the guard. During the evening a thunder storm hung over our heads, and about twelve o'clock poured down a flood of rain on the high hill upon which we were encamped; and whilst the lightning seemed to rend the heavens, as it were, into huge fragments, I happened to be about fifty yards from the outside of the corral, when a dazzling flame played around my rifle barrel which projected groundward from under an India rubber cape, which kept the rain from the lock and the upper part of my body; at the same time forked streaks of lightning crossed each other in every direction, and run along the ground within a foot of me; this was accompanied by thunder, which seemed to burst all around me, and I felt something like a bullet crashing into my brain, in the neighborhood of the organ of ideality, on the left side; I gave one shriek, and unconsciously wheeled around several times, every idea being driven from my brain except the one melancholy thought that I had been struck by lightning and must die; at the same time that I felt the blow, every thing seemed to grow black before my eyes, which were open; all this occupied but a moment of time. When I had reeled around several minutes, with nerves unstrung, the guard who was nearly behind me came towards me, supposing I had been killed. For two days I felt a stupidity, as if one-half of my life was driven out of me.

I usually drive the team one-half the time, and either get in the wagon and sleep, or walk the rest of the time, help yoke up and unyoke, and assist in other wagon duties. My cheeks look quite filled up; I have had my feet wet for two days at a time, but have felt no bad effects; the dew will wet one's pants halfway above the knees in the morning, so thick does it hang to the leaves; the grass on the hills is generally from six to twelve inches high, but in the ravines much higher, and interspersed with bushes.

Last Thursday the company received orders from Elder Snow to await the arrival of three other companies that must be a week behind, in consequence of reports of Indian troubles. We stopped all day on Friday at the Little Blue river, along which we will travel a day or so yet. We only made fourteen miles yesterday, and camped; when we get near Fort Kearney we will stop longer.

We have had two deaths since we started, one the wife of the man that died near us at the Grove.

On Monday we came in sight of buffalo; there were several thousands visible, and hunters were sent out and succeeded in killing one three-year old cow; it was hauled into camp next morning, and divided around. The rule in camp is, that no one shall hunt without permission from the captain, this is to save game from needless destruction.

Two men went out on Monday with a pistol loaded with shot to hunt; shortly afterwards they were seen coming swiftly towards the camp, with a buffalo chasing them. Oxen were seen among Monday's drove, and a buffalo had to be driven from our herd; we have picked up several head of stray cattle already. It is now Saturday, and we are on the Platte within ten miles of Kearney. We travelled thirty-five miles from four o'clock, P. M., to five o'clock, A. M. this morning; we travelled all night, it being better for the cattle, as there is no water between this and the last camp.

I will give you some idea of our fare; we have bread and biscuit every day, sometimes pancakes, butter, molasses, sugar, tea and coffee, with applesauce and preserved grapes, for supper, and whenever eggs can be had at the trading posts; cakes, beans, peas, rice, mush, and pusley for greens, and good ones they are too. You know the low running vine fed to hogs—well, that is it. Ham and buffalo meat—the latter does not taste unlike beef, but is sweeter and juicier. Fish are not plentiful in the streams, but we capture one once in a while.

We shall not get in on account of delays until September; the captain will have to send by mail orders for flour to meet us between Laramie and the valley to supply many who are short in consequence of the dallying of the train.

We have seen no Indians since we left the Big Blue; the thousands we were told we should meet were no doubt scared from their village, which we passed, by the passing of the United States mounted soldiers a couple of days before us. The buffalo are down seventy miles below Kearney, which is lower than they have been for some years: the scarcity of water this year is the reason. A train of mule teams (one wagon of negroes) containing several families passed our camp on Wednesday morning from Salt Lake, where they had been Mormons, but were leaving for good.

Monday.—We are at Fort Kearney, which is no fortification proper, but a series of barracks, &c. A band of Cheyennes are camped near; they are said to be going to fight the Pawnees below.

Your affectionate son,

Edward A. Miles.

Twenty Miles West of Ash Hollow, August 14, 1855.

Elder John Taylor,

Dear Brother: I presume ere this reaches you, that you will have seen Elder Daniel Spencer, and learned of him the result of our labors in fitting out the emigration, and that Elder Milo Andrus, as well as myself, is homeward bound. The last company left Mormon Grove on the 3d inst., and Elder C. H. Bassett, and myself left for Salt Lake at 2 1-2 P. M. of the same day, in company with the mail, travelling in our carriage drawn by four mules. We passed the last three companies of our emigration before we reached the Big Blue, and Hooper and Williams' two trains at that stream. The five first companies are still far in advance of us. We expect to overtake their rear (Bro. Bablantyne's Co.) in the vicinity of Fort Laramie. We have been meeting and passing, every few minutes, trains passing up and down, conveying Government stores to the Forts.

There are now at Fort Kearny five companies of Infantry and two of Dragoons, also two companies of each at Laramie. Gen. Harney, with other troops, was expected at Fort Kearny about the 12th. The commanding officer at that place informed us that he was under orders to hold himself and forces in readiness for a sixty days' campaign, and was then weighing their rations into their wagons, and for that reason could not send an escort with the mail. We have, however, had no use for one, not having seen any signs of Indians since we passed the Pawnees, on Little Blue.

We understood at Fort Kearny that the expedition would be first directed toward the Sioux's, over in the direction of Fort Lapier, or between here and the Missouri River. We met the Salt Lake mail for July, on Little Blue, it had laid by twelve days at Devils Gate waiting for an escort. We hope to meet the August mail in a few days and I embrace this opportunity, while in camp, to drop you these few lines to send by it. * * * *

Wishing you and Elder Felt every needful blessing in your labors and triumphant success of "The Mormon," I remain your brother in the gospel of peace,

Erastus Snow.

Mormon Emigration.

Arrival of the Cynosure.

We feel great pleasure in announcing the arrival of the Cynosure in New York, on Wednesday morning, the 5th inst, after a tolerable good passage of 38 days. This vessel left Liverpool on the 28th of July, with a company of Saints to the number of 162, under the presidency of Elder George Seager. During the passage there were 3 deaths under 2 years, 1 birth, and 2 marriages.

On her arrival opposite the Battery the lighter was towed alongside the vessel, and the whole of the passengers, all in good health, with their luggage, were landed in about an hour and a half.

The following letter to the president of the company, by the surgeon, may serve as another evidence of the superior order maintained by our emigrants. The company express the best of feelings toward that gentleman:

Ship Cynosure, New York, Sept. 5th, 1855.

My Dear Sir: In parting with you I cannot but express my thanks for the very able co-operation you have afforded me on the late passage from Liverpool, in maintaining order and cleanliness among the passengers under your presidency, and only regret that some few others did not follow the example set by the Mormons.

I shall at any time be glad to hear of their well-doing, and beg you to tender my best thanks to the Presidents and Elders of the several wards for the assistance they have given me, under your direction, and to each and all of your party my most cordial wishes for their health, happiness and prosperity, and with them my kindest farewell.

Believe me, Very truly yours,

John G. Goulstone, Surgeon.

To Pres't. Geo. Seager.

The Yellow Fever.

In looking at the ravages of yellow fever, we can hardly fail to be surprised at the slight extent to which medical art has really progressed. In place of being able with unerring certainty to stop the fearful plague on being brought to confront it, physicians timidly experimentalize or pursue some uniform course without reference to the temperamental condition of their patients. It is only when the mind and body are understood in all their relations that medical art will deserve to rank as a science.

Sydney Smith below Par.

A man who laughs at things in general, will always have to some extent the advantage over them. In one of the lugubrious prophecies of this modern Solon, it is averred that the Union must fall to pieces for the reason that there can be no community of interest between the people on the Pacific and the Atlantic coast of this country. What a stupendous blunder, this! Why, the very principle of republicanism, the right of man to self-government—the highest of all principles and the strongest of all lands, is thus practically ignored. When Sidney Smith was gathered to his fathers, some ignorance with some event went with him.

One Week Later From Europe.

The Atlantic left Liverpool at 9 A. M. on the 25th ult., her regular day, and arrived here on the 6th inst.

The Ariel arrived off Cowes on the morning of the 23d, and the Washington at Southampton on the afternoon of the 21th.

No further events of any importance have occurred in the progress of the war, but there are copious details of the Sweaborg bombardment and the battle on the Tchernaya.

The Russian loss at Sweaborg is reported at only forty killed and one hundred and sixty wounded. The fortifications were destroyed.

Two British ships had fired on Riga without effect.

The squadron in the White Sea continues to destroy stores, &c.

The British in the sea of Azoff have blown up the sunken Russian ships of war.

Affairs before Sebastopol quiet and unchanged, as well as at Kars.

The Russian loss in the battle on the Tchernaya was nearly 4,000 killed and wounded, and of allies only 1,000.

The Russians were not pursued across the river, and hold their former position.

Various rumors were current of a new peace project.

The Liverpool cotton market was easier, but not quotably lower, closing quiet. Sales of the week 45,000 bales, including 4,500 to speculators, and 4,500 to exporters. Orleans fair quoted 7 1-8d.; Orleans middling, 6 7-16d.; Uplands, fair, 6 3-8d.; middling, 6 1-4d. Stock of American in port 372,500 bales.

Breadstuffs.—Brown, Shipley & Co. quote a slight advance, viz: 2s. on flour, 2d. a 3d. on wheat, and corn 6d. Western Canal flour is quoted by them at 40s. a 41s.; Philadelphia and Baltimore flour quoted at 40s. a 42s. Ohio, 42s.; white corn, 44s. a 45s.; yellow, 37s. a 38s.; mixed, 37s. 6d.—market closed quiet and steady. The weather has been unfavorable, with heavy rains.

Provisions.—Richardson, Spencer & Co. quote provisions generally unchanged. Market quiet. Rice a trifle lower. Naval stores steady and quiet. Consols for money 9 1-8.

Bell & Co. report American securities dull and unchanged. The bullion in the Bank of England had decreased £158,000.

General Santa Anna.

This singular man, and remarkable military hero, has again fled from Mexico his native country, before his enimical pursuers. He signed his abdication papers at Perote on his way from Mexico to Vera Cruz. He left Mexico the 9th of August with 14,00 men ostensibly to quell the revolution in Vera Cruz, at which place he arrived on the 14th and left on the 17th with his family for Havana.

This wonderful modern Mexican genius, has made his mark in the history of the world, not easy to be rubbed out. Of his early history however, but little is known except that he was born of obscure parentage in Vera Cruz in 1790, and joined the Spanish service in 1812, in which he distinguished himself. In 1821, he obtained the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, after which he with his command took Vera Cruz, of which he was made Governor by Iturbide. In 1822 civil war broke out, and Santa Anna at the head of the republican party overthrew the imperial dynasty of Iturbide. It was not until 1833 however, that he became President of Mexico.

The Constitution of Mexico had been adopted in 1842, and was similar to that of the United States, after which it had been modeled, but in 1835, our hero dissolved the federal compast, and declared himself dictator.

This gave umbrage to Texas, and the memorable Texian revolution ensued, during which time he was taken prisoner by Gen. Sam. Houston, but was soon after released.

In 1838, Prince De Joinville with the French naval force attacked Vera Cruz, which was defended by Santa Anna, on which occasion he lost one of his legs by a grape shot from the French ships.

In 1836 when war broke out with the United States, Santa Anna was an exile in Cuba, where he had been residing since he was driven from his country in 1844.

By pledging to the United States Government to bring about peace, he was permitted to land at Vera Cruz. He was warmly received by his countrymen, and immediately took up arms with them against the United States. Soon after the treaty of peace was signed between the two governments he was again obliged to leave Mexico. He remained in this last retirement in New Grenada, until 1852, when he took advantage of an insurrection headed by General Uraga and Woll, and again returned to the Mexican Capitol. He was as usual well received, and looked upon as the only person able to give quiet and stability to the country. During this last administration, he constituted himself President for life, which was ratified by a number of the States. But again he has had to leave under one of those periodical revolutions indigenous to the soil of the Mexican character. We understand that our hero has not long since made extensive purchases of property in New York, and we should not be surprised at the arrival of his honor and suite in this section to take up his residence in the great American Metropolis.

A Kingdom for a Horse!

The cry of a "kingdom for a ship!" from Santa Anna, revives to thought that of Richard. Foiled in an attempt to obtain a war ship at Vera Cruz, the late dictator of Mexico embarks on board a war vessel, and sets sail to unknown parts. What blessings or what curses follow him do not fall to our lot to relate. Distracted as Mexico is by ideal schemes, and her people subjected to the ambition of heartless rulers, these revelations but appear as successive diversions of the popular spirit, to result in slightly diversified forms of rule. Mexico now begins to be looked at as the proper prey of the fillibustero party, but the extraordinary exhibit of comparative tranquility after this sudden flight of Santa Anna awhile confounds schemes of annexation of conquest.

Foreign Policy of the United States.

The Westminster Review has a ridiculous article under the above heading. It seems to have but one term, wherewith to face the debit side of John Bull's account—that term, unprincipled aggression. Commercial influences as generated by the traffic between this country and England, are declared to be not much in favor of the latter. According to the horoscope in the neighborhood of St. Stephens, we are rivals, and so look at war, protocals, diplomatic overreaching and other leaky tricks, in the light of profit and loss. When out of harm's way, we can blow and bluster to any extent. We are the peace party at all prices. Chances of dispute are multiplied by our rapaciousness, and though our social resemblance to the English is recognized as great, it is declared to be greater with the subjects of the Czar. A "nice calculation" has yielded to the writer more slaves in these States and in Russia than in all the rest of the world; also, the same proportion is discovered between Russian proprietors and serfs, as between Southern planters and slaves. There is the slight difference of not having a Czar, &c., &c. Now, all this farrago of nonsense comes from a journal that assumes to lead the public mind; it is a charge of covert warfare as against a kindred race, and in favor of the enemy of both people, without reference to any higher principle than self-interest. Unquestionably we possess the higher ground of argument. If we are to side according to kin, we forego at once the principle of republicanism.

The hackneyed remarks repeated in the pages of the Westminster, that were England sunk in irremediable misfortune, the United States would come to her aid, assume quite another state of things, in which England would be the scourged and not the scourger, and when she might be supposed to have profited by the act of retribution, and be prepared to enter on a course of national morality.

It is here affirmed that "there can be no interference by America in European affairs, until the slavery problem be solved." There is a mightier problem to be solved before that; it is how this country, so soon as the banner of true independence, indicating the intelligent acceptance of the first principles of self-government, shall be raised in Europe—the full issue being thus presented between despotism and freedom—it is to remain an apathetic witness of the blood shed at ambition's shrine. We have no objection, however, at any time to "Hecatomb's assinine," and could well range the concocters of this article to the victims whom, when Apollo found them gambolling at the very eve of sacrifice, he laughed at as "vigorous, wanton brutes."

Yellow Fever in Norfolk.

The fever still continues to rage in Norfolk and Portsmouth, we hear from all parts loud and we think just complaints of ministers deserting their flocks; this however is perfectly natural, such characters have always been in the world, we remember reading "The hireling fleeth when the wolf approacheth; because he is an hireling; but the good shephard giveth his life for the sheep. The Norfolk Argus thus describes the scene:

So general and precipitate a flight as that which has recently taken place here, we never expected to witness. The thought of disease and sudden death, the knowledge of an existing pestilence, we know are appalling to sinful man, and an instinctive love of health and life naturally hurries him away beyond the limits of the destroying agent to a purer atmosphere and a healthier clime. The strong man in his prime dreads the presence of an air that poisons the life-blood and kills in a day; and even the sincere Christian feels solemn when he reflects upon so sad a visitation from the great Being in whom he trusts and whom he loves. But should Christians fly too from the danger at the very time when their presence is most required?—when their words of advice, instruction and comfort are so necessary?—when nursing and watching are so much needed?—"I was sick and ye visited me not."

Surely if there ever was a time when the true disciples of Christ should be active and in the line of their duty in Norfolk, this is the time; for verily, "the pestilence walketh in darkness and the destruction wasteth at noonday." Our friends, neighbors and acquaintances are prostrated by disease, burning with fever and tortured with pains; and how important the soothing words of a Christian at such a time! But among the most panic-struck, the most alarmed, the most eager to hasten away, there were hundreds of professors; and many indeed who are wont, in days of healthfulness, in times of happiness, peace and prosperity, to make the loudest profession to assume the most grave and religious aspect, and to be most ready and forward to give words of reproof for delinquency, and apparently unchristian conduct. Do not some show now, that they have a beam in their eye? There is a deep meaning in this conduct.

Of the four or five members of the clergy who have hurried off it may not become us to speak now. They know their duty. Perhaps this is not the time to indulge in vituperation, for, although the disease is not as bad as reported, God's chastening hand is upon us. Our stores are nearly all closed; our streets are deserted; the dead and the dying are around us; excepting the rattle of the physician's coach, hearses and hospital wagons, the silence in our streets is often absolutely oppressive. The frantic wail of the widow falls dolefully on the ear; the piteous cry of the orphan rings out shrilly and dies away upon the night wind; friends are parting, perchance till the judgment; and the lamentation of the mother is heard, like "Rachel, weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted because they are not." It is indeed a sad and gloomy time in our loved and devoted city; and how much the calamitous visitation is increased in its intensity by the inconsiderate flight and absence of religious friends, and the deprivation of their consolatory instructions and prayers in the room where death claims and seizes his victims, we leave to the imagination of the panic stricken Christian professors, who have sought a more salubrious climate and a less dangerous location.

We heard one of our ministers say, who has not proved recreant to the high and holy duties of his office, and who goes willingly to the abodes of woe and death, that he found a woman whose husband had just died of the fever. She too was attacked, and no one was there to nurse and comfort her. He looked out and the neighbors had all gone—their doors and windows were closed." "Here," said she, "I must lie and die alone." And there was a boy with the black vomit, and no one but a young sister to attend him during the slow and sad hours of a long night of pain and sorrow.

A Slave Catcher.

We learn by telegraph from Boston that arrests have been made there of parties charged with being concerned in fitting out the schooner Mary E. Smith as a slave trader to the African coast. This vessel was watched by the Customs' officers at that city for a good part of last week, but finally made good her escape from the port. She is owned nominally and commanded by a man who professes to be a native of Louisiana, and who speaks English very imperfectly. Off Wednesday or Thursday of last week she cleared for Montevideo without difficulty, but after the clearance was effected the suspicions of the Custom-House officers were excited, and men were sent to watch her. She was found in an obscure part of the harbor, with her appearance very much altered by painting and a change of rig. During Friday and Saturday she took on board about sixty water casks and a quantity of plank supposed to be for the construction of a slave deck.

On Saturday a warrant was issued for the arrest of the captain and mate, which was put into the hands of officers, four in number, who with a boat's crew from the revenue-cutter boarded her on Saturday evening as she was going down the harbor with a steam-tug. They found on board of her a numerous crew, who displayed revolvers and bowie-knives, and finally compelled the officers to return in the steam-tug without making any arrest. Information of the affair has been sent to Washington, and an attempt may be made to overhaul the craft at Montevideo, in case she goes there at all, which may reasonably be doubted. She will probably make direct for the African coast. What will be the result of the arrests now made at Boston remains to be seen.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Praying No Crime.—An officer once complained to Gen. Jackson that some soldiers were making a great noise in their tent.

"What are they doing?" asked the General.

"They are praying now, but have been singing," was the reply."

"And is that a crime?" the General demanded.

"The articles of war order punishment for any unusual noise," was the reply.

"God forbid that praying should be an unusual noise in any camp," said Jackson, with much feeling, and advised the officer to join them.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest-in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui rè gle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? On devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils: "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorté à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Poetry.

The following lines were composed for the occasion, on board the ship Cynosure, bearing a company of one hundred and sixty-two Latter Day Saints from Liverpool to New York:

The Cynosure.*

The Cynosure is under weigh.
The sailors shout their cheers;
Nobly she does her helm obey,
As on her course she steers.
The Saints rejoice,
With heart and voice,
(Their trust in God is sure;)
While seas ring out,
With song and shout,
On board the "Cynosure!"

Shine on, shine on, thou polar star,
Thy beams propitious shed;
To guide our ship to realms afar,
And gladness round us spread.
Our ship's thy name,
Bright be thy flame,
While forth our pray'rs we pour;
And seas ring out,
Our song and shout,
On board the "Cynosure!"

Father! to thee all praise and pray'r,
Now by thy saints be giv'n;
That we, thy Gospel blessings share,
To lead us up to Heaven.
O holy Lord,
Who by thy word,
Hast made thy promise sure;
To thee we'll raise,
The song of Praise,
On board the "Cynosure!"

We pray for wives and children dear,
And friends we've left behind;
That o'er the seas they soon may steer,
A home with us to find.
We Mormons then,
Will shout again,
In Zion's land secure;
And bless the day,
We sail'd away,
On board the "Cynosure!"

Joseph Linfitt.

DISCOURSE

BY PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG,

Tabernacle, July 8th, 1855.

REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.

I will make a few remarks upon the same subject that was presented this forenoon, although there were many leading items in those remarks that would require a considerable length of time for me to give my views upon them, and to explain fully what I understand in relation to them. My brethren, who rise here to speak to the people, are also aware that it is impossible to fully explain to the congregation all the points that may be alluded to in a discourse.

Hence I design to speak a few words concerning the Kingdom of God. Not that I would disagree in the least from the remarks made by Bros. Grant and Pratt, or that we differ in our views upon this subject. It is an extensive one, and the usual time never permits a person, in one short discourse, to fully explain such subjects as were presented for our edification this morning. I noticed throughout the remarks of both of the brethren that they did not make sufficient distinction, nor make it plain to the minds of the people that the kingdom of God would be different, in a certain sense, from all other kingdoms and empires upon the earth; this was for the want of time. In public speaking a man's mind is often led from one idea to another, branching to the right and to the left upon matters and points that need explanation, and I presume this is more particularly the case upon the subject of the Kingdom than any other.

If you and I could live in the flesh until that kingdom is fully established, and actually spread abroad to rule in a temporal point of view, we should find that it will sustain and uphold every individual in what they deem their individual rights, so far as they do not infringe upon the rights of their fellow creatures. For instance, if the Kingdom of God was now established upon the continent of North and South America, and actually held rule and dominion over what we call the United States, the Methodist would be protected just as much as the Latter Day Saints; the Friend Quakers, the Shaking Quakers and the members of every religious denomination would be sustained in what they considered to be their rights, so far as their notions were not incompatible with the laws of the Kingdom.

The Calvinist would be equally preserved in his rights whether he believed, wished to believe, or said he believed and did not believe, that God has fore-ordained whatsoever comes to pass, and has dictated from all eternity the acts of the children of men down to the end of time, embracing every sin and every transgression of the law that has ever been committed upon the earth, from the first creation of man upon it; the Kingdom of God will protect him in that belief, and extend to him the privilege and the liberty of believing that, as fully as we should have the liberty of believing the opposite.

Again, men would come and say, "we believe in the Christian religion, but we firmly believe that the God we wish to serve has no eyes, no ears, no mouth, no head, and no body, that he is not composed of elements, that he has no parts nor passions, that his centre is everywhere, his circumference nowhere; we firmly believe in serving such a God." That people would be preserved in their rights just as much as the people who believe that God lives, exists, and has the power of seeing, hearing, knowing, and understanding, and that we are organized and fashioned after, or, in other words, made like unto him.

This is what the Kingdom of God will do for the inhabitants of the earth. If a sect should arise and say, "we do not believe in a God at all, and only in that which we can see, hear, taste, and handle, that which we can understand, or in gods our own hands have made, which we have carved out of wood or stone, or cast from metal, we believe in serving only such god; we have many gods, we have a god for every element that has come within the range of our understanding, one for the air, the water, the sun, the moon, the different planets, and the stars; we have a god of war and a god of peace, which we carve out of wood and stone, or make them of silver, gold, iron, or copper, and put them in our temples. These are the gods we worship, and do not believe in any other god or gods." Even they would be preserved in their individual rights and belief, as much so as the Latter Day Saints.

When the Kingdom of God is fully set up and established on the face of the earth, and takes the pre-eminence over all other nations and kingdoms, it will protect the people in the enjoyment of all their rights, no matter what they believe, what they profess, or what they worship. If they wish to worship a god of their own workmanship, instead of the true and living God, all right, if they will mind their own business and let other people alone.

As was observed by Bro. Pratt, that Kingdom is actually organized, and the inhabitants of the earth do not know it. If this people know anything about it, all right; it is organized preparatory to taking effect in the due time of the Lord, and in the manner that shall please him. As observed by one of the speakers this morning, that Kingdom grows out of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but it is not the Church, for a man may be a legislator in that body which will issue laws to sustain the inhabitants of the earth in their individual rights, and still not belong to the Church of Jesus Christ at all.

And further, though a man may not even believe in any religion, it would be perfectly right, when necessary, to give him the privilege of holding a seat among that body which will make laws to govern all the nations of the earth and control those who make no profession of religion at all; for that body would be governed, controled, and dictated to acknowledge others in those rights which they wish to enjoy themselves. Then the Latter Day Saints would be protected, if a Kingdom of this kind was on the earth, the same as all other people.

It was observed this morning that the government of the United States was the best or most wholesome one on the earth, and the best adapted to our condition. That is very true. And if the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of the United States, and of the several States were honored by the officers, by those who sit in judgment and dispense the laws to the people; yes, had even the letter of the law been honored, to say nothing of the spirit of it, of the spirit of right, it would have hung Governors, Judges, Generals, Magistrates, &c., for they violated the laws of their own States.

Such has been the case with our enemies in every instance that this people have been persecuted. If a person belonging to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was guilty of stealing while living in the States, or if any of that Church were found guilty of murder, or any other transgression of the civil law, they ought to have been tried by law, and have received the punishment affixed to the crime. Did any of the Latter Day Saints object to that? No, not one. Joseph the Prophet never objected to it, but on the contrary he urged it, prayed for it, and wished the Church to be delivered from all transgressors.

While we were in Illinois, if every transgressor of the law of that State, in our community, had been taken up and tried and punished, every Saint would have said, "Amen, we are better without than with them." So we say here, we are far better off without wicked men than with them. I would rather be in the midst of these mountains with one thousand, or even five hundred men who are Latter Day Saints, than with five hundred thousand wicked men, in case all the forces of the earth were to come against us to battle, for God would fight the battles of the Saints, but he has not agreed to fight the battles of wicked men.

I say again that the constitution and laws of the United States, and the laws of the different States, as a general thing, are just as good as we want, provided they were honored. But we find Judges who do not honor the laws, yes, officers of the law dishonor the law. Legislators and law makers are frequently the first violators of the laws they make. "When the wicked rule the people mourn," and when the corruption of a people bears down the scale in favor of wickedness, that people is nigh unto destruction.

We have the proof on hand, that instead of the laws being honored they have been violated in every instance of persecution against this people; instead of the laws being made honorable, they have been trampled under the feet of lawyers, judges, sheriffs, governors, legislators, and nearly all the officers of the government; such persons are the most guilty of breaking the laws.

To diverge a little, in regard to those who have persecuted this people and driven them to the mountains, I intend to meet them on their own grounds. It was asked this morning how we could obtain redress for our wrongs; I will tell you how it could be done, we could take the same law they have taken, viz., mobocracy. and if any miserable scoundrels come here, cut their throats. (All the people said, Amen.)

This would be meting out that treatment to wicked men, which they had measured to innocent persons. We could meet them on their own ground, when they will not honor the law, but will kill the prophets and destroy the innocent. They could drive the innocent from their homes, take their houses and farms, cattle and goods, and destroy men, women, and children, walking over the laws of the United States, trampling them under their feet, and not honoring a single law.

Suppose I should follow the example they have shown us, and say, Latter Day Saints do ye likewise, and bid defiance to the whole clan of such men? Some who are timid might say "O! our property will be destroyed, and we, shall be killed. If any man here is a coward, there are fine mountain retreats to those who feel their hearts beating, at every little hue and cry of the wicked, as though they would break their ribs.

After this year we shall very likely again have fruitful seasons. Now, you cowards, if there are any, hunt in these mountains until you find some cavern where no person can find you, and go there and store up grain enough to last you and your families seven years; then when the mob comes take your wives and your children and creep into your den, and there remain until the war is over.

Do not apostatize to save your lives, for if you do you are sure to lose them. You may do some good by laying up a little more grain than you want, and by handing out a biscut to a brave hearted soldier passing by, hungry and fatigued. I could hide myself in these mountains and defy five hundred thousand men to find me. That is not all, I could hide this whole people, and fifty times more, in the midst of these mountains, and our enemies might hunt until they died with old age, and they could not find us. You who are cowards, lay up your crops another year and hide them away.

You know that almost every time that Gentiles address us in public they are very mindful to caution the Latter Day Saints "not to fight, now don't fight." Have we ever wanted to fight them? No, but we have wanted to preach to them the gospel of peace.

Again they say, "We are afraid that you, Latter Day Saints, are becoming aliens to the United States; we are afraid your hearts are weaned from the brotherhood down yonder." Don't talk about weaning now, for we were weaned long ago, that is, we are or should be weaned from all wickedness and wicked men. I am so perfectly weaned that when I embraced Mormonism, I could have left father, mother, wife, children, and every relation I had, and am weaned from everybody that will turn a deaf ear to the voice of revelation. We are already weaned, but remember, we are not weaned from the Constitution of the United States, but only from wickedness, or at least we should be. Let every man and woman rise up in the strength of their God, and in their hearts ask no favors of the wicked; that is the way to live, and then let the wicked persecute, if they choose.

Are we going to fight? Not unless they come upon us and compel us either to fight or be slain.

Last fall we were visited by some of the brotherhood from the East, and I said come in my brother, come in my house, this is Mrs. Young, this is my daughter, and this is sister so and so. Wilford, Joseph, and William, open your houses and let these eastern brethren stay with us in comfortable quarters this winter. Wilford turns his family out of a fine house into a log cabin, to let the brotherhood in. Not a person, with but one exception, opened his house for their accommodation, without first asking my counsel. I said, Yes open your houses, turn out your wives and children, and let the brotherhood come in, and prove to the old stock that we are their friends if they will do anything like what is decent, and we furnished them comfortable winter quarters.

Directly the brotherhood began to pass around, and, as Bro. Grant said to day, with a glove half way on their fingers, apparently so virtuous in the day light that they durst not touch a female's hand with theirs, unless gloved but under the shadows of night they would go whisking around, here and there, saying, "Won't you take a slay ride with me this evening? Step into my carriage, and take a ride."

These proceedings were directly in the face and eyes of this people. What did they do when I introduced them to a wife, a daughter or a sister, with all the grace, politeness and kindness that could be expected from any man? As quick as my back was turned, it would be, "Miss, or Madam, I want to get in bed with you. Look here, you come to my office, won't you? I have a good bed there."

I will cut the matter short and ask once for all, did they return the compliment, and without exception reciprocate the kindness and courtesy with which they were invaribly met? No, they did not, at least not all of them, for several returned evil for good, and introduced wickedness and corruption into our midst, and the Lord knows that we already had enough of that to contend with.

Past experience has taught the brethren that in future it will probably be the best policy to let soldiery quarter by themselves, and I am perfectly willing.

If persons come here and behave like gentlemen, they shall enjoy their rights, and we will enjoy ours, or fight to the death. Let the laws of the United States be honored, and the laws of the individual States, and we will do as the Kingdom of God will do, protect everybody in their rights.

The experience of the last winter has taught us a good lesson, and we hope it has taught the people generally a lesson. I am troubled all the time with "Bro. Brigham," and "Pres. Young," when at the same time some who use such expressions will have one arm round my neck loving me dearly, and the other around the neck of a scoundrel, trying to get Christ and Belial together; this I cannot endure.

If a man will keep a grog shop, and permit wickedness to fester around him, or do anything else that is contrary to the Christian religion taught in the New Testament, I say to all such, either stop it or take your property and leave, for our laws do not tolerate it, and we will put them in force against you. As to again suffering the wickedness and misrule of foul spirits that come into our midst, and are treated by us as gentlemen, I will not.

I will say to such official gentlemen as tell and boast "what the General Government is going to do," or "what they themselves will do," or "what they want to do," thinking to terrify the Latter Day Saints, that you might as well undertake to terrify the Almighty on his throne, as to terrify a Latter Day Saint of the true stripe, one who has the true blood in him.

True, there are many timid persons; timidity or fear is a weakness of the flesh, but to that person who has so far obtained the victory over the flesh as to know how God is dealing with the people, there is no terror, for he is just as ready to die as to live, just as the Lord pleases; his object is to ho right, and he fears not.

The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Jesus taught his disciples to pray that the kingdom of heaven may come upon the earth, and when it does come, you will find that it will be very different from what many people are imagining or expecting it will be. Its spirit will be to preserve their individual rights sacred to the inhabitants of the earth.

What is the foundation of the rights of man? The Lord Almighty has organized man for the express purpose of becoming an independent being like unto himself, and has given him his individual agency. Man is made in the likeness of his Creator, the great archetype of the human species, who bestowed upon him the principles of eternity, planting immortality within him, and leaving him at liberty to act in the way that seemeth good unto him, to choose or refuse for himself; to be a Latter Day Saint or a Wesleyan Methodist, to belong to the Church of England, the oldest daughter of the Mother Church, to the old Mother herself, to her sister, the Greek Church, or to be an Infidel, and belong to no Church.

As I have just stated, the Lord Almighty has organized every human creature for the express purpose of becoming independent, and has designed that they should be capable of receiving the principles of eternity to a fulness, and when they have received them unto a fulness they are made perfect, like unto the Son of Man, and become Gods, even the Sons of God.

I am so far from believing that any government upon this earth has constitutions and laws that are perfect, that I do not even believe that there is a single revelation, among the many God has given to the Church, that is perfect in its fulness. The revelations of God contain correct doctrine and principle so far as they go; but it is impossible for the poor, weak, low, groveling, sinful inhabitants of the earth to receive a revelation from the Almighty in all his perfections. He has to speak to us in a manner to meet our capacities, as we have to do with these benighted Lamanites; it would be of no benefit to talk to them as I am now speaking to you. Before you can enter into conversation with them, and give them your ideas, you are under the necessity of condescending to their low estate, so far as communication is concerned, in order to exalt them.

You have to use the words they use, and address them in a manner to meet their capacities, in order to give them the knowledge you have to bestow. If an angel should come into this congregation, or visit any individual of it, and use the language he uses in heaven, what would we be benefitted? Not any, because we could not understand a word he said. When angels come to visit mortals they have to condescend to, and assume, more or less, the condition of mortals, they have to descend to our capacities in order to communicate with us. I make these remarks to show you that the kingdom of heaven is not yet complete upon the earth. Why? Because the people are not prepared to receive it in its completeness, for they are not complete or perfect themselves.

The laws that the Lord has given are not fully perfect, because the people could not receive them in their perfect fulness; but they can receive a little here and a little there, a little to-day and a little to-morrow, a little more next week, and a little more in advance of that next year, if they make a wise improvement upon every little they receive; if they do not they are left in the shade, and the light which the Lord reveals will appear darkness to them, and the kingdom of heaven will travel on and leave them groping. Hence, if we wish to act upon the fulness of the knowledge that the Lord designs to reveal, little by little, to the inhabitants of the earth, we must improve upon every little as it is revealed.

When he tells you how to purify your hearts, purify them. He says to the nations, "I send unto you my servants, I raise up unto you a prophet, and call upon you, O inhabitants of the earth, through him, to repent of your sins." Do the people believe it is right to repent of their sins? Yes. How shall they repent of them? By forsaking them. If they will do this the Lord will teach them how to become Saints. In what manner? By calling upon them through his servants to be baptized for the remission of sins if they want to have their sins remitted, if they wish to be washed and made clean.

But before they go into the waters of baptism they must forsake all their wicked practices, and covenant before the Lord to leave them for ever behind them, saying, "now we will go and serve the Lord our maker." Has the Lord called upon the inhabitants of the earth in this way? Has he not taught you and me to become Latter Day Saints in this way? He has. Are we saints still? When we first received the spirit of the Gospel, what was the world to us, with its grandeur, its riches, its elegance, its finery, its gaudy show, its glittering array of paltry honors, its empty titles and every thing pertaining to it? Nothing but a shadow, when the Lord opened our minds and by the visions of his spirit revealed to us a few of the things he had in reserve for the faithful, which were only, as it were, a drop in the bucket compared to the ocean yet to be revealed. Yet that little made our hearts leap for joy, and we felt that we could forsake every thing for the knowledge of Jesus Christ and the perfections that we saw in his character.

Are you Saints still? If you are not, repent of your sins and do your first works. Has the Lord taught you how to consecrate yourselves to his service, build up his kingdom and send forth the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, that others may rejoice in the same spirit that you have received, and enjoy the same things you enjoy? Yes, he has; and what more? A great deal more. He has taught you how to purify yourselves and become holy, and be prepared to enter into his kingdom, how you can advance from one degree to another, and grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, until you are prepared to enter the Celestial kingdom; how to pass every sentinel, watchman and gate keeper.

Then go and build the Temples of the Lord, that you may receive the endowments in store for you and possess the keys of the eternal priesthood, that you may receive every word, sign and token, and be made acquainted with the laws of angels, and of the kingdom of our Father and our God, and know how to pass from one degree to another and enter fully into the joy of your Lord. Latter Day Saints, do you live to this, do you seek after it with all your heart? You are aware that the Lord is able to reveal all this in one day, but you could not understand it. The Elders who have preached abroad, and the Sisters who have taught their neghbors at home, know by experience that this is true.

When your minds have been lighted up with the candle of the Lord, and you have been able to speak forth the great things of God, things that were beyond the capacities of the people to receive, you have felt your ideas apparently rebound or return to you again. So it is with the Lord, he would be glad to send angels to communicate further to this people but there is no room to receive it, consequently he cannot come, and dwell with you. There is a further reason, we are not capacitated to throw off in one day all our traditions, and our prepossessed feelings and notions, but have to do it little by little. It is a gradual process advancing from one step to another, and as we lay off our false traditions, and foolish notions we receive more and more light, and thus we grow in grace; and if we continue so to grow we shall be prepared eventually to receive the Son of Man, and that is what we are after.

I wish to proceed a little further with regard to the kingdom of God. The principles, doctrine, germ, and I may say, marrow of that kingdom are actually planted on the earth, but does it grow to perfection at once? No. When wheat is planted and germinates, you first see the blade and by the head forming in the boot, from which in due time it bursts forth and makes its appearance. When this kingdom is set up on the earth, and spreads, its condition is happily set forth in the toast that was given here on the fourth, viz:—"May the wings of the American Eagle spread over the nations, and its down fall on America." Suppose the Kingdom of God is compared to the American Eagle, when it spreads over the nations what will it do, will it destroy every other bird that now flies, or what will fly? No, but they will exist the same as they do now. When the Kingdom of Heaven spreads over the whole earth, do you expect that all the people composing the different nations will become Latter Day Saints? If you do you will be much mistaken.

Do you expect that every person will be destroyed from the face of the earth but the Latter Day Saints? If you do you will be mistaken. Many of our Elders labor under these erroneous expectations when reading over the sayings of the Apostles and Prophets in regard to the coming of the Son of Man. In one verse the Prophet will be describing the second coming previous to the commencement of the Millennium, and perhaps in the same verse he will describe a scene that will take place after the Millennium, and when the earth will be cleansed from all wickedness, after satan has been let loose a little season and had another tour upon it, and after it is renovated and becomes sanctified, and is like a sea of glass, as John describes it. Will this be in the Millennium? No. But the order of society will be as it is when Christ comes to reign a thousand years; there will be every sort of sect and party, and every individual following what he supposes to be the best in religion, and in every thing else, similar to what it is now.

Will there be wickedness then as now? No. How will you make this appear? When Jesus comes to rule King of Nations as he now does King of Saints, the veil of the covering will be taken from all nations, that all flesh may see his glory together, but that will not make them all saints. Seeing the Lord does not make a man a saint, seeing an angel does not make a man a saint by any means. A man may see the finger of the Lord, and not thereby become a saint; the veil of the covering may be taken from before the nations and all flesh see his glory together, and at the same time declare they will not serve him. They may perhaps feel something as a woman in Missouri did who had been driven four times, and when she was about to be driven again, she said, "I will be damned if I will stand it any longer; if God wants me to go through such a routine of things he may take me where he pleases and do with me as he pleases, I won't stand it any longer."

When the nations shall see the glory of God together, the spirit of their feelings may be couched in these words, "I will be damned if I will serve you." In those days the Methodists and Presbyterians, headed by their priests, will not be allowed to form into a mob to drive, kill and rob the Latter Day Saints; neither will the Latter Day Saints be allowed to rise up and say, "We will kill you, Methodists, Presbyterians, &c.;" neither will any of the different sects of Christendom be allowed to persecute each other.

What will they do? They will hear of the wisdom of Zion, and the kings and potentates of the nations will come up to Zion to inquire after the way of the Lord, and to seek out the great knowledge, wisdom and understanding manifested through the Saints of the Most High. They will inform the people of God that they belong to such and such a church, and do not wish to change their religion.

They will be drawn to Zion by the great wisdom displayed there, and will attribute it to the cunning and craftiness of men. It will be asked, what do you want to do, ye strangers from afar? "We want to live our own religion." Will you bow the knee before God with us? "O yes, we would as soon do it as not," and at that time every knee shall bow and every tongue acknowledge that God who is the framer and maker of all things, the governor and controler of the universe. They will have to bow the knee and confess that he is God, and that Jesus Christ who suffered for the sins of the world, is actually its Redeemer; that by the shedding of his blood, he has redeemed men, women, children, beasts, birds, fish, the earth itself, and every thing that John saw and heard praising in heaven.

They will ask, "if I bow the knee and confess that he is that Saviour, the Christ, to the glory of the Father, will you let me go home and be a Presbyterian?" Yes. "And not persecute me?" Never. "Won't you let me go home and belong to the Greek Church?" Yes. "Will you allow me to be a Friend Quaker, or a Shaking Quaker?" O yes, anything you wish to be, but remember that you must not persecute your neighbor, but must mind your own business and let your neighbors alone, and let them worship the sun, moon, a white dog, or anything else they please, being mindful that every knee has got to bow and every tongue confess. When you have paid this tribute to the Most High who created you and preserves you, you may then go and worship what you please, or do what you please, if you do not infringe upon your neighbors.

The brethren who spoke this morning had not time to explain these points, and I have only just touched upon the subject.

The Church of Jesus Christ will produce this government and cause it to grow and spread, and it will be a shield round about the Church. And under the influence and power of the Kingdom of God, the Church of God will rest secure and dwell in safety, without taking the trouble of governing and controling the whole earth. The Kingdom of God will do this, it will control the kingdoms of the world.

When the day comes in which the Kingdom of God will bear rule, the flag of the United States will proudly flutter unsullied on the flag staff of liberty and equal rights, without a spot to sully its fair surface; the glorious flag our fathers have bequeathed to us will then be unfurled to the breeze by those who have power to hoist it aloft and defend its sanctity.

Up to this time we have carried the world on our backs. Joseph did it in his day, besides carrying this whole people, and now all this is upon my back, with my family to provide for at the same time, and we will carry it all and bear off the Kingdom of God. And you may pile on state after state, and kingdom after kingdom, and all hell on top, and we will roll on the Kingdom of our God, gather out the seed of Abraham, build the cities and temples of Zion, and establish the Kingdom of God to bear rule over all the earth, and let the oppressed of all nations go free.

I have never yet talked as rough in these mountains as I did in the United States when they killed Joseph. I there said boldly and aloud, 'If ever a man should lay his hands on me and say, on account of my religion, "you are my prisoner," the Lord Almighty helping me, I would send that man to hell across lots. I feel so now. Let mobbers keep their hands off from me, or I will send them where they belong; I am always prepared for such an emergency.

I have occupied time enough; may God bless you. Amen.

Col. Kinney's Report of Progress.

San Juan Del Norte, Aug. 18, 1855.

My Dear Maury: I have just completed the purchase of thirty millions of acres of the most magnificent country in the world—a country which, I venture to predict, will, before many months, teem with the enterprising and industrious masses of the United States and Europe. Messrs. Shepherds and Haly have disposed of their entire right, title and interest in the celebrated "Mosquito Grant" to me for $500,000, and I shall proceed at once to invite that emigration which is needed for the development of its unequalled resources. There are three hundred miles of seaboard belonging to it, and further back, an elevated table land, healthy in climate, and capable of producing every staple of the tropic or temperate zones. Sugar, coffee, tobacco, cochineal, and cocoa, are produced in abundance, in addition to the substantial supplies of cattle and grain required by the exigencies of a large population. Much of the land in the interior extends along the banks of the San Juan river, the navigable highway of interoceanic commerce, whence produce can be shipped, without change of transportation, to any port on the globe. I need not say anything of the mining resources. The old Californians who have lately been up there, say they are the best in the world, and a large accession is looked for from their State. The coal of Boca del Toro, towards the Southern boundary, which has been opened of late, is so situated, on account of the deep water, that steamships of the largest class can come alongside and load up without further trouble. I hope, therefore, that you and your friends may be early upon the ground to share in the prospective advantage of this vast addition to the field of American enterprise. Excuse the haste with which this is written, and believe me, truly your friend, H. L. Kinney.

"Oh I pant for glory, I pant for renown," said a ragged man of genius to his friend.

"Well, if you're a pair of pants, you'd better put them on," was the cool and relentless reply.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 15, 1855.

Soldiers, Attention!

Glorious Victory to our Country's Arms!

A New Art in War! Brevets to Libertines!

Deeds at Arms, in Assaults upon Female Virtue, to be Immortalized with the Heroes of our Nation's Fame!—"Good Looks" and "Seduction" to supplant Bravery and the Sword.—FIVE POINTS, instead of WEST POINT, the National Military Academy for the Instruction of our Youths.—Beauty and Booty the Countersign.—A Magnificent Proposition to add to our National Glory. By James Gordon Bennett, of the New York Herald.

THE world, in general, and the inhabitants of New York City and vicinity in particular, were startled from their lethargy, and utterly astounded by the appearance in the New York Herald of the 8th inst., of the most magnificent and stupendous plan of military tactics ever before developed in the art of war.

Mr. Bennett has placed the War Department, at Washington, and the civilized world, under the deepest debt of gratitude; that with all their respect for genius, and love of virtue, forbids the hope of their ever being able to cancel, and ranks that noble, gentlemanly, high-minded editor with the highest geniuses and intellects of the age; and wherever or however Mr. Bennett may have heretofore had the misfortune of being whipped, the mode of tactics in the present proposition, displays a practical knowledge of the art, and will place him unrivalled as a candidate for a lieutenant generalship; and we will here add for the benefit of our readers, that the New York Herald, long known for its purity and virtuous proclivities, adds a new lustre to its brilliancy, as the vehicle of this last, most ingenious expedient of virtue, for the suppression of the horrid vice of Mormon Polygamy. Let the honorable, high-minded officers of the army, and the brave soldiers of their command, take notice of the honor intended them by the hero of an hundred—whippings.

"This is momentous news, and very significant, withal. It shows that the Mormon women are ripe for rebellion, and that a detachment of the regular army is a greater terror to the patriarchs of the Mormon Jerusalem, than Indians, or drought, or grasshoppers. It indicates the way, too, for the extinction of the peculiar institution of Utah. The astonishing results of the expedition of Col. Steptoe, in this view, do most distinctly suggest the future policy of the government touching this nest of Mormons. It is to send out to the Great Salt Lake a fresh detachment of young and good looking soldiers, and at the end of two or three months order them off to California, and replace them by a new detachment at Salt Lake City, and so on, till those Turks of the desert are reduced, by feminine desertions, to the standard Christian regulations of one wife a piece. Unquestionably, if, with a taking detachment of the army in a new and showy uniform, the President were to send out to Utah at this crisis of impending famine, a corps of regular disciplined women's rights women, to lay down the law to their sisters among the Mormons, they would soon compel the patriarchal authorities of Salt Lake to an exodus to some other region beyond the reach of our gallant army and our heroic warriors in petticoats, who know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain them."

* * * * * * *

"The hint should be appropriated by the administration; for if, under the doctrine of 'squatter sovereignty' we cannot constitutionally reach this crying evil of polygamy at the Salt Lake, we must reach it by stratagem. We recommend, therefore, to the President and the Secretary of the Interior the policy of detailing another detachment of troops to the Great Salt Lake City, with the auxiliary force of a half dozen regular women's rights women, whatever the cost; and thus, even should the grasshoppers fail to conquor the Territory in the expulsion of the saints, the work may be done by a revolution among the wives of the Apostles."

Such, then, is the modus operandi proposed. Gentlemanly debauchee officers are to be sent out; good looking ones, that they may be the better able to seduce, and take away from vice the horrid appearance it would have, dressed in another garb; after these shall have performed their work of misery and death, they are to be recruited by others—fine, dashing, "young, good looking fellows"—who will be quite competent to deceive and destroy; real Christian gentlemen, "with a new, showy uniform," who will be able to corrupt the daughters of Utah, and to introduce Christianity in all its beauty, as practised in the United States. They are to take with them a number of pulls—"women's rights women,"—who are to assist in their conversion, and "show them their rights," that the inhabitants of Utah may have ocular demonstration of the beautiful working of monogamic Christianity, and be brought back to "the standard Christian regulation of one wife apiece," and as many misses or fast young women as suits our convenience; that a deadly blow may be struck at the virtue of Utah; that she may be crowded with voluptuaries and prostitutes, like all other good Christians States and cities; that debauchery and corruption may run riot; that we may have our procuresses, pimps, cyprians, hotel accommodations, and houses of assignation; that virtue, chastity, and purity may be banished from Utah; that our daughters may be prostituted and our wives debauched; that we may have our nymphs du pave, our Five Points, our Randall's Island, our infanticides, our Madam Restells, our maisons d'accouchment, our diseases, doctors, and hospitals, and all the other appliances of a good Christian monogamic community; that when officers, lawyers, judges, soldiers, and Gentiles in general go to Utah, they can find the same conveniences and accommodations that are to be met with everywhere among the virtuous Gentile monogamic Christians; and all this glory is to be achieved by the gallant officers and soldiers of our army, under the auspices and direction of James Gordon Bennett.

Now we have all along known that these abominations existed; we have known of the corruptions that everywhere abound; we knew too that Mr. B., and other men of the world, were not ignorant of this matter; but we were scarcely prepared for such astounding developments. We should have thought that policy at least would have dictated another course; but monogamy, in the person of J. G. Bennett as its principal advocate, has exposed itself in all its naked, loathsome, hideous deformity. We not only knew that these abominations existed, but we also knew that editors and ministers were acquainted with them, and that their talk about the evils of polygamy was either so much cant and hypocrisy; or, to put the most charitable construction upon it, that men acquainted with the evils in their midst, and with their own abominations, have thought that polygamy was only introduced as a blind to carry out more effectually these degrading, corrupting, damning sins that everywhere abound, in every shape, under every guise, and among all classes of community among monogamists. With those who hold the latter opinion we have sympathy, and although they have misunderstood us, yet where there is honesty of purpose, as we believe there is in many of the above, we cannot but esteem them for their good intent however wrongly applied; and although we think that men ought to be informed upon a subject before they express their sentiments, yet we admire an honest man and a frank expression of opinion, and much more when that opinion is indignantly expressed against adultery and lasciviousness; the social, moral, loathsome, cursed, damning sin of Christianity. What man is there, that is a man, and that possesses the most latent principle of virtue in his bosom, but must be pained to the core to see the withering, blighting influence of this insidious, deadly evil! Who that is at all cognizant of the extent of this vice but would blush for his sex and for the weakness and depravity of poor, feeble, erring humanity! Henry Ward Beecher, at his Church in Brooklyn, September 2d, in speaking of the beneficial influences of family and church restraint over young men, in view of the corrupting influences that everywhere abound, said: "That it would be a mercy if one half of the youths that entered the city were butchered at the threshold before they entered, that they would die at least in purity," and that "if parents wished to send their sons into the city without putting them under some such restraints," as those mentioned, he "would advise them to put them into a cannon and shoot them in." We thought, Is it possible! We knew things were bad enough; but were hardly prepared for such a statement. We could not help thinking, What of the daughters! There is a duality here, it is not a single operation alone. The statement of 29,000 sufferers in a year on Randall's Island from debauchery, as reported by Dr. Carnochan, may be accounted for in some such way. These things are assuming a fearful attitude, and ought to claim the attention of every philanthropist. Few, however, have the hardihood or virtue to attack them. Mr. Fowler, in this city, is most prominent; from our heart we wish him success, and every other man who is seeking to stop this crying, deadly evil. But what are we to think of a man who is publishing a popular journal, who publicly and unblushingly advocates seduction, and openly proposes the introduction of characters into a Territory for the avowed purpose of seduction, prostitution, and infamy; for the purpose of corrupting the Mormons and reducing them to our standard previous to their overthrow? He unblushingly says "our policy is to send out to Great Salt Lake a fresh detachment of young and good looking soldiers, and at the end of two or three months order them off to California, and replace them by a new detachment at Salt Lake City;" and further adds, "if, under the doctrine of 'squatter sovereignty,' we cannot constitutionally reach this crying evil of polygamy at the Salt Lake, we must reach it by stratagem." His stratagem is that of Balaam towards Israel, who, when he could not curse them, sought to destroy them by debauchery; but if he lives long enough he will find out as that prophet did, "that there is no divination against Jacob nor no enchantment against Israel. Who shall curse whom God hath not cursed, and who shall destroy whom God hath not destroyed?" Mr. Bennett's tactics have not been so successful against the Mormons as that of his prototype Balaam was against Israel. We hope for the sake of humanity they never may. If ever such principles obtain in Utah as those he advocates we shall want to find another place. In carefully looking over, however, we find no very special evil done. Out of the females that went we could not count over from five to ten that could be considered prostitutes. What hand these officers had in bringing this about they must decide. If they were corrupted by those men, there is so much misery and so much to deplore: if not, their loss is our gain. For Mr. B. vauntingly to talk of reducing the females of Utah by this system is folly; for there are thousands going to one leaving; besides, it would be too expensive; if it cost Government from two to three hundred thousand dollars to perform this little mission, how much it would take to corrupt the whole, together with the accessions, we leave Mr. Bennett to calculate. After deducting, therefore, some few seductions, we look upon this Christian, corrupting remedy of Mr. B.'s as an escape pipe or safety valve to purify the Mormons of some of the latent, lingering, corrupting remains of monogamy which they carried with them from the Christian world, and that could not flourish among the Mormons; there was no chemical affinity. When the Gentile Christians went among them, kind clove to its kind; adulterers and adulteresses joined in harmonious conclave, and flourished under the protecting ægis of the United States flag and the motto of Christianity: debauchery revelled unstrammelled in a small, a very small, circle; some honorable and gallant Christian gentlemen, a few white women—some the victims of seduction—and a few squaws, after exhibiting their beastly wantonness and degradation, and kicking up "merry hell" for awhile, prancing and bubbling in the sight of all, deceiver and deceived, adulterer and adulteress, seducer and seduced, floated off to that hot-bed of vice and caldron of corruption—California—to revel undisturbed in their infernal saturnalia; giving Utah a Gentile lesson of Christianity and virtue, and purging her from these vile, legalized, gallant excrescencies, together with their corrupted and corrupting dupes, and leaving her in the possession of a more calm, tranquil, pure, and unpolluted atmosphere. She may have lost in the dross that has floated away; but we think has gained in the purity of the tried metal.

Your chances will not be so good next time, Mr. B., when you try the effects of your Bacchanalian orgies and Romish saturnalias. Your disciples have lost caste, both among the squaws and whites. At the time when the soldiers abused their squaw prisoner, in regular open Neroic style, until she was nearly killed, an Indian present who witnessed their brutal violence, indignantly exclaimed, "Is this the way you treat your prisoners?" And then the Fillmore affair, wherein your gallant and honorable gentlemen sought to cheat the squaw of Ammon out of her looking-glass, paints, and blankets, after degrading themselves, save the mark—the squaw, and the nice exposure before court, when this matter was brought by her to obtain redress, militates very much against your new policy. We think you are most unfortunate in your plans, and that you are in bad repute among the Indians, and that neither soldiers, officers, nor professional gentlemen, will have an opportunity of corrupting the squaws. We suppose their virtue is not very impregnable, but then they have some sense of honor. As it regards the white ladies, so degrading has been the course pursued by many of those gentlemen departed, that, we are informed, it has become a disgrace for a Mormon lady to be seen in their company. They can't shine. So notorious has been the conduct of some of them, that even the little boys in the streets titter when they see them pass, drop their tops and marbles, and sing the song of the "blankets." They have certainly placed those who may follow them in a most unenviable position; and although we would be the last to blame a community for the acts of a few of its members, and know that thousands repudiate it, yet when we consider the circumstances, we speak plainly, and desire to be understood. We are to consider that some of these men were "honorable men"—that they were polite, polished, professional gentlemen, and that their brutal, degrading conduct is openly advocated as a manly act by a paper that boasts a "wider circulation than any in the United States;" and that the same paper impudently and unblushingly advises a fresh recruit of profligates, for the openly avowed purpose of corrupting them, by debauchery and seduction, preparatory to their overthrow. We are not surprised at Gov. Young, when he says:

"There is one great difference between the Mormons and the Gentiles, and upon natural principles—that is, to outward appearance—in reality all the difference there is, though we are laying a foundation for another state of being. Are they men of virtuous character who talk so about the Mormons having more wives than one? How odious it was last winter, in the sight of certain men who were here, to think that we had more lawful wives than one; yet they would creep into your houses, and try to coax your wives and daughters away from you. What for? Was it to make them more honorable, to give them a better character in the midst of the inhabitants of the earth, sustain them better, and make them more comfortable, and acknowledge them? No; they wanted to prostitute them, to ruin them and send them to the grave, or to the devil, when they had done with them.

"I do not know what I shall say next winter if such men make their appearance here as were some last winter. I know what I think I shall say if they play the same game again. Let the women be ever so bad, so help me God, we will slay them.

"If any wish to go to California we will send a company of them off. That is my mind; and perhaps some few ought to go, for they are indeed bad enough.

"There are some things I learned when I was in the south country lately, which I do not wish to mention, because of the friends of those girls who are gone; but when they passed through the southern settlements they were weeping all the time, and they are perhaps now in their graves. The men who coaxed them away did not intend to take them to California. If any offer to do the same things again in these mountains, 'judgment shall be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet;' and they say that Brigham does not lie.

"If they want women to go to California with them, we will send a company of the same stripe, if they can be found, and then both parties will be suited to and for each other. I would rather follow her to the grave, and send her home pure, than suffer my daughter to be prostituted. I will not suffer any female member of my family to be polluted through the corruptions of wicked men."

Be assured the Mormons will not put up with every thing; they are not lost to the feelings of self-respect and honor; they can be, and are, loyal and patriotic; but they can't be made to pander to the low bestiality of wordy, professional, corrupt patriots, however gallant its name or specious its appearance. They may be neighborly and courteous to strangers and open their houses and hearts to receive them; but that friendship betrayed and that hospitality abused, and they will repel with indignant disgust the heartless villains, who, under the garb of friendship, would seek to besmear the houses of their hosts with their loathsome acts. They may be, and are attached to the constitution and institutions of the United States, but they will reject with disdain the official scoundrel who seeks to pollute the virtue of their wives and daughters; whether wearing epaulets or ermine, or clothed in the euphoneous title of honorable; and give him a speedy pass to "kingdom come." There is no people in the world who would esteem more, constitutional legal authority when personated by virtue and honestly carried out; but woe be to that man who would seek to reduce the females of Utah to the level of millions of the degraded christian daughters of Eve, whether Corporal, Colonel, General, Judge or President. We repudiate, abhor and despise the loathsome corruption that exists among the Gentiles, as the prolific fruits of monogamy and a false Christianity; we contemn the heartless villains, wherever found, who are prowling around to despoil female virtue, and then forsake the wretches they have destroyed. We have separated from them in the hopes of living according to the order of God; purifying ourselves from their corruptions, and carrying out the pure principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the spirit of the Constitution and institutions of the United States. We have done this in all good faith before God and man. We have religiously maintained the Constitution and institutions of our country; neither is there a more loyal and patriotic people to be found in the United States. We have introduced a system of morals and virtue that we defy the world to equal; but we say to all concerned, don't try your paltry polluting schemes among us, lest Utah should be nauseated and vomit you out. We love virtue and admire patriotism, but we despise a gilded villain, a corrupt judge, and a perverted and debauched statesman.

The Foreign News.

THE foreign news is, in many respects, ominous. The flames of war are swiftly though stealthily extending their circuit, and no region or country can be said to possess assured security of exemption from its disasters. Daily the distant purposes of the war become more vague, and the issues opened up more numerous. When shall the end be? is a question suggestive of thought of powerful and terrible import. The "Four Points," like the magnetic needle when brought within the polar zone, are already losing their virtue, as the objects to which they point are being realized. Prussia denies that her acceding to them could, in anywise, bring the contest to a close. They will not square the circle of growing complications. Men are getting more and more on the night side of the question, statesmen find refuge in generalities, and none assume the pioneership of opinion. With Turkey it is a necessitous war, with France an ambitious war, with England a war of expediency. Turkey endures the brunt of the contest, and finds the three powers fast settling upon her territory, and with all their own lavish expenditure, fast eating up her substance. Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together. In relation to this great drama of history, men will only learn its secret in its end. One effect it will certainly have—that of making Russia more self-sufficient in all the arts of life, and tending to destroy bigotry and intolerance among the nations of the earth. England priding herself in her application of the mechanic arts, and her superior power of availing herself of all the discoveries of science, finds herself, as in the case of the bombardment of Sweaborg, liable to be outmatched by the subtle Muscovite, ready to profit by suggestions not only from her errors but her successes, and steal a march by adopting improvements her encumbrous tardiness delayed but just too late. With no mortars to supply those destroyed by use at Sweaborg, she was unable to follow up her success, or to anticipate any advantage from this new species of warfare, the Russians having been effectually forewarned in the way of defence. Then, again, by strategy, the powerlessness of war steamers to destroy the Russian gunboats, has been effectually demonstrated in a voluntary encounter off Cronstadt. English rule so long threatened in India, and which a system of oppression elsewhere detailed has brought into dishonor, is being attacked in the heart of one of its presidencies, and this evidently from a sense of wrong and determination to throw off the incubus on the part of the people, and without suspicion of any instigation from Russian agents. We know not what hostilities are being carried on at this moment in the Northern Pacific at the mouth of the Amour. The world is being engirdled by war. Nothing will be decided but the destruction of tens of thousands, the misery of millions, and the inculcation of bolder and freer opinions respecting the rights of man. Priestcraft has always inclined to leave men in statu quo. The shackles of centuries are not to be loosed without many a pang. The freedom of truth is not to be acquired but by a conflict with all the powers of darkness, and various agents will be employed in the struggle.

"Nation must rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom," and the ancient barriers and bulwarks, wherewith the human mind and body has been enchained, must be broken before there can be room for the full development of truth; and however painful the struggle, come it must. Thrones must be cast down, nations overthrown, and empires crumble to pieces to make room for other great and important events that are ordained before the consummation.

The whole number of land warrants issued at Washington up to August 30 is 25,000. At the present rate of issue it will take three years to complete the whole amount authorized under the act of the late session.

Yellow Fever in Virginia.

NORFOLK contained 16,500 souls, and Portsmouth 8,122. The entire populatio o Norfolk, Portsmouth and Gosport, at the breaking out of the fearful pestilence, was probably 36,000,—only about 3,000 souls are now left,—death already probably destroying upwards of 1,000 within the last two months.

The collections in this city in aid of the sufferers by the epidemic in Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., amount to $15,994 50. Five thousand dollars were remitted on the 10th inst., which, with the sums previously sent, make the whole amount of remittances by the committee $14,500.

This tells well for New York, but it is said that Baltimore, and Philadelphia, are still ahead of this great Metroplis that should of course be a pattern to its smaller neighbors.

Departure for the Plains.

WE were much pleased with a visit from our old friends and "compagnons du voyage" to the East, Martin H. Peck and his son Edwin, who are now returning to their home in the mountains, in company with T. S. Williams. They have been preaching through several of the Eastern States, building up and re-organizing a few of the smaller branches, principally in Vermont and Massachusetts, and have baptized about twenty persons. They have our best wishes for a speedy and prosperous journey, and a happy re-union with their families and friends in Deseret.

Delegate from Utah.

WE learn by recent advices from Utah, that it is expected the Hon. J. M. BERNHISEL will be again elected Delegate to Washington, from Utah Territory. We are glad to hear it, and believe the selection to be a good one, and one that could not be bettered.

The friends of the Doctor may look for his appearance. Others can't tell who will be elected until after the election; the Mormons can.

"Go Thou and do Likewise."

WE have recently had the pleasure of indulging our alimentiveness on some of the finest ripe plums, (of the different gages,) that we have had this season. They were presented to us by our friend GEORGE H. TAYLOR, from Haverstraw. We also had a present of a fine lot of peaches, from our friend SHERELL, of this City. The donors have our thanks and kind regard for these demonstrations of their good feelings.

Grove Meeting.

HORNERSTOWN, N. J., Sept. 6, 1855.

BROTHER TAYLOR: By request of the Saints, I forward you a line or two, to inform you that we are going to have a "Woods Meeting," in the woods of CHAS. HOPKINS, near the village of Hornerstown, Ocean county. You will please publish the same in the "Mormon." Your presence is particularly requested on the occasion; also, your Son George, and Bros. Felt and Robbins, and as many of the Saints as can attend.

The Meeting is to commence on Thursday, the 20th inst., and continue over the following Sunday.

Yours very respectfully,

ROBERT IVINS.

Lady Literature.

How heartily sick we have become of books and stories written for women and by women. Our magazines and annuals are flooded by silly and unmeaning tales of crushed hopes, broken hearts, and early graves which follow in the train of misplaced or unrequited affection. Love—the earnest and the true—is an ennobling and beautiful passion. It refines, elevates, and purifies all who truly feel its power; but its maudlin counterfeit is as disgusting as it is enervating; and is calculated to demoralize and destroy the minds which so greedily devour its details.

Hearts may be sorely tried by the death or falsehood of those beloved, but we doubt much if they are ever broken by such a cause. A true soul, though it may sorrow over fair hopes fled, rarely lies down to mope its life away in repining; but clad in the armor of endurance and hope, returns to the battle of life with renewed vigor, and, by fighting bravely, drives away dark shadows and unhappy memories. Deep grief gives no utterance to its agony.

"They love least who let men know their love," and we never hear of men's sighing over a disappointment of the heart without feeling that his passion is of a spurious character, and his head of a poor quality.

Let us have no books for women save those that men also may read with pleasure and profit. If we must have stories, let us have healthy and invigorating ones,—true histories of earnest men and women. Let us hear of their suffering in some good cause, of their labors in some noble work that has for its object the elevation or relief of suffering humanity. Let us hear something of their life—not Love—struggles. Let us learn how they have warred and conquered the obstacles which have beset them in their onward march toward greatness, or a pure life; and their conflict and victory may inspire with new energy many a desponding soul, and give new strength to the weary and toilworn.

Though the genius of woman may differ somewhat from that of man, the difference is not a displeasing one. Women have written books which if they do not equal the productions of men in profound thought, argument or research, surpass them in delicacy of conception, brilliancy of imagination, and in their power to entertain and impart instruction.

Why women entitled by their intellectual gifts, to respect and admiration, confine their pens to descriptions of vine-clad cottages, blue eyes, golden ringlets, faded cheeks, drooping forms, and things of like character, we cannot conceive, for, besides doing a positive injury to those who read them by filling their heads with nonsensical ideas of love and marriage, which in this matter-of-fact-world can never be realized, they are ruining their own reputation. For who of those whose approbation is worth having can entertain any respect for the genius which displays itself alone in mawkish stories as unreal as they are silly.

Publishers always send us all books of this sort as soon as they are issued, for which they wish a notice. Whether they fancy that we, being a woman, can appreciate nothing higher; or whether they rely on our womanly kindness to give a helping hand to that which is too weak to help itself, we know not; but one thing we have resolved upon, not to allow our desire to return kindness for kindness (if this may be called such) to induce us to notice anything of such a nature otherwise than in terms of censure that it merits. We claim to have a soul as well as a small amount of brains, and prefer not having either insulted by the proffer of stuff which cannot do aught but sicken and disgust.—[Woman's Advocate.

We believe with Miss McDowell, that those high wrought tales that only serve to divert and concentrate the imagination on chimeras, never to be realized in nature, are a bane to society. Their tendency is to disqualify the reader to grapple with the matter-of-fact world in which we live; and they not unfrequently cause a dissatisfaction with realities, to a degree that renders life miserable, and death, as statistics show, too often preferable.

Correspondence.

From Our Kansas Correspondent.

ATCHISON, K. T., Aug. 23, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Again has the spirit of communicating what is in me taken a violent hold of my arm, and I sit down to write you to let you know, in the first place, that Mormonism is not now what it was six weeks since in this region; at that time the hills around about Mormon Grove were literally covered with canvas, but now, only one rag is left, and that is occupied by three families, but never mind, they have a house up, and only needs covering, for them to move into it. There are, out of the thousands that have been here this season, only a few, probably thirty souls left; but I believe that is a principle in Mormonism, to get in an entering wedge, then when the log is well cracked to put in a glut, if the time has not come to open it entire, and I suppose that those that are here are the glut, as they are pretty tough, hard sticks, with Mormonism in the centre, and if the devil gets its out of them, I pray that he may have some hard knocks for it.

The corn and vegetables at Mormon Grove, on the P. E. F. Farm, look well, and should the Lord hold off the frost until 1st October, there will be an average good crop of corn and vegetables, for sod land. The P. E. F. Farm contains 160 acres of as fine upland as you will find in Kansas Territory, enclosed by a sod fence, with ditch three and a half by three and a half feet; about half of the enclosure was broke up this spring, and the half section of land on which it is situated is worth $1,500 extra of the improvements, which are worth from $700 to a $1,000 more, making in all about $2,500 worth of property, and all made by a day's work from one and another. Please tell me what it is that Mormons cannot do when united, unless it is to make a lying editor disgorge the truth.

The more I see of Mormonism the more I am astonished, for truly it is a marvel and a wonder. Five years ago I supposed I was wise in Mormonism, and felt, oh, if I could only do this or that, to how much better advantage I could do it, than those were doing it whose business it was; but with five years' experience I have learned more than half the divines in Christendom, and what is that, you ask; well, then, it is, that I am a fool when compared to the spirit of God, and a mere cypher in wisdom when compared with many hundreds of the Elders of this Church. But to return to the Territory and business, and business before pleasure, for if it is my own business it will bring pleasure.

All of the companies, both emigrant and merchant, that intend crossing the Plains this season are off, except, if I may except, Whitehouse's Train of stoves, etc., and four wagons that have, in the last week, rolled out to the top of the hill half a mile. I should not wonder, if he starts, that he does not pass the Sioux Indians, as they are the first on Mrs. Wards' Route this season; but he is stationary, and I hope, for his sake, will remain so until next spring. The Church Train, taking out property for the Church, with the boiler and machinery for Gov. Young's steamboat in tow, got off about the first of this month. I learned on Sunday last that the boiler, weighing three tons, with the wagon, had been condemned by a board of officers, to remain where it then was, somewhere between this and Kearney, charge, heft, and specification, want of team to draw it. I have not heard whether it was doomed to solitary confinement, or whether the machinery was left also, but I do hope that none of the cattle or horse thieves in Kansas will mistake it for a horse and ride it off.

The weather for the last three or four weeks has been remarkably wet and cold, the nights have been so cold that the farmers have anticipated frost, but the weather seems to be more settled, but not enough so to restore the thousands of bushels of wheat that has sprouted, and thereby been rained in the shock, in Upper Missouri. I know farmers in Missouri that have lost every bushel.

The rainy season here has done some little damage to our new city. The new City Ware House, built last spring by the Atchison Town Company, being built in the bluff, the heavy rains softened the earth above, so that it slipped down against it, causing it to go to pieces in about ten minutes. The Company are now removing it, and in all probability will rebuild it this fall.

There are some good houses going up here, and from the looking around of strangers daily, I feel that there will be plenty here next spring to trade with the Mormons. I hope they will not expect to make their fortunes (independent) in one season.

A few days since a Rev. Mr. Butler, from Grasshopper Creek, about ten or fifteen miles from this place, came into town (Atchison), and gave his opinion in regard to Mr. Kelly's departure from this place (see Squatter Sovereign), and to remunerate him for his divine opinion on the subject of niggerology, he was put upon a raft made of two logs, after having the initial of Rascal (R.) painted on his forehead, and shipped, under a banner with the words, Emigration Aid Society upon it, for a bend of the river two miles below this place, where he landed without damage.

Everything of this sort brings to my mind the revelation of Joseph upon the subject of war (Seer, vol. 2d, p. 241), it must be fulfilled.

Here is a list of prices in Atchison: Flour, $11 per bbl.; Meal, none in market; Bacon, poor, 10 cts.; Hams, 12 1-2 to 15; Butter, 15 to 20 cts. per lb.; Potatoes, $1 to $2 per bush.; Onions, and every other sort of vegetables, scarce and hard to be got; Watermelons, good, plenty. Beef, 6 to 10c. per lb.; Sugar, Coffee, Tea, Rice, Salt, &c., any price above 10 per cent. on St. Louis prices.

Elders O. Spencer and James McGraw, have left on their mission. Elder George Rust in charge of Church farm; river low, freights high, and very light for the up country, and the awful scream of the steamboat whistle is seldom heard at our wharf. I intend going out for a few days' recess soon, and if I can find out anything in regard to his satanic majesty's headquarters, which must be in these parts somewhere, I shall notify you of it at once. Believing that I have given you all the news of note to your readers or yourself,

I am yours, TRAVELLER.

P. S.—Aug. 27.—The Price Current for this week stands—Flour, 5 1-2c.; poor bacon, 2 1-2c. to 15c. Mr. S. Dixon only has bacon for sale; he will fall on it as soon as any other merchant gets a supply; this is his place of merchandizing.

The organization of a branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints took place yesterday (Sunday) at the house of Elder John Jost, when Elder A. L. Siler was set apart as President, and Elders Alfred Shaw and John Jost as his Councillors. Next Sabbath is set apart as a day of fasting and prayer.

Yours, in haste, T.

Utah Correspondence.

LOS VEGAS, June 24, 1855.

PRES. JOHN TAYLOR—

Dear Sir: On my return from a short exploration of the Colorado, east and south of this, I found the eastern mail had brought five numbers of the "Mormon." We felt, if we did not exclaim—"Hail, friend of man! defender of truth! advocate of purity and virtue! thrice welcome!" I am hopeful the light you carry from the West will give the Bennetts, Greely, and a host of other men of talent, an opportunity of knowing how we men walk—far away beyond the "rest of mankind"—and of defending and aiding us in obtaining our rights, if they will.

The transit of goods from the east is now doubtful, uncertain, and probably unsafe, and from a communication from one of the U. S. officers from Fort Yuma, we learned the Colorado was navigable one hundred miles above that Fort, and probably one hundred more. President Young wished to know of these things, and sent us. From this point this river is about twenty-seven miles south-east; there we struck it, and found plenty of water for steamers of larger draught than usually ply on the Ohio. We were hindered in our progress downwards in consequence of perpendicular rocks closing in the said river, hundreds of feet high, and leaving a space of about two hundred feet only for the water to glide through. We emerged from this gorge and tried the river at different points for fifteen miles down; still finding no obstacles to navigation and but little food for our horses and mules here, we returned, to try the river farther up, believing, as Gov. Young had told us, we should find it navigable to within probably one hundred and twenty miles of Iron Co; if so, we shall have a chance of importing goods by water more advantageously than we can across these sandy deserts or by the east.

Here the Mormons have established a post; there is a strip of good land and grass here—a good road can easily be made to the Colorado, and this will be a good recruiting point for the U. S. mail carriers; here, as also on the Muddy, the Indians are peaceable and friendly, growing a little wheat, corn, &c., and appear anxious to learn and grow more.

Last night a train arrived here from California of nine wagons, including Elders Chancy West from the East Indies, R. Allred, McBride, Bigler and Farrer from the Sandwich Islands, and some families from the land of gold, who, tired of following a shadow and worshipping an idol, return to the healthy atmosphere of our mountain homes, to worship the living and true God, where their children may learn His laws, and breathe an atmosphere physically and morally more pure than that they have left.

Brother P. P. Pratt was preparing to start with a larger company of Saints from California for Carson Valley, and by the northern route to Great Salt Lake City.

Banking and Express Companies had suspended payments, and land speculators were ruined in California; times very dull; new routes, roads, and more emigrants much wanted, that, if possible, they might "make a raise" to leave, some for Australia no doubt, others for their farm houses in the east, and hundreds to regain, if possible, their standing among the Saints, that they might again help to build up the kingdom of God in these valleys, covenanting with themselves probably, that if they could but once regain the place and confidence they had lost, never again to go but as they might be sent.

How peacefully on this limpid stream one can gaze down on the lower world, and wonder why thousands who are crowded, unemployed, ill fed, and ignorant in your eastern cities and in Europe, cannot, will not burst the fetters that bind them, and stretch out to the open, fertile, boundless west! They are free republicans in a free country! and yet blind and led by the blind, by those that preach and pray only for hire and divine for money. We can also behold the iron war horse of Russia, untired—the millions of France, England, and Turkey, mere food for the cannon. We can also gaze upon the whitening process in the south—white men mingling their seed with that of Cain! selling their own children into bondage! Senators joking of this in your capitol—merchant princes, congressmen and priests of celibacy seducing innocence, purchasing virtue with gold, keeping mistresses! legislating against polygamy, practising worse than bestial lust—preaching and writing purity, and living in unclean abominations—in word, defending the "rights of woman," in act, degrading her; producing disease, degeneracy, moral and physical decay, death; deserting the deceived and seduced, licencing brothels, gendering disease, building hospitals, making prostitutes and then punishing them! Oh, what painful scenes! Yet you live among them and see them daily, and well you know to these things our children are happily strangers—thanks to our Father in Heaven for the revelation of his will to Mormonism.

Col. Steptoe has not accepted the governorship; he went to California a few weeks ago by a new route westward, and Lieut. Mowrey and company by this route in peace. I hear that some of his men tried to lead off some of our females, but few would return to the degrading practices of the lower world.

Good health abounds with us. The grasshoppers have nibbled some of the wheat north—perhaps our Father sees fit, least we should become exalted and forget him: thus, to teach us again our dependence. All right, all well, and the faithful say Amen to this and every dispensation permitted by him.

Our missions at Harmony, on the Santa Clara and elsewhere, prosper; we measurably forget our ease and luxuries formerly enjoyed, are content with humble homes and fare, and hard labor, "choosing, like Moses, rather to suffer with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of the world for a season."

Our population and cities increase, as also our taste for architecture and domestic comforts.

The iron works at Cedar City progress finely. Castings and iron are now daily made.

The State house at Fillmore is advancing near completion.

The road on the southern route to this point is improved by a few hundred dollars of labor, for which Government granted $25,000. Strangers have had the benefit—the Mormons the labor.

When will the Government confide in us, and give us the privilege of other territories? Are we not as loyal? We are. And thousands of strangers are passing and have passed through our midst, and know it. Some, I perceive, are fearlessly testifying to these facts and Gov. Young's integrity. I suppose the surveyor-generalship too will be given to some favorite of the reigning party, though we have talent and integrity sufficient among ourselves. Well, thank heaven, since I came here I have learned to make adobies, build houses, cultivate the soil, and maintain myself and family, otherwise than my former education and habits ever indicated. Thus, you perceive, I am a "Free-soiler!" and though born in Europe, have become an American before the exclusive twenty-one years restrictions came in the way of naturalization.

May prosperity, health and every good attend you. THOS. D. BROWN.

From Our Utah Correspondent.

PAROWAN, Iron Co. U. T. July 5, 1855

To the Editor of The Mormon:

THINKING that perhaps a few items from far off Utah might not come amiss to you, and as the mail for California is now daily expected, I shall jot down whatever of news will be likely to interest you. A few weeks since our eyes were gladdened by the sight of your interesting and valuable paper—The Mormon—and its well printed columns were eagerly scanned by its numerous subscribers, who had waited long and anxiously for its appearance. By the by, fifteen subscribers in this city received none of the first five numbers, and as yet none of No. 7 have come to hand. I presume they were mailed by you in due season, and doubtless we are indebted to the irregularity or failure of the mail for our disappointment, but if possible we should like to have the missing numbers forwarded. Why I am so ready to suspect the Mail as the cause of our disappointment, is because, during a residence of six years in this Territory, I have never been able to receive a single copy of Graham's Magazines, and of other works which have been mailed to me by several publishers in the City of New York; but being naturally charitable, I endeavor to ascribe the cause of the non-arrival of those works, to the great length of their journey across the plains—which generally occupies from three to four months, and which so fatigues them that they are ready to stop at Laramie, or at other resting places on their route. It is a little singular, however, that speeches in Congress and other political documents, arrive in one-third the time occupied by newspapers and letters, but as I am not sufficiently skilled in the science of mechanic's to explain all the phenomena of motion and velocity, I shall leave the subject for those who are.

Our spring and summer has been quite dry thus far, but the innumerable grasshoppers that cover our plains and mountain sides, appear in fine and sprightly condition, a sight which seems to astonish those who came from climes not so favored in that respect as Utah.

Yesterday was the anniversary of our National Independence, and it was celebrated in a most appropriate manner. At early dawn, a lofty and noble looking liberty pole surmounted by the appropriate emblem of the United States, which had been prepared the previous day, was elevated in the place of the old one, and just as the rays of the rising sun began to tinge the tips of the mountains, our glorious national banner of the stars and stripes, floated out gracefully from its top upon the morning breeze, and was saluted by the roaring of our brass field pieces and howitzers, the enthusiastic shouts of the people, and the soul-inspiring notes of "the Star Spangled Banner," which was performed by the splendid brass band present from Cedar City. After the appropriate number of rounds had been fired by the artillery, the people dispersed to enjoy the festivities and ceremonies of the day, in which a goodly number of visitors participated, from Fillmore and Cedar Cities, and from Paragoonah, Harmony, Santa Clara and the adjoining towns and villages. The day passed off with all the ceremonies, speeches, &c. incident to so important an occasion as the birth day of American Independence, while not a single fight or disturbance occurred to mar the enjoyment of the day, nor was a person seen under the influence of liquor—a fact to which we challenge any town or city in the Union outside of Utah, and of equal size, to furnish a parallel. These facts are significant, as proofs of our industry, sobriety and morality, far stronger than anything we can say, and we cannot but hope, that when we shall be known as we are by the honest and upright who are abroad in the world, that the tide of misrepresentation and slander which we as a people have so long triumphantly stemmed, will cease to roll its black and turbid waves upon us, and we shall be known and understood in our true light.

Our Iron Works are progressing finely, and the iron produced thus far it is said, cannot be excelled or equaled by the vast Works in England; and though not in full operation yet, on account of the short time in which the workmen have been experimenting upon the various ores, and other unavoidable circumstances natural to a new country, the time is close at hand, in which Utah will be able to furnish the Western portion of this continent with all the iron necessary for the Pacific Railroad, when it shall be located through our Territory, or for any other purpose.

For fear you may be wearied, by the length of this letter, I will close, wishing you all prosperity in your present undertaking.

Yours, Respectfully, JAS. H. MARTINEAU.

California Correspondence.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 14th, 1855.

DEAR UNCLE: As the time for the departure of another mail is near, I improve the opportunity of writing to you. Since I last wrote, I have been busily engaged in endeavoring to get rooms in which to set up the press, and have been successful in hiring two that answer our purpose pretty well; they are on Montgomery street, one of the principal streets in town. Bro. Orson Hyde, has been here, having crossed the mountains from Carson Valley, stayed about three days and has returned. He was enjoying good health while here. He has, as I suppose, you already know, been appointed Probate Judge of Carson County, the business of this office and of organizing the county, prevented him from making any longer stay here. At present California is inclined to claim Carson Valley as being within her boundaries, but I think it will be unavailing, for there is no doubt in my mind but that it will, when surveyed, fall within the boundaries of Utah.

AUGUST 1st, 1855.

DEAR UNCLE: I commenced this letter thinking that I would send it by the last mail, but when I had written thus far I was prevented from finishing it before the mail closed. I have been busily engaged, with the Brethren who are with me, in getting the press in operation, and have struck off two forms octavo, of the Hawaiian translation of the Book of Mormon. We have been blessed and our way opened up before us sufficiently to admit of us accomplishing all that we have endeavored to do.

When we landed here Bro. Parley had gone, with all those who had the means and the disposition to assist much, to the Valley, leaving but few Saints in this country, and they, generally speaking, were in straitened circumstances. Bro. P. had stored the press, paper &c., after its arrival from Honolulu, S. I., and it was in storage when I arrived. After my return from my visit to see Bro. Parley, of which I informed you in my last, we proceeded to examine the press and material and found everything in good order, with the exception of the ribs of the press which were broken, and which I immediately undertook to have recast.

Bros. Hyde and Parley wrote me a joint letter instructing me to obtain a suitable building in which to set up the press; and to commence publishing the Hawaiian translation of the Book of Mormon; the publishing of a paper was to be deferred for a while. I received a letter, however, yesterday from Bro. Hyde in which he leaves me at liberty to publish a paper and suggests "The Western Standard" as the name or title; he also gives me good counsel in relation to the style of its matter &c. At present we cannot, with the material and hands we now have, publish both the Book of Mormon and the paper, and I think that the paper will have to be deferred for a short time until we have the book more advanced, when it can be better attended to and issued regularly. I feel anxious to see the paper published, as we need an organ on this Western coast in which false impressions can be corrected, and the knowledge of our principles spread more extensively.

* * * * * * *

Bro. Amasa Lyman has been stopping with us about two weeks; he went up a few days ago to Sacramento. He, with about 75 or 80 other Brethren, have come up here from San Bernardino to preach and to try and raise the necessary means to liquidate the mortgage on the Ranche of San Bernardino, which expires on the 7th of October next. Bro. Heywood and Judge Styles were also here from Carson Valley, and returned to Sacramento a few days ago. They came to Carson with Bro. Hyde for the purpose of organizing the county.

* * * * * * *

The Brethren, as also Elizabeth join in love with me to you and George and Angus. I have written to him. I wish you would write when you can and any counsel, instruction &c, you may have to give, will be thankfully appreciated. I wish George and Angus would write every mail. Remember me to Bro. Felt, and the Brethren who are with you. Excuse bad writing as you will see I have written hastily. I remain your affectionate nephew, as ever, GEO. Q. CANNON.

MENDOCINO, Cal., August 6, 1855.

To the Editor of The Mormon:

I arrived in this part of the country the 28th of July, in company with others of our Elders, on a mission from San Bernardino, to preach the gospel.

We left our homes the fourth of July; a good spirit prevails at San Bernardino, better than has for a great while; the Saints are united and awake to the interests of our common cause. A special Conference was called the 23d 24th and 25th of June, and some 80 Elders were sent from San Bernardino throughout this State, for the purpose of preaching the gospel, and gathering up means (from the Saints, the lovers of truth, and all those that may wish to locate themselves in our midst,) to liquidate the debt yet remaining against the Rancho—to gather up those that are feeding upon husks—those that may have the love of truth yet lingering in their bosoms, and any that may receive our testimony: that we may secure their co-operation in making ourselves a home, and establishing peace, virtue, truth and righteousness upon the earth.

The wheat crops have failed pretty much throughout the State, on account of the rust and smutt; other crops look well. The miners are doing a fair business, though money is scarce, and times dull, and a general want of confidence among men of business, and in business transactions. There is that division here, socially, politically, and religiously, that exists throughout Christendom, and I suppose throughout the world. I have never heard of anything existing anywhere upon this little planet, but what a specimen could be found here. There is no party, faction, creed, denomination, nation, or principle, good or bad, of whatever name or nature it might be, but has a representative in California; or has its members of them. And I suppose this strife, confusion, and division, will continue as long as the people are governed by the principles that invariably produce these results.

Soon after our arrival in this place, my colleague (Bro. David Holladay) and myself, gave out an appointment to preach, which we filled yesterday, the congregation seemed to be very much interested; and at the conclusion of our meeting I called for the voice of the people, to know if they wished us to preach again, we got a Mormon vote, (i. e.) a unanimous vote, without a dissenting voice, that we should leave our appointment for another time, which we did. We believe through the influence of the spirit of truth, and our faithfulness, we shall be able to do a good work in this country.

I have obtained three subscribers to your valuable paper, I would just say that it is my honest opinion, that if our Elders would use their influence to get our own publications as widely circulated as possible, that it would be wielding an influence, among both saint and sinner, that would be second only to that of our exertions in preaching the truth; I can say for myself, that I have through this channel, obtained a knowledge of things, and gleaned an amount of information, that is incalculably more valuable to me, than all the gold of California; and obtained it with but a trifling expense. I must bring my letter to a close. Dear Brother I pray God to sustain you in your arduous undertaking. Yours &c.,

HENRY G. BOYLE.

Foreign Correspondence.

RUE DU CENDRIER 108, GENEVA,
Switzerland, Aug. 20, 1855.

Dear Brother Taylor:

I have received Nos. 18, 20, 21, 22 and 23 of your highly interesting paper in exchange for the "Darstelle." You will please accept my thanks for your kindness. I have sent you the first three Nos. of the "Darstelle," and shall send No. 4 in a few days. It's suspension for a month is the reason you have not received it ere this.

In compliance with your request to the Elders scattered abroad, I will give you a brief account of the work in these missions.

In Switzerland two languages are spoken by the inhabitants, viz: the French and German. The latter is by far the most extensive. In the French portion, namely, the Cantons of Geneva, Vaud, and Neufchatel the work is almost dead. On the first introduction of the Gospel in those countries many joined the Church, and for a time the work prospered; but for about a year and a half past nothing scarcely has been doing. Occasionally a person is baptized; but generally speaking there is no inquiry, and the people seem altogether unprepared to receive the message which we bear to them. In some of the German Cantons the work wears a more lively appearance. It is not two years since the introduction of the Gospel into those Cantons. The work took well generally, the labors of the Elders were greatly blessed, and doors were opened on every hand for the preaching of the word.

The progress of the work did not agree, altogether, with the feelings of those in authority, and, consequently, our bretheren were arraigned before Mayors, Judges, &c., imprisoned, and finally banished from the country. At present there is not a missionary in German, Switzerland. The authorities no doubt imagined that the banishment of the missionaries would be the banishment of the work they promulgated; but no! the principles of truth had taken root in honest hearts, the Holy Priesthood had been given to good men, and although the men who took the Gospel into those parts were banished, they left behind them something that cannot be banished—the Gospel of Christ, and the power to administer its ordinances. It must be said in favor of the native bretheren in those Cantons that they labor with a zeal and determination that does them credit. The results are the increase of the work, and a further development of their powers. The Saints generally are good and malgré the fines, that are sometimes imposed upon them for accommodating the Elders, they continue to do their utmost for the giver of the glorious cause which they have espoused.

Before leaving this part of my communication I would add, that the banishment of our brethren from some places was not so much the wish of the authorities as of the people. The people raise an excitement, make a request, and the authorities accede thereto. This, the Chief of Police at Zurich told one of our brethren.

In Piedmont we make but little progress. The Vandois valleys are the only places where our Elders can stay. Efforts have been made in Turin, Nice and other places of importance, but without effect. In the valleys the people are very ignorant, and very poor. The persecutions they have suffered for their religion makes them cling to it with a tenancity unknown among the generality of le monde religieus. All these things are so many obstacles in the way of our brethren, and a strong barrier against the progress of the Kingdom of God.

In two of the German States several people are investigating the work and calling for Elders, but religious intolerance is such as to forbid great steps; we hope, however, to do some good by improving these opportunities to the best possible advantage.

In these countries, as well as in America, spiritual influences, and as spirit-rapping, table turning, &c., have followed the preaching of the Gospel, but more particularly so its rejection.

As you will have seen, probably, from the papers, some severe shocks of earthquake have been felt throughout Switzerland, and parts of Savoy, France and Germany. They were felt here on the 25th and 26th ult., throwing down chimneys, tiles, &c., which was the extent of their ravages. In some other parts, however, they were more severe. In the Canton de Vallois, which is one of the most mountainous districts of this country, and bordering some of the highest Alpine Mountains, the ground opened for some distance, large racks were hurled from the positions they have occupied from time immemorial, and church spires, particularly, were visited with a tremendous shaking and shattering. The villagers in some places preferred tents for some days, to the risk of being buried in the ruins of their miserable domiciles.

For a description of the political and religious position of Switzerland, I would refer you to "A Chapter on Switzerland," by Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse, published in No. 1, Vol. 14, "Millennial Star." It is an excellent article, and is as applicable to 1856 as to 1852.

Praying God to bless you in your labors, and with kind love to yourself and all connected with you. I am, yours truly,

DANIEL TYLER.

One Week Later From Europe.

THE arrival of the Africa at Halifax on the 11th inst., furnishes one week later news from Europe, as follows:

THE WAR.

The papers contain many interesting details of the recent battle of Traktir Bridge, on the Tchernaya, but few new incidents.

Generals Simpson and Pelissier both furnish reports. They say the Russian attack was a deliberate effort to raise the siege of Sebastopol, and if the Russians had succeeded in holding the heights on the Allies' side of the river, they intended further to attack the Allies from four points, namely: A main attack on Balaklava, another on the British camp, and another simultaneously on the extreme right and left of the French lines. Documents found on the body of a Russian General indicate this.

Gen. Simpson estimates the Russian force at 55,000 infantry and 6,000 cavalry, with 160 guns. The French had only 12,000 men and four batteries engaged.

The Sardinians had 4,500 men and twenty four guns engaged, while the English had only one battery in play.

The battle began at break of day. The Russians crossed the river on floats, and drove in the Allied outposts.

Gen. Simpson says the Russians advanced three times with the most determined bravery. Thrice they carried the bridge and crowned the heights, but were thrice driven back by the French batteries.

The Zouaves charged them with the bayonet, and the English battery made great havoc as they retreated to the river.

The English Lancers and French Mounted Chasseurs were stationed in the plain, but could not pursue the retreating army as the Russian batteries kept up a fire from their own side of the river, and thus covered the retreat.

Gen. Pelissier calls the French loss 17 officers killed, and 53 wounded; 172 men killed; 150 missing, and 1,160 wounded. The Sardinian loss was 250. The loss of the Russians was 3,000 killed, and 5,000 wounded, including 1,600 wounded prisoners in the hands of the French, and 200 in the hands of the Sardinians. The Turks were not engaged.

The Russian report admits great losses and three generals killed. It attributes the loss to the too great impetuosity of the right columns of attack. The Russian troops engaged had just arrived in the Crimea.

Gen. Gortschakoff commanded in person from the Mackenzie heights. The Grand Duke Constantine was not present, although it was stated that he was.

The condition of the Russian dead showed that they had been subjected to a long march and had suffered considerable hardship, which partly confirms Napoleon's recent statement that to his knowledge Russian resources are exhausted.

General Pelissier issued a grandiloquent order announcing the victory, but his account does not find favor in Paris. They say that he did not make the most of his victory, nor prepare a sufficient force to crush the attack.

FROM SEBASTOPOL.

General Simpson's mail dispatch of the 18th says: General Pelissier having announced to me that the batteries against the Malakoff and adjacent works were prepared to open fire, it should be commenced yesterday morning against these works and the Redan. This was continued throughout the day, and the effect produced was as much as was anticipated. The Russian fire, which at first answered briskly, became by evening feeble. In the afternoon, shells from our mortars ignited, and a number of them exploded in one of the enemy's batteries, doing apparently much damage. Captains Oldfield and Hammet have been killed. The British loss 138.

General Gortschakoff, on the night of the 27th, telegraphs: Affairs are unchanged, but the fire of the Allies is occasionally very strong.

There is a report in London to-day that General Simpson is sick, and that General Bentinck, the senior officer, has taken command.

Decisive operations will not be undertaken until the Allies have crossed the Tchernaya, and occupied the heights on the right bank, and succeeded in separating the Russian forces on the Tchernaya and Belbec Rivers. The reinforcements are collecting for this purpose. Meantime, however, the Russians are expected to offer the Allies another battle near the Cemetary.

The Russians are daily expecting the arrival of General Parmitine, with 9,000 cavalry 3,000 infantry and 160 guns.

ASIA.

Oma Pacha definitely takes command in Asia, and would leave on the 21st for Trebizonde. Osman Pacha has command of the Second Division, and the troops will be conveyed in English steamers to Trebizonde.

We have no reliable intelligence from Kars or Erzeroum.

The Russians have reestablished communications between Genitchi and Arabat.

Several new Russian ships are to be built this Winter at Nicolace.

THE BALTIC.

The Allied Fleets have retired from before Cronstadt, and have taken up another position. A dispatch stating that gun-boats were returning home, led to the belief that the campaign had closed; but it now appears that sixteen ships or gun-boats returning were those which have been disabled.

The London Times contains an editorial article, couched in very severe language, on the non-effectiveness of the fleet, and says that "Nelson and Collingwood must blush in their graves."

DANTZIC.

Private letters state that the loss of the Russians in Sweaborg was not less than 2,000 men. The Russian paper Nord says that the loss was only 50 killed, and that 1,300 guns still remain in position, and that the batteries are wholly uninjured.

NEGOTIATIONS.

The Berlin correspondent of the Augsburg Gazette, states that the Prussian Cabinet has recently replied to Count Buol's circular, to the effect that Prussia is disinclined to make any change in her policy in regard to the Eastern question, because she is unable to see what practical guarantee the often-mentioned four points can afford for its settlement; further, that Prussia cannot consent to bind herself to these four points, while the parties principally concerned reserve to themselves the right of going beyond them. Finally, Prussia repeats the decision of the Germanic Bund, made last December, acknowledging the suitableness of the proposed conditions of peace, without, however, pledging itself to maintain them.

From the above it is evident that Prussia and the Germanic Federation stand precisely as they did 12 months ago.

The Austrian papers make complaint that the assistance lent by the Western Powers to the Sultan is fast changing into occupation of Turkey.

The correspondent of the London Times in Paris writes, after comparatively a long period of silence, respecting Austria: "The Austrian policy is such, that it is again stated in high quarters, that the French Government has reason to be satisfied with that power."

In reply to Austrian remonstrances, Great Britain is said to have stated, that the question of nationality will not be introduced into the present crisis, and that the depot of the Italian recruits, now at Novarra, will be removed further from the Austrian frontier.

A Berlin letter says that Count Nesselrode had addressed another letter to the Russian Ambassador, in which he says the Czar is willing to make honorable terms of peace.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A letter from Constantinople, under date of the 20th ultimo, says a Council was held on the 18th, at which Ministerial changes were decided.

Lord Stratford had gone to the Crimea. The Duke of Newcastle had been sick in camp but was recovering.

The Nord, Russian journal, says: Omar Pacha freely expressed himself at Constantinople that the Allied Commanders—especially General Pelissier—were humbugs, and that he should twice have lost his army if he had followed their advice.

Betts, the Engineer, writes that the Balaklava Railway is in a condition to stand the Winter.

Abdel Kader had arrived at Constantinople.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A national shilling subscription is proposed to be raised for a testimonial to Admiral Charles Napier.

A fiat of bankruptcy has been issued against Edward Oliver.

Five hundred Highlanders had embarked on board the steamer Hansa, at Liverpool, for Malta. On board of the Great Britain, Cavalry were about to embark

The export of iron north of Dunkirk is prohibited, and a bond is required whenever exported.

The potato harvest in Ireland is favorable on the whole.

FRANCE.

Dullness prevails in political affairs.

The Austrian Archduke Maximilian has arrived at Toulon.

The Kings of Sardinia, Wurtemberg and Bavaria are expected by the Emperor.

The crops throughout France are satisfactory.

The harvest in Algeria is excellent.

BELGIUM.

A Commission has been appointed to revise the Tariff.

SPAIN.

Committees appointed are considering the Tariff question.

Foreigners are exempted from the forced loan, but are invited to contribute to it.

A Paris rumor is that we may expect from day to day to hear of the involuntary abdiction of Queen Isabella, and of important events in Spain.

The Duke of Montspensier is openly agitating.

ITALY.

The export of Breadstuffs is prohibited from the Roman States.

In Naples the political ferment continues. Many arrests have been made.

AUSTRIA.

It is rumored that a new loan of two hundred million florins is about to be raised to repay the Vienna Bank advances.

The Austrian Lloyds undertake to open steam communication between Trieste, North African ports, Spain and Portugal.

The Austrian Engineers officially report favorably on the proposed ship Canal from the Danube to the Black Sea.

GREECE.

The Currant crop of Cephalonia is very deficient—prices opened at one hundred and fifteen dollars.

Athens, 24th.—The Ministerial crisis is unchanged.

DENMARK.

The King of Denmark is visiting the King of Sweden. The question of the Sound dues continues to perplex.

INDIA AND CHINA.

We have dates from Bombay to July 30. The intelligence from India is important.

A formidable insurrection had broken out in the centre of Bengal. The insurgents are the Santals and other tribes occupying the Rajamahal Hills—a bold and hardy race. They number from thirty to fifty thousand men, acting in five parties, and are armed with axes poisoned arrows, and a few fire-arms. They have spread over the country a hundred miles in extent, destroying everything European, and pretend that they are led by their God in person. The few Europeans have entrenched themselves until assistance shall arrive. The insurrection was so little anticipated that there were not a thousand troops within a hundred and fifty miles.

The London papers have soothing editorials on the subject of the intelligence confirming the recent collision of the Russians with the Khan of Khiva, and repulse of the latter.

Persia is quiet.

Shanghai advices are to June 29. Quietness was prevailing there and at Canton. Food was plentiful. Communication with the interior had been partially reopened. An enormous butchery had been perpetrated at Canton. One thousand were executed for sympathizing with the rebels. The Insurgents were losing ground in the North.

New Books.

WE have received from San Francisco the first form of the Translation of the Book of Mormon into the Hawaiian or Kanaka language. It is translated and published by Elder George Q. Cannon, who has been laboring for several years, with very great success, in the Sandwich Islands.

The form, as to typography, present a neat, pretty appearance, and the printing is well executed; but we must leave somebody else to judge of the merits of the translation. We think Kanaka is very appropriate, for it is very plentifully interspersed with k's.

We hail it as a messenger of light to the Pacific Isles, and congratulate Elder Cannon in being so far able to master that barbarous language as to present to his numerous converts and those of his colleagues, and to all the Hawaiian Islanders, the pure gospel of Jesus Christ in their native tongue, as taught to the aboriginal inhabitants of this continent. The scriptures say truly, "The isles shall wait for his law."

We cannot but reflect with astonishment upon the rapid spread of this work, and the numerous translations of the Book of Mormon in so short a time.

The following is a list of its translations:

Corrected to Sept. 14.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? On devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

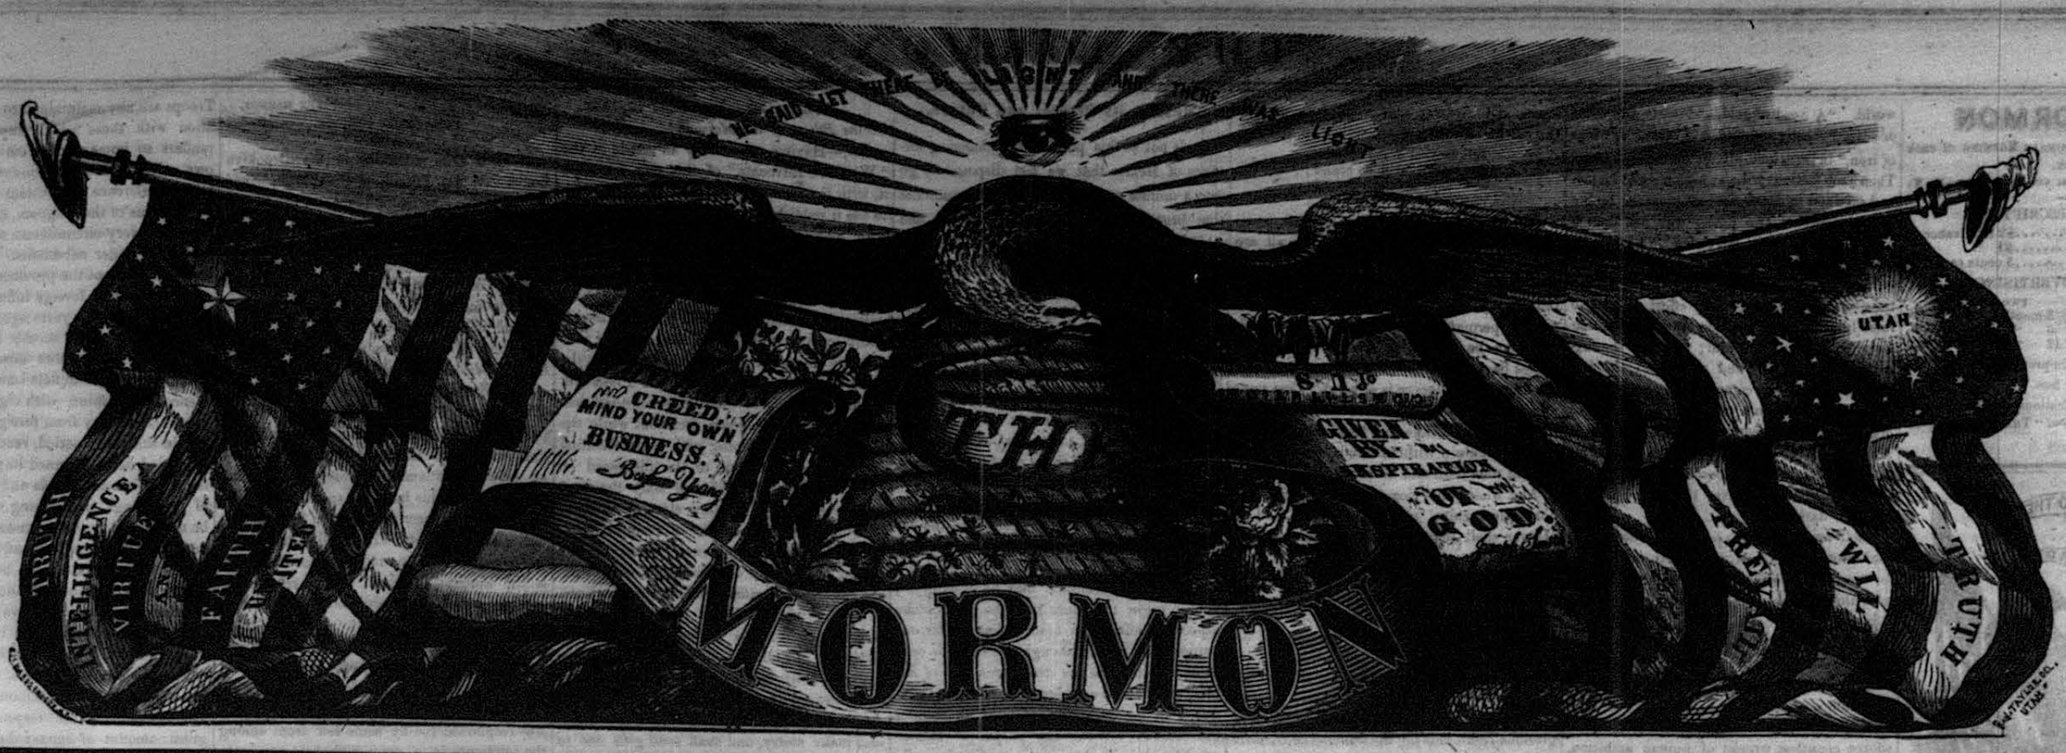
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon! That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Woman's Rights.

BY MRS. N. P. LASALLE.

It is her right to watch beside
The bed of sickness and of pain;
And when the head almost despairs,
To whisper hopes of health again.

Her right, to make the hearth-stone glad,
With gentle words and cheerful smile,
And when man is with care oppressed,
His wearied spirit to beguile.

It is her right to train her sons,
So they may Senate chambers grace—
Thus, is she with more honor crowned,
Than if herself had filled the place.

It is her right to be admired
By every generous, manly heart,
When, with true dignity and grace,
She acteth well a woman's part.

She hath a dearer right than this,
To be in one true heart enshrined—
Who, though the world may all forsake,
Will cherish still, and still be kind.

And there is yet a higher right,
Which, also is to woman given;
'Tis hers to teach the infant mind
Those truths divine which came from heaven.

What would she more then to perform,
On earth, life's holiest, sweetest tasks!
When you a perfect woman find,
No other rights than these she asks.

One Thing Needful—An Inspired Head.

A short time ago a leading article appeared in the Family Herald, with the following title —"A Great Man Wanted." This article was written with special reference to England. The writer says, "We have all the materials for doing everything well, but we want a sole directing mind at the head of affairs, to make our materials available." And as a consequence of not finding this "sole directing mind," he further says, "We have all sorts of perplexities, dilemmas, quibbles, questions, doubts, and disputed points, as if the whole system were invented by lawyers, for the purpose of keeping themselves and their families flourishing, like the green bay tree, for all generations."

The Herald hits the truth when it declares that one of the greatest wants of England is a "great man," who can "speak as one having authority, and not as the scribes," whose word is law, and whose will is carried out universally in a spirit of intuitive, spontaneous, perfect oneness. And we will predicate the same of all the world. Such a ruler no nation upon the face of the earth can now rejoice in, except the Kingdom of God. But instead thereof, we see, speaking in general terms, either a potentate of naturally strong mind and great energy, ruling principally by the force of his own iron will; or one of ordinary abilities, ruling through the traditions of his subjects. The dominions of the first of these characters are very often visited with political eruptions at his death, for then the burning lava of discontent, proud ambition, or perhaps innocent indignation, is no longer held in check by the incubus of his mighty presence, but bursts forth, increased in furious heat by being so long smothered, and rapidly creates a new aspect in the state of affairs. The sceptre of the second kind of potentate continually trembles in his hand—every new ray of light that penetrates the public mind may show them a "more excellent way" in governmental affairs, to his imminent peril; and more than this, party and faction may contrive to bring in an entirely different order of things, and rule of governmental procedure. The ruler of iron will has strength and efficacy in his government while it endures, but alas, its existence depends upon the brittle thread of his own life, or perhaps only until a "stronger than the strong man" shall dethrone him. The monarch of ordinary, weak, or vacillating character is in perpetual danger of losing his exalted position, and, his kingdom wanting confidence in its ruler, or being divided in opinion concerning him, is but weak and half-hearted at the best, and consequently the most promising measures are frequently so whittled down, evaded, or thwarted, by friends or foes, as to prove any thing but effectual in cases of exigency.

From the earliest ages to the present, man has tried his best and his worst at government, and has signally failed all the time. Were now are the powerful nations of antiquity? Where the governments which once kept the world in awe, and dictated laws to the ends of the earth? Echo answers, where? They arose, flourished, and decayed. They were weighed in the balances and found wanting. The magnificence of their remains proves only the completeness of their failure. Many of these governments had "great men" at their head, but not great enough, or, to speak ironically, perhaps too great. At all events, something was wanting—something human wisdom has not yet found out. The "right man" at the head was wanting, nor has the world yet discovered that man.

As with nations, so with societies and institutions, religious or merely secular. They have been originated, have secured a certain amount of influence over men, and have either come to naught, or have failed in regenerating society. The "great man" has not appeared on their stage.

But will this "great man" never appear? Must the world go on as it has been going, ebbing and flowing like the tide, but advancing none? The world has a vague idea that there is a "coming man," who will be of the "right" stamp. Scripture declares that such is to be the case, and not a tittle of the sacred word shall fail.

But who shall this man be? Whence shall he derive his authority? In what manner shall he make his appearance? Shall he be some mighty emperor at the head of his splendid court? Or some victorious general at the head of his magnificent army? Or some profound philosopher at the head of the learned and subtle schoolmen? When he does come, will high and low, rich and poor, learned and unlearned receive him with acclamation, as the "desire of all nations?"

Whithout egotism we declare that we can answer the above questions. We can speak definitely of the man, his authority, his manner of appearance, and his reception, and thus bestow a word of wisdom and information which is beyond all price. Let the nations listen, and all the inhabitants of the earth give ear! The "great man wanted" to set in order and direct religion, and government, from that of the nation to that of the family and the individual, is an Apostle, Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, who is appointed to the Holy Priesthood by God, to reveal His will to men, and to establish His kingdom and government upon the earth, that truth and righteousness may cover it as the waters cover the mighty deep, and mankind no longer grope as blind men for the wall. The honored person who first received this authority in these days was Joseph Smith, a poor and unlearned stripling. He was rejected by the mighty and wise of the day, and of the poor but a few believed his testimony. Notwithstanding this, he laid the foundation of the great work of reformation, regeneration, and restitution which all admit is necessary, but which so very few are willing to aid with their whole heart. That foundation no man can uproot. After the assassination of Joseph Smith, his mantle fell upon Brigham Young, who now in the Territory of Utah wields that authority. To his standard thousands of the pure in heart annually flock.

We have let the "cat" out of the bag, but we are aware of the consequences, and have counted the cost. We are perfectly conscious that, in acknowledging the hand of the Lord and the instrumentality of a Prophet in this matter, we are raising a nest of hornets, in the shape of unbelievers, about our ears. But no matter, with us truth will out—at the proper time. And if we thereby gain the favor of the Lord, which we undoubtedly shall, of what avail is the enmity of the world? "If God be for us, who can be against us?" A few of the poor amongst men—honest in heart, who have been long and anxiously "waiting for the consolation of Israel," will receive our testimony as the very bread and water of life to their hungry and thirsty souls. And the Holy Spirit of God shall bear testimony with their spirits that we speak the truth of heaven. The emperor and the king, who roll in luxuries, and fare sumptuously every day; the uninspired preist, who "preaches for hire and divines for money;" the statesman, whose little-great soul is not sufficiently capacious to receive aught but paltry, petty, party politics; the philosopher, who glories chiefly in his intellectual power and attainments; the general, who rejoices in his stalwart warriors, arrayed in all the magnificent "pomp and pride and circumstance of war;" the lawyer, the "open Sesame," to whose legal lips is the magic "six-and-eight-pence" down; the tradesman, whose contracted mind scarce looks beyond his counter; the debauchee, who diverts the stream of life into the very gulf of death; the murderer, the liar, the drunkard, the whoremonger, and the giddy, vacillating multitude who sail for ever with the stream—these are they to whom our words are words of fire, because they token forth the end of sin and vile hypocrisy.

But why should men, almost universally, rise up against the Lord and against His anointed? Why are the very imperfect governments of human invention so very sweet to the palate, and the perfect govenment of heaven so exceedingly distasteful? Do the breathings of inspiration go forth among the nations as the exhalations of the deadly Upas tree? Verily they are treated as though they did. But we fearlessly assert that the adoption of the government of heaven upon the earth is consistant not only with the Scriptures, but with the highest wisdom, the purest reason, and the soundest common sense. Mankind must be governed by truth or by error—if by truth, then by God, who is truth impersonated; if by error, then by the devil, who is error impersonated. Following the matter to its practical working, we arrive at the conclusion, that if men are governed by truth and God, it must be through His representative upon the earth—an Apostle, Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; if by error and the devil, they must remain subject to their present genius of government, they must submit to the devil's representatives on the earth—those who, like him, have assumed an authority to which they have no righteous claim. What could be clearer and more self-evident than this? Yet with heart and soul will men, and religious men too, reject all overtures from the Almighty, and close their ears to every suggestion of inspiration, preferring to grope along, as their forefathers have done, in the wilderness of error, and the thick darkness which invariably covers the earth when the lamp of revelation is extinguished, and the rays of inspiration are shut out.

Our testimony may be unpopular, we may be considered impostors, fanatics, or enthusiasts, but we declare, and history abundantly proves the fact, that no society or nation can progress towards perfection unless led by the Lord through his Holy Priesthood. Those societies or nations who are not so led, are continually subject to and distracted by divisions, envyings, strife, violence, murder, wars, tyranny, oppresion, and every species of corruption, which will infallibly eventuate in dissolution and utter ruin. But those who are led by the Lord must progress in truth, virtue, peace, prosperity, power, influence, dominion glory, and happiness, for He has attained to these things, and knows how to lead others in the same path, and there is no stand-point with those who follow Him. It is impossible for those who are governed by Satan to become perfect in truth and virtue, for he has never attained to those things himself, and therefore cannot direct others in the pursuit of them.

We have read of a certain Prophet named Joseph, who was inspired of the Lord, and, thereby saved all his father's house, and the inhabitants of the country of the Nile, and indeed many other countries, from the fatal effects of seven years' famine. The king of the country made this Prophet "ruler over all the land," and so able and judicious was his administration that "there was corn in Egypt," and consequently salvation, when the dearth, like a gaunt spectre, was stalking through every other land, leaving a mercilessly withering blight in his wake. Here is a manifest demonstration of the truth that a Prophet of God is the proper person to direct the affairs of a nation. After this famine, in whom would Pharaoh have most confidence to administer the affairs of his kingdom—his wise and learned statesman, or Joseph? Would he be likely to discard the man who, by an inspired masterstroke of policy, and at the same time at the urgent request of the people, made them, their cattle, their land, and all they possessed, the personal property of his royal master? Joseph and his kindred were held in honor and esteem until "there arose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph." Having saved the nation from death, He was more entitled than any other man to rule.

But we need not go back to ancient times for examples. In our own day has it been demonstrated that an inspired man, though with little education, and little practical knowledge of the subtle ways of the world, can organize a system which confounds the wisdom of the wisest worldling, and brings to naught the understanding of the most prudent among the nations. Twenty-five years ago Joseph Smith laid the foundation of a work which is considered the wonder of the age, commenced to establish a community which is accounted the greatest phenomenon of the nineteenth century, and he did this not by his own wisdom, but by inspiration from heaven. He organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, originally of six members, by revelation from the Almighty. And with what effect? Times without number have divines statesman, editors, rejoicing in the largest experience, the most extensive knowledge, and the widest influence, prophesied that the Prophet and the Saints would come to naught, and not only prophesied this, but have tried to bring it about, yet all with no effect, except to increase the stability and influence of that which they sought to overthrow and annihilate. Is it not a great argument in favor of inspired leadership, for a young, poor, illiterate man to give to the world, in the middle of the nineteenth century, a new religion, a new system of theology, a new organization, and new social laws and relations, and do it in the midst of the most pitiless storm of calumny and law-defying opposition from the learned, powerful, and repeatedly pious of the age, yea, not only from them, but from all classes of men? And is not this argument clinched by the fact that the success of said religion, theology, organization, laws, and relations should be so remarkable as to be deemed altogether unique—without parallel in sacred or profane history?

Joseph Smith, by the sheer force of principles revealed from heaven through him, gathered together a people from the four quarters of the globe, built cities for them to dwell in, and temples in which they might be taught more perfectly of the Lord, yet his successor, Brigham Young, having been called to take hold of the work in the advanced state it had reached at the assassination of Joseph, has been enabled to offer a more extended, a world-wide example of the superiority of inspired leadership. When the Saints were compelled to quit Nauvoo, Brigham Young, like a second Moses, led the Latter-day Israel safely from the midst of their enemies' camp, through a wild, uncultured, Indian wilderness, to an abode of peace in the midst of the Rocky Mountains, and did all this without assistance, except from his brethren and his God. So far were the American people from helping to lighten the privations and hardships of the great exodus, that they bought some of the exiles' property as a greedy lawyer would buy it—for an old song, and drove them from the remainder without pay. But this was not all. The government, in the height of its magnanimity, made demand for, and obtained, a battalion of 500 of the best and ablest of the camp to fight against the Mexicans, while affectionate wives aged and decrepit parents, and helpless infants were left in the midst of the Indians, on the outskirts of that civilization which had ruthlessly driven men, women, and children from their much-loved homes. But the exodus was accomplished, a new settlement was made which prospered so as to become a territory in three years. And from that time nothing has prevailed against the onward progress of this great work. Those who have lifted their puny arm against the Lord and against His Prophet and people, have been speedily confounded, and have been so signally discomfited as to fly on swiftest wing to congenial climes. The success of the Saints, since their settlement in Great Salt Lake Valley, is universally admitted to be without a parallel. They have been constantly receiving accessions to their numbers, brought together by the power of their principles alone, and all coming from places 1000 to 10,000 miles remote from the common centre. This has all been done by a poor and universally despised and persecuted people, without assistance, except from the Lord, and with the flower of their manhood abstracted from their camp.

With infinite advantage to our argument, we might refer, by way of contrast, to the position of Britain for the last year. She boasts of the most pious and learned divines, the wisest and most experienced statesman, the most able administrative tact, the first business talent, a navy as numerous as those of all the rest of the world put together, a mercantile marine that penetrates nearly all the waters of the globe, riches above other nations, and stores in profusion, yet has she proved herself utterly incompetent to save her expeditionary force of 30,000 or 40,000 men from starvation. She was not poverty stricken, like the Saints. She was not driven from her home. She was not a thousand miles from the luxuries, comforts, and even the necessities of civilized life. The flower of her manhood was not dastardly drawn from her midst. No, she had none of these things to contend with. Yet did she prove as signally deficient for the emergency she was placed in last winter, as Brigham Young, destitute of all those resources, proved himself efficient for his emergency. Six Crimean miles were more disastrous to England than were a thousand miles of American prairie and kanyon to Brigham Young. If during the past year Britain had been subjected to the government of the Lord, through a Prophet—say Brigham Young, would she have been so disgraced in the eyes of the nations? Let the honest thinker answer.

In conclusion, we will observe that the Lord has set His hand to teach the nations, if they have not already learned, that the people who are not governed by Him and His laws cannot prosper, but must be brought to naught, in the very nature of things. And we invite all emperors, kings, princes, rulers, and people on the face of the whole earth to come without delay and make their peace with God, through His Prophet Brigham—surrender themselves, their wives, their children, their authority, their riches, and their possessions to Him as the rightful owner, for the "earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." Then they can receive such things from Him who alone has true power to give them, and receiving them from such an eternal source they become eternal riches, and, as long as faithfulness remains, no man or power in this world, or the next, will be suffered to rob the holders of these everlasting riches. If our invitation is taken, good; if not taken, mankind universally will learn by their own sad experience that their gods, their riches and property, their emperors, kings, and princes cannot save them from the fearful desolations which will come upon the earth, or, in other words, will not prove equal to the exigencies of the times. Yes, men will discover that under a divinely inspired leader only can they be preserved in the "perilous times" to come. The rulers and people of those nations that have not a Prophet for their governor will yet be very glad of the privilege of going to that nation which is led by inspiration, and saying, as the Egyptians did to Joseph—"Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? buy us and our land for bread, and we and our land will be servants" unto the Lord God of Hosts.

The Simple Truth.

What power there is in the simple truth! What a solid respectability invests the character of a man whose words are known to be the liberal transcript of his mind! How small and despicable in his calm presence appear the artifices of the Jesuit, the tricks of the humbug, the non-committalism of the politician! The simple truth—without exaggeration, without concealment—how beautiful it is, and how strong!

There is a prevalent feeling in the world that the simple truth is not to be spoken. "Children and fools speak truth," says a current proverb. We attribute this feeling to the corruption of the ruling classes throughout Christendom for the last century. They have held a false position in the world, and have tried to maintain themselves in their places by diplomacy and lies. Napoleon Bonaparte was an unscrupulous liar. His bulletins were almost always a tissue of theatrical semi-falsehoods; and his minister Talleyrand was, and is, another name for polished subterfuge. In our own country what is politics but wire-pulling? and what is wire-pulling but the art of plausible misrepresentation? Thus the simple truth has fallen into disrepute. Thus the successful liar has come to be applauded for his ingenuity, instead of being execrated for his baseness and despised for his littleness. Thus the dignity and power of perfect sincerity have been obscured and forgotten.

We have been reading the Washington Papers lately, and any one who wishes to understand the character of George Washington must read those papers. His character is therein depicted unconsciously by himself, and no puffing biographer comes in with his windy paragraphs to disturb the reader's reflections. The impression they leave on the reader's mind is, that the secret of Washington's power lay in his simple, absolute, and impregnable integrity. His mental operations were slow. He was no talker, no "thinker," no writer. He was not a man of books, nor of ideas. He never said a great word, nor even what is called a "good thing." He was a plain, methodical, prudent, painstaking man, without brilliancy of any kind. But he was known to be perfectly reliable, incapable of artifice, incorruptibly honest, and unfalteringly faithful to every trust. His words were the words of simple truth. His acts were the acts of an honest man. He feared death not at all, but he feared dishonor with an infinite fear. He had not a millionth part of Napoleon's talent; but by virtue of his single-mindedness and instinctive love of truth, he was a million times superior to Napoleon. His life was a triumph; Napoleon's was a failure. His career was like the career of the sun, beautiful in the morning, powerful at noon, glorious and serene in the evening, sinking majestically to repose, followed by the admiration of a continent. Napoleon's career was volcanic and destructive, and at the end there was merely the fume and glare of a volcano which is spent.

These are all trite sayings. But the best truths are trite, and therefore are the less likely to be uttered. But our young men need to be reminded that honesty is power, and that sincerity is safe and wise. Humbug does not pay. Humbug is not necessary. Appearances, we know, are against these assertions, but appearances are deceptive. That man alone has a sure ground of prosperity who is in a way to render the public a service which is genuine, and whose words never create expectations which his actions do not satisfy. If anyone replies, that most business men practice some deception, our answer is, that most business men fail! We believe they fail because they practice deception, and that a general return to truth and honesty would give to business that stability and safety the want of which now causes such agonies of anxiety.

We believe in the might of the simple truth. It is the strongest thing under the sun. It outdoes talent, and outlasts it. It is precious, it is beautiful, it is high, it is great. Nothing can atone for the want of it. Nothing is powerful enough to overthrow it. It makes the lowliest man heroic. The absence of it renders the most richly endowed man despicable. Happily for mankind, few men can be brilliant. Happily for mankind, all men can be honest in word and deed.—[Life Illustrated.

A Flying Machine.

The Paris Academy of Science has lately been investigating the flying machine invented by Don Diego de Salamanca. The machine consists in a case two feet long and one foot wide, adapted to a band of leather round the waist, buckled behind. The two iron rods, fastened to the case, support a small piece of wood on which the feet repose. The case contains a simple and ingenious mechanism, similar to that employed to set an automaton in motion. The mechanism is worked by means of a handle, which sets at work two large wings, ten feet long, made up of very thin caoutchouch, covered with feathers, and the wings may be so worked as to produce vertical, perpendicular, or horizontal flying. The number of turns given to the handle determines the height to which it may go. The handle has to be turned every quarter of a league to regulate the distance, and the operation of turning lasts one minute. Horizontal flying is the most difficult; the wings beat the air like the feet of a swan when it swims.

The Richmond Dispatch speaks of a pamphlet just published in that vicinity which estimates that, within the last forty years, 61,624 slaves have escaped from the South, or fifteen hundred annually, and that the total loss is $7,740,800.

Letter of R. J. Breckinridge.

Rev. R. J. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, has addressed a letter to Senator Sumner, in New York, not long since. This letter is one of the most eloquent productions to which this controversy has given rise. Its pregnant suggestions and forcible appeals ought not to be lost on the people of the North. For, if those people disregard such appeals—if they persist in putting themselves under the direction of such blind guides as Sumner—so certainly as night follows day, their perversity will bring down great disasters upon the country. Can this be doubted, when it is considered that Senator Sumner is vehemently advocating the immediate Abolition of Slavery, and is heard with applause by "crowded and highly respectable" auditories at the North?

We make one or two extracts from Mr. Breckenridge's admirable letter.

Allow me, sir, to utter, in one sentence the substance of my whole thought touching the madness of the times, about the whole question of negro slavery. Here we are—a great people, with a glorious mission set before us. More than twenty millions of us—with whose destiny the destiny of three or four millions of blacks is fearfully combined. One way or other we must solve their destiny, when we solve our own. This is wholly unavoidable. But the madness is, that every seven white Americans must needs cut each other's throats concerning the fate of one black African! Is there no solution of the problem of their destiny and ours, but that solution which destroys us, without benefitting them? And can statesman such as I do not see sufficient reason to doubt you are—and patriots such as I have not the heart to deny you to be, find no better solution of this terrible problem—no nobler issue of our sublime hopes, than mutual destruction by the men of the North and the men of the South—for the sake of the African slaves scattered thinly over the continent? Are we not able to bear through, by our invincible strength even such a parasite as this black race, carrying them forward far beyond anything they could have reached without us, and yet mounting up ourselves, far beyond anything they may ever reach! Shame upon every American statesman, and every American patriot, who is insensible to the glory of such a result! Infamy to every one who conspires to defeat it!

And yet, sir, you, an American Senator, speaking in the name of the great commonwealth, in whose bosom stands Bunker Hill; and sitting in the seat of that great statesman and patriot who saw no hope for public liberty higher than that which rests upon the Union of these States; you, an American Senator, who have studied the past, and who fear God, allow yourself to bring the whole force of your character, your position and your great gifts, to bear directly upon the point at which alone it is possible to wreck the country, and to destroy us altogether! The very madness of the times assumes in you its most frantic aspect; and you openly avow that slavery in America, is a wrong so grievous and unquestionable that it should not be allowed to continue; nay, that it should cease to exist at once; nay, that a wrong so transcendant, so loathsome, so direful, must be encountered whenever it can be reached, and the battle must be continued without truce or compromise, until the field is entirely won. Such are your words, profoundly eloquent; unspeakably frantic!

After all, I cannot persuade myself that God will allow us to degrade ourselves so utterly as to break up this glorious confederacy on such a question as this. I do not allow myself to believe that the mass of the American people are so utterly destitute of the sublime instinct of their country's mission among the nations. Civil war is not a remedy; it is the most direful of all diseases.—National strength in a day like ours, and to freeman, is not so much a glory as it is a necessity; the grand necessity of their liberty and independence. As to slavery, it is a question about which men may differ according to the necessity of their condition and the point of view from which they consider it. But the cordial and indissoluble Union of these States is a matter concerning which no American who has a true heart in his bosom can possibly have but one opinion, one purpose. If there be one political duty common to us all, and transcendantly clear and binding, it is that we should visit with immediate and condign punishment every party and every public man who is not loyal to the Union and the Constitution.—[St. Joseph Gazette.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 22, 1855.

"Tell Us When Shall These Things Be?"

"For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom."

THE institutions of men, the power of nations, and the stability of governments are now about to be tested. The present conflict between the Allies and Russia is but the prelude of that great struggle of Gog and Magog to retain their ascendency upon the earth.

The gladiators of the Crimea advance and retire, parry and thrust with all the art of old stagers of the ring, with the world as audience, and the house ready to come down with applause on either side, as in turn each reels under the sturdy blow of his opponent. The parties looking on stand in much the same relation as did a certain loving couple; whilst her lord was in the cordial embrace of Bruin, the conjugal love of the better half found utterance in gentle terms of "It's the only fight in which I didn't care who got licked." It is not a war of human advancement, but one for spoil. They would ape the tiger and the lion, each ready to appropriate the largest share of the prey. It is not for freedom, but for supremacy. It is not a war of races, but an outbreak of clanship, the noisy, clamorous confusion of mobocracy, with no end or object but destruction and plunder; therefore the liberalist has no sympathy in the result of the present struggle.

All Europe is now convulsed by this conflict for the balance of power. This apple of discord, long since sown, is producing a rich harvest of fruit for the nations, and the United States, not able to grasp the tempting fruit in Cuba, Nicaragua, and elsewhere, as a resort, turns and prepares to fight among themselves. The North and South are about entering the arena, and rolling up their sleeves for a death struggle, each with the purpose of securing a larger share of the paternal estate, and both anxious to elucidate for this continent the vexed question of the balance of power.

It is not a question of freedom or right,
But simply of physical power and might.

Nations are not now what they were a thousand years ago; arts and sciences were then in a state of embryo; they were nationally bound down with antiquated, cast-iron opinions; they thought, acted, went to war, conquered, and made peace, according to the stereotyped notions of their fathers; but circumstances have materially changed, especially within the last century. Among the forces that have aided in producing these changes, the Press, Steam, and Electricity rank first in their wonderful effect upon the character and prospects of mankind; relations have been rapidly formed between kingdoms and tribes scarce known to each other before; nations are now like neighbors, overlooking each other's door yard, and the old aristocratic barriers of society are fast dissolving under the influence of these modern inventions. Thus the varied interests of kingdoms, tribes, and tongues are mingled and interwoven as they never were since the confounding of language and dispersion from the Tower of Babel. There are ingredients now mingling with the boiling mass that the analysis of political chemistry have failed yet to discover. And the great question is now to be solved, Are the bands surrounding mere human governments strong enovgh to sustain the fermentation and pressure of this strange conglomerate?

Formerly, when it required years of toil and danger to cross a territory, or visit a neighboring kingdom, when enlightened nations could be amused and instructed (as by Herodotus) year after year by the incidents of a thousand miles of travel, and sages gravely assembled to learn the peculiar characteristics of a neighboring tribe, then cities could be destroyed, nations and dynasties overthrown, without the knowledge of the nearest kingdom, except as the moving squadron of the conqueror, or the retreating masses of the conquered, spread the news slowly through the surrounding districts. Under those circumstances, history records and beautifully illustrates successively the relative properties and value of powers that could then rule the world. "A head of gold," "breasts and arms of silver," "belly and thighs of brass," or "legs of iron," in turn, held almost undisputed away. Then each factious tribe or nation could be met and subdued in detail, and all governed by the central power. The power was not then a mixture of "iron with miry clay," "a kingdom partly strong and partly broken," but all-powerful in its concentration, and capable at any time of overwhelming every effort of man to raise himself above the tide of oppression that weighed heavily upon him; and after the luxuriant reign of gold and silver, and the less lenient one of brass, came the uncompromising power and iron rule of Rome, as it were, to crush out the last remaining spark of freedom. All was sultry and oppressive; no lightning to purify the moral atmosphere or rend the sable clouds of despotism that shrouded the world in darkness.

Such an incubus of power and despotism could not always rest upon man, to paralize for ever the divinity within him, consistent with the purposes of God in his creation, and that which, through union of power, was "strong as iron," became, through division, weak as the miry clay.

Thus change succeeded change, and billow after billow of the great living mass rolled on through centuries of time, dashing upon its shores countless wrecks of human ambition, marking its ebb and flow by the ruin of cities, dethronement of kings, and the overthrow of empires; showing man in his folly (called wisdom) "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men," that His purposes and designs (though strange) should be accomplished in the fullness of time.

Following the advent of the Messiah, and after the lapse of many centuries of darkness, and the moral gloom of despotism prevailing the nations, another power than mere brute force was introduced to assist in dispersing the gloom and breaking the iron arm of despotic power, that though divided and sub-divided, still reigned triumphantly over the earth. The Press commenced to marshal its hosts, and herald forth a new era; its powerful influence soon become apparent upon the massive strongholds of tyranny, and ere the astonished multitudes were well composed, the giant wonders of Steam were added, to give impetus to the change, and weaken the still powerful machinery of human governments; and as though the time was yet short for the execution of some great design, the Magnetic Wire, with its unseen agency and subtle power, was introduced to hurry on the crisis, like angels conveying to the wide world the intelligence that the end is near, and prepare them for greater light from the realms above, and a future reign of righteousness on the earth.

When God, through his prophet Daniel, revealed his purposes in relation to the governments of earth, He used a symbol (in form of man) the most direct and plain to the understanding of man in every age, and to make assurance doubly sure, pointed distinctly to the power that then reigned, "Thou art this head of gold," "and after thee shall arise another kingdom," &c., leaving no room to spiritualize on or question its literal signification, and then continues, "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another even as iron is not mixed with clay"—thus defining a specific time to the existence of a centralized power, and the inadhesive properties of the kingdoms succeeding it.

Since that time all history conspires to prove the truth of that vision, and it has been confirmed by the repeated and signal failure of some of the most gigantic intellects the world has ever produced, in their efforts towards the centralization of power; and notwithstanding the combined improvements in the enginery of war, with the powerful intellects of a Charlemagne or a Napoleon, the bold intriguing designs of a Metternich, a Peter or Nicholas of Rusia, have been exercised at various times, it is all in vain, since the writing upon the wall is, "Mene, mene, tekel," thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting. And it may be now truly said, "a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand."

Let those who anticipate the world to be centralized, or, in the words of Napoleon, that Europe will be republic or Cossack, remember that though the king of the north "honor the God of forces, and he overflow and and pass over," yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him, for one government shall not rule over the earth until this last great convulsion shall subside under the peaceful influence of that organization seen by Daniel, called the kingdom of God in the last days. The coming crisis is not the end of all things, the annihilation of existing matter, or extinction of all that compose the ingredients of human governments; it may be the "wreck of empire," though not "the crash of worlds." It is to be a thorough test of the governments and institutions of men; proving the legitimacy of ruling dynasties, and the unaided power of man to govern men—a shaking that will move all things that can be shaken. It is the "time of the end," not when the "world shall be burned up, and few men left," but the time that the "nation that will not serve God shall perish"—the time of pruning the bitter branches. At this time "the kingdom of God is at hand," with all its strangeness, for "His ways are not as our ways," &c. And it is as strange and uncouth to the world as Mormonism is to Christendom; therefore, though a "man declare it unto them, they will not believe." The times so long looked for, and desired by holy men of old has come, "of the restitution of all things."

The nations do not yet see the sign in the heaven of this coming of the Son of Man, yet the tokens already appear of the coming end. Another and greater drama upon the stage of life is about to open. Bring forth your astrologers and divines; answer ye wise men of the earth. The sky is red—

Tell us what of the morrow,
The truth cannot be bound;
Shall nations bow in sorrow,
Or songs of joy abound?

Empires, kingdoms, thrones, princes, presidents, rulers, kings, and potentates, all are tremulously anxious, looking for things that are coming on the earth. Tenets, dogmas, religion, christianity, all are shattered alike; nothing permanent, nothing on which dependence can be placed. "When ye see these things begin to come to pass, then know ye the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Cast your eyes to the mountains, for God has set up his kingdom, which, like the "little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, shall become a great mountain and fill the whole earth."

And where now vice, crime, and unbridled corruption rules triumphant, the God of Heaven shall reign; and justice, mercy, and truth shall extend over the face of the earth as water covereth the mighty deep.

He that hath ears to hear let him hear.

Who shall have the Crimea?

It is announced authoritatively that an arrangement exists amidst the allied powers that Turkey is to have the Crimea. What a glorious result this for the millions of treasure exhausted and the countless lives sacrificed to the god of war! Turkey to have the Crimea in compensation for the principalities retained by Austria! A further balancing this of territory against territory, with nothing to show in the shape of justice

It is really melancholy to consider to what a pass this boasted defence of "civilization" from "barbarism" has come, when the representatives of this very barbarism are pushed forward in the foreground, and on the very scene where all the fighting has been taking place. If the Crimea be taken, we cannot doubt that the Turks will be made welcome to occupy the trenches of Perekop, under the impression that the Crimea was their own. As soon, however, as the Black Sea and the sea of Azof become strictly commercial, the empire of the Turks must cease. The Osmanli race, who now are less than a million in number, must succumb to those more powerful and enlightened.

Turkey to have the Crimea! It might as well have had given to it a share in the milky way, and plant its scimetar in the belt of Orion. France wants the Crimea for glory, England for commercial prosperity. This very farce, in the way of proposition, shows how men are bewildered as to the object of the war, how France and England are mutually jealous of one another, and even before the hour of partition arrives, are well nigh quarreling over the spoils. Looking at the relative position of the Crimea, one cannot fail to discover how valuable is its position for the conducting of a grand system of exchange for all the regions of Central Asia, under conditions of unrestricted commercial intercourse with that point. For, after all, it is but a point on the world's surface, but one owing importance to its position. As yet, the spade has done more for Russia than the sword.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.—According to Lloyd Garrison's negro Liberator, "a Woman's Rights Convention is to be held in Boston this day; and Lucy Stone Blackwell, Ernestine L. Rose, Pauline W. Davis, Antoinette L. Brown, Sarah M. Grimké, Lucretia Mott, and Harriet K. Hunt, are expected among the speakers. Also Ralph Waldo Emerson, Theodore Parker, and Wendell Phillips. A large attendance is anticipated," and considerable fun. It is to be hoped they will propose some plan of relief for their sisters at the Great Salt Lake. One husband for forty women! Let them make a dead set at Brigham Young.—[N. Y. Herald, Sept. 19.

Don't let your jealousy run away with your judgment, Mr. Herald, and make yourself ridiculous by dictating to the ladies a hostile warfare against a gentleman so philanthropic as to become the husband and guardian of forty (according to your showing) of their sex. Stick to your Bible text, and don't so "covet your neighbor's wife" as to make war upon him with an army of ladies. But there is no danger; the ladies will not fall into your ranks to attack one of their best friends, notwithstanding your effort to make them believe he is their enemy. No, Mr. Bennett, it won't go down; and you will have to grunt, and bear it without their sympathy.

NEWS FROM THE PLAINS.—Chicago, Sept. 17, 1855.—Mr. Morin has reached St. Joseph Mo., with the remains of Capt. Gibson, who was killed at the mouth of Deer Creek by the Sioux. He reports the Sioux to be troublesome. Had an engagement with them north of Platte Bridge on the 4th of July, when two Indians were killed. General Harney left Fort Kearney on the 4th of August with 1,300 men making forced marches. His purpose was unknown.

FROM KANSAS.—St. Louis Sept. 17, 1855,—The Abolitionists in Kansas have nominated ex-Governor Reeder for Delegate to Congress. The second Monday in October has been fixed by them for the election, being one week after the election called by the Legislature.

George W. Perkins of Virginia is announced in the Kansas Register as the candidate for Delegate to Congress. The Register assumes to be the organ of the National Democracy, whose policy is based on a strict construction of the principles of the Kansas Nebraska act.

THE fidelity of the negroes is spoken of as not the least noticeable feature in the history of the yellow fever at Norfolk. It is difficult, nearly impossible, to separate servants and mistresses. Forbidden to enter the sick chamber, the blacks will creep into concealed places hide beneath the beds, crouch in corners, employ every artifice, to remain in attendence upon their mistress. Left to themselves, the negroes are abject, refuse to take remedies, and die rapidly. Their last wish often is that they may be buried near their mistress.

Mexico, its Present and Future.

It is not at this point in the changing fortunes of Mexico that we feel disposed to go into a minute retrospect of the circumstances that brought about the late revolution, and which have placed Mexico a stage further in national dissolution. The dream of Spanish interference, of a revived monarchy on those eastern shores, is no longer indulged in. The question is one of prolonged self-existence or immediate absorption into the federal union of the United States. Although, at the moment at which we write, every thing seems tending to a state of quietude, we can but anticipate the renewal, under various schemes of personal ambition, of those revolutions hitherto so numerous and rapid in succession, and which, in their course, entail so many evils, that, at the end, hope of any reform in the national administration is abandoned for the sake of an amicable adjustment. Already, indeed, a new revolution may be in embryo; but we prefer to believe that the late warlike aspect of affairs has been exchanged for one permanently pacific, though this result is only to be looked for in the strong iron arm of Arrera, and in the confidence his arms have induced in his power to suppress all counter movements. What the people of Mexico need beyond all things else is security. So long as their leaders are dishonest, and live for selfish aggrandizement, that beautiful and fertile country will ever be desolated by warfare worthy of no higher praise than that which may be termed guerilla. This country has looked on and smiled with some little disdain at the futile matters really in dispute, esteeming one ruler as good as another, so long as no great principles were involved. Abroad, on the continent of Europe, the only light in which the inevitable tendency of this country in respect to Mexico is looked on, is the aggression of a colossal power on a feeble one, utterly unable to cope with it. If we enquire on what this aggression is based, we find it in the superior security attached to republican institutions, as compared with those which, nominally under this name, afford a field for the play of the worst passions of individuals, to whom adventitious circumstances or superior craft have given a temporary ascendancy. It is true this country has a double point to gain—the exclusion of foreign influence from this northern continent, as well as her own paramount ascendancy. The United States looks upon each successive acquisition as an immense service to the laws of liberty. Immediate and not gradual reforms are worked, and by peaceable and not violent modes. Every condition is present in Mexico to allow the free development of the institutions of this country. It is the vicinity of the United States, and her known views, which prevents Mexico from being subject to all the evils of a position in which France once stood, one in which absolutism or horrible and contagious anarchy were the only alternatives left her. Still there are other natural and peculiar rights of every people and nation. As, however, the people of Mexico have never been consulted by their rulers on internal administration, it is little likely that they will be consulted on the sale and delivery of successive portions of their still ample territory.

In Mexico men of commanding ability and rare energy are not wanting, but patriotism must sink where craft alone can triumph. As her hopes of redress become fainter and fainter, the propability of a rapid acquirement by this country of State after State increases. The present moment, when some of the leading powers of Europe are engaged in war, is especially favorable to this. No arms, no treasure can be spared or sent, whatever the good will put forth. The acquisition of Mexico by this country is regretfully anticipated. There is an aversion to this government, without contempt for that which Mexico from time to time establishes. Vigilant as the European powers may be for their own interest, their powerlessness to make any military display must lead them to an endeavor to look at the brightest side of what must surely happen. Once convinced that the doctrine of "inevitable destiny" exists in the nature of things, and not in mere vanity and words and sounds, they will acquiesce with a far better humor. Could the foreign debts of Mexico be but satisfactorily adjusted, the way would be better prepared. It is with difficulty that British capitalists have obtained the interest of their government loans to which the honor of Mexico was pledged, and there are at the present moment immense sums of money invested in enterprises that will prove utterly barren of results till such time as assured security is induced, and new energy put forth in all branches of home industry. Of these are the large iron mines of the country, some in the vicinity of the city of Mexico itself, and which at the present time cannot be worked with any profit. The foreign trade of Mexico is well nigh annihilated. No commercial treaty is longer recognized as existing between it and this country. This country has the advantage of defined views, and of moving with unity of action and unwavering resolution. If she does not seem at all times to exercise moderation, she at least has been wise. Speculation is still afloat as to periods of acquisition, and commercial speculations and "inland route" schemes are all dependent on the time of consummation. It is not probable that this country will long remain on the southern bank of the Rio Grande. It is a line, that like the rubicon, must be passed, and contemplating the present political convulsion in the central American States, and the success of the fillibustero expeditions on the Isthmus, we may shortly look to the time when the effete king of the Mosquitos, rioting in drunken orgies, sustained by British diplomacy, will alone confront its rising power, though if we look yet further, we will find Americans concerning themselves with the Carthagenia canals, giving them immediate vested interests in the Caraccas, which has long had its land route by San Juan.

PHILADELPHIA, September 19, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR,—Having read lately an article in the "Woman's Advocate," of this city, I enclose it, with the following remarks. I should like to see it published, as it contrasts so strongly with many things we are in the habit of reading. It does honor to the writer for its whole-souled expression of humanity and liberal consideration of others, though differing with them in sentiments and views. There is really so little of it in the world that I take pleasure in noticing it, being far above the usual sickly sentimentalism of the Press over popular subjects of charitable consideration. It is a most outrageous fact, that while the Press has been teeming with commiseration for the poor, the sick, or the distressed on every side, the probability of sixty thousand men, women, and children starving to death in Utah, has been a matter of congratulation throughout the enlightened States of the Union, not a word of consolation, even from the editors of charitable, religious publications. It will not do; it is not popular; they are Mormons. What a comment on Christian charity! It reminds one of the remarkable words of John, when the two prophets should be destroyed in Jerusalem—"And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another, because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth."

Oh! the grovelling sycophancy of the Press; caterers to the depraved, vitiated, hypocritical cant of would-be moralists and faithless religionists, who bow their heads in lowly reverence to the earth in worship to the god of this world; to them the ways of God are indeed past finding out.

The Press, venal in the extreme, wait but the sta-boy of public prejudice to pounce upon the poor wight whose tattered coat ill compares with their own glossy covering, and they have exercised this gift to the full extent of the law upon the Mormons, from their earliest history. It is not then that they expect anything from the Press; they have passed through narrower places than the present, trusting in the arm of the Mighty God of Israel. He did not fail them then, and they have nothing to fear now from the influence of a corrupt and soul-bought Press. The Mormons have learned to look lightly upon the detraction and falsehoods of their opponents, and have hearts ever alive to a free, generous, unbigotted expression of humanity from any one; such an one, though differing in "views and sentiments," they honor for their noble disregard of popular prejudice and disinterested advocacy of truth wherever found.

When the Mormons had been driven from their homes in Illinois, there were few to commiserate with them upon their almost hopeless lot; they went forth unsympathized with by the public at large; yet, by the help of God, they found a home in a desert mountain wilderness; they experienced the dreadful ravages of the destroying cricket at the time when their only hope to live, a thousand miles from the nearest settlements, seemed to rest upon their crop, and they readily acknowledge the hand of God in their salvation by the means of gulls, who there swept the crickets from the face of the land. There are now sixty thousand persons in Utah, and God is still with them. They know in whom they trust; they have no fears of starving though their crops are short. They do not crave the sympathies of a venal Press, and are quite willing to leave its charitable inconsistencies to be held to public view by the few, like the writer in the Advocate, who, uncommitted, unsold, and in the purity of their heart, dare step forth amid the slaves of sectarianism and prejudice, and point out their folly to the honest-hearted. The Mormons in the South.

FROM San Bernardino we glean no news of importance. Their crops being gathered in, our Mormon friends are now devoting themselves to the task of raising means to pay for their lands. They propose to sell lots and farms at fair prices to those who desire them, and for this purpose have sent out their members through every portion of the State to preach the faith and represent their present difficulties. As far as soil, climate and natural features are concerned, no point in the State furnishes more attractive inducements; and however much people may differ on the subject of Mormonism, no umbrage can be taken against the settlers of San Bernardino as citizens and neighbors. They pursue the even tenor of their way, minding their own business, pursuing quieting their avocations; and in many things furnishing an example worthy of imitation. They have few or no law-suits; no drunkenness; no rioting; no murders; no thefts. They work together and assist one another, and are building up for themselves a city which will be an ornament to the country and a source of pride to themselves.—[Southern Californian.

Sound Doctrine.

IN a sermon delivered by Rev. Dr. Bellows of New York, before the Western Unitarian Conference, is the following paragraph:

"For my part, I say it in all solemnity, I have lived to become sincerely suspicious of the piety of those who do not love pleasure in any form. I cannot trust the man that never laughs; that is always sedate; that has no apparent outlets for those natural springs of sportiveness and gaiety that are perennial in the human soul. I know that nature takes her revenge on such violence. I expect to find secret vices, malignant sins, or horrid crimes springing up in this hot-bed of confined air and imprisoned space; and, therefore, it gives me a sincere moral gratification anywhere, and in any community, to see innocent pleasures and popular amusements resisting the religious bigotry that frowns so unwisely upon them. Anything is better than dark, dead, unhappy social life, prey to ennui and morbid excitement, which results from unmitigated puritanism, whose second crop is usually unbridled license and infamous folly.—[Ohio Columbian.

Preaching Spirits.

HAVING seen a notice in the Brooklyn Eagle, that Mrs. French, of Pittsburgh, would lecture under spiritual influence at the Brooklyn Institute, on Sunday 16th inst., at 3 o'clock P. M., I was induced in company with two others to visit that place, that we might be "taught of the ways of God more perfectly," by this modern "Aquilla," who professes to teach and administer the word of life, as she is moved upon by spirits that have passed from Tabernacles of flesh on the earth, to the spheres of spiritual existence beyond the vail. We entered the hall some fifteen minutes before the time of commencement had arrived, and were informed from the stand by an elderly gentleman, probably a German, that he held in his hand for sale a phamphlet containing "A record of facts, in Spiritual intercourse;" entitled "The Public Circle."

These papers were readily disposed of, that is the amount on hand, and a respectable looking audiance of probably two hundred anxiously awaited the onset. Presently there came from an anti-room Mrs. French, accompanied by two gentlemen, who, with her, took seats in the stand. One of the gentlemen requested that there should be singing, which was responded too by some few from among the audience in a manner that at any rate could not be reproached with ostentatious display of vocal powers, or choirical discipline; but the purpose was answered probably just as well. During a short silence that followed the singing, a singular twitching was observable about the eyebrows and mouth of the lecturer, who soon arose and with sedate countenance, and measured step, with eyes set at an elevation of forty-five degrees, advanced to the stand, or pulpit, in front of the stage; and with uplifted hands parallel to the direction of the eyes, made a short, distinct, pathetic prayer; asking God to send a good spirit, that should reveal truths that should be beneficial to the audiance before her.

She then seemed suddenly to awake to conciousness, and retired somewhat precipitately to the seat in her rear. After a few minutes had elapsed in silence, the muscles of the face of our entertainer again began to contract as before, and she advanced to the stand, apparantly unconcerned, and unintimidated. At the commencement, there was nothing observable in the speaker particularly to be admired. Her size was medium, figure unobjectionable, and dress unostentatious; but her large blue eyes peering forth from beneath a tolerable heavy brow, at an elevation just above the audiance; eyelids expanded to their utmost tension, and a peculiar glassiness to the eyes, all conspired to produce a singular, cadaverous, superhuman appearance, which evidently gave a thrilling sensation to all present. Another singular circumstance was, that the eyelids of the speaker were never seen to dilate or contract from their extended position, during the whole time occupied by the discourse. The speaker commenced in a low but distinct voice, which gradually became louder and more emphatic as she advanced. The gestures and language was almost unexceptionable, especially the gestures, which were very apropos. The hearers were admonished that the time had come when disembodied spirits could communicate with those yet tabernacling in the flesh; that revelations were being given to the sons of earth, calculated to elevate and qualify them for the higher spheres; that as a tree falleth so it must lie, or that ignorance in the tabernacle to-day could not be wisdom in the spirit world to-morrow; that progression was gradual there, as well as here, and vice versa; that the spirit is immortal, and will exist co-eternal with God himself, of whom it is a part. The Scriptures were eulogised, and pronounced to be in accordance with spiritualism; a number of passages were quoted, such as "God is a spirit, and he that worshippeth Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth," &c. The lecturer occupied from half to three-fourths of an hour, and suddenly stopped, with the right arm suspended; the head fell gently forward, and the elevated arm gradually dropped, when consciousness seemed to return; the eye-lids commenced to dilate, and all was natural again. The whole appearance was like a person under magnetic influence, in the clairvoyant state. But the merits and demerits of spiritualism and animal magnetism, and other like phenomena, I leave for knowing ones to determine.

FOR THE MORMON.

The East India Company and its People.

AT a late sitting of the House of Commons the fact came to light, that the East India Company, with all its immense operations and mutual monopolies, with its army, its newly acquired territory, and its employes, cannot show anything to its credit in its mercantile account, and is whole millions in arrears. Such a result can only be attributed to the system. One great blemish in the present system is that it perpetuates oppression, wrongs the natives, and causes many a halt in the march of civilization in India. Whether in the knowledge of its councils or not, the acts of the Company's officials are disgraced with corruption, and the splendid structure of its oriental empire is only comparable to those magnificent but mutilated and decayed mausoleums and temples, the remains of former Mogul power, and which afford neither shelter to the living nor contribute honor to the dead. There are in India a number of States hovering between independence and subjection, which the policy of the Company has hitherto prevented Great Britain from absorbing. The general terms subsisting between the Government and these subsidiary States are prostration on the one side against external enemies, and on the other the submission of all disputes with foreign States to the arbitration and decision of the protecting power, which furnishes a military force supported from lands assigned by the dependent chiefs. Troops are also maintained to act in co-operation with those which superior discipline renders so immeasurably eminent above his own. Notwithstanding, however, this set system, interference is constant in the domestic concerns of the kingdom, advantage being taken of every circumstance to bring it more and more under submission. What a commentary does not the province of Oude afford on the effects of foreign influence if we look to its condition five years ago, since when the intelligence of every mouth has described it as growing daily more miserable. With a fertile soil, with complete immunity from pestilence and famine, with eighty-five years of unbroken security from foreign enemies, what has, in this short period, rendered Oude a depopulated desert, thinned its population, hunting them into the woods and jungles to a life of brigandage, and causing whole districts to be abandoned to the rankness of uncultivated nature? The taxes imposed in support of the British Government have been so enormous, that indirectly, through the farming of the revenues, whole villages have been stormed for the refusal, or rather the incapacity of the people, to pay. The principal expense of the native government is this collection. The weak suffer for the rebellion of the powerful. The instruments are responsible only for a given amount of money due to the princes. No man in a fortified residence pays tribute unless to a power superior to his own. If poor and unable to pay, he may be enslaved. The collectors duly commissioned procure the money, by one means or other, from the Zemindars; the Zemindars employ others to wring it from the people, by torture, by threat, or by violence. Helpless and hopeless, the peasants abandon their lands and dwellings, follow a course of crime and rapine, and prey still further upon the poverty of those who are left. These become thus the victims of a double pillage. The tax collectors extort from them the defalcations of their neighbors, and in this manner hundreds of villages go to ruin, healthful tracts become wildernesses, and anarchy reigns among the population.

Half the districts contain forts, garrisoned by rebels, who frequently corrupt the tax gatherers, and, in league with them, prey upon the people. With the country thus disorganized, industry is resorted to only as a naked means of subsistence; commerce languishes; and the interior streams can scarcely, if at all, be used for purposes of navigation. Even on the Ganges, few boatmen frequent the Oude bank of the river, fearful of their cargos being pillaged. Every form of misery enters into this picture; and the principle of which it is the result, is the support of the influence of a so-called civilization for the sake of supporting the sulf-sufficient boast of superiority, and securing mercantile gains.

Great Britain never wants a plea to be loosed from obnoxious conventions with Indian potentates. She puts in her paramount claims of "civilization," and this at the expense of "prosperity." Materiality, now-a-days, overrules every consideration; terror is made the normal feeling among the poor, and plunder the occupation of the powerful and the rich. More misery with more development of civilization! A task without reward, bringing the character of rulers into shame amidst a race eminent for bodily qualities and mental attributes. Viewed in any light, India claims release from her present system. If England has a mission in the East, it is not to conquer or civilize it, but, under the efficient arm of her protection, to introduce into it those humanizing influences, or rather those negative qualities of restraint, which would set aside the present system of complicated tyranny, and introduce prosperity and peace. India is at present the source of wealth to it at the expense of the happiness of its people.

From Boston.

Woman's Rights Convention—Wreck of the ship "Cohota"—Wealth of Boston—Quarantine Regulations, &c.

BOSTON, Sept. 19, 1855.

A woman's rights convention met in one of the rooms of the Tremont Temple to-day, and organized by choosing Pauline W. Davis, of Providence, president. The attendance was quite large. The convention was addressed by the President, Dr. Harriet K. Hunt, Mrs. Caroline H. Dall, Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell, Rev. T. W. Higginson, and others. In the evening Wendell Phillips was the principal speaker.

The Assessor's report gives the total valuation of Boston at two hundred and forty-two millions three hundred and forty nine thousand two hundred dollars, showing an increase over the valuation last year of fifteen millions three hundred and thirty-six thousand dollars. The rate of taxation has been fixed at seventy-seven cents on one hundred dollars, a reduction of fifteen cents from last year.

The Board of Health to-day issue a notice imposing quarantine regulations on all vessels coming from ports where yellow fever is now prevailing—the order to continue in force until the 10th of October.

Twenty-five hundred dollars have been contributed in Salem and remitted to Portsmouth and Norfolk for the relief of the sufferers there.

The ship Cohota, previously reported, remains ashore in Nantasket Roads. Her masts were cut away during the night. She has five feet of water in her hold. The steamer R. B. Forbes tried to pull her off at high water, but was unable to do so, on account of her chains having slipped. The Forbes will go to her again this afternoon, and will probably get her off. The ship has a valuable cargo of flour, hardware, provisions, &c., valued at $115,000.

MRS. LUCY STONE BLACKWELL, the woman's rights lecturer, has purchased a fine farm on Fox River, a short distance above Cedar Rapids, in Wisconsin. Whether she intends locating Mr. Blackwell, her husband, on it, or to keep it for "the boys," is not yet made public.

Distress among the Mormons.

The tone of the newspaper press in this country on the subject of Mormonism, excites the melancholy reflection that the spirit of religious persecution, which is supposed to belong to dark ages in the world's history, has not entirely disappeared from among us. We learn by the arrivals from the Great Salt Lake that the grasshoppers are destroying the crops of the Mormons to an extent which threatens to reduce that isolated people to starvation. Such a calamity, as the destruction of all the crops in any district of country, would not fall with such painful severity upon any other portion of our population.

The Mormons are cut off from the civilized world on every side by extensive plains or high mountains. To reach either our most western settlements in the valley of the Mississippi, or the settlements in California or Oregon, they will have to travel many hundreds of miles over a country which affords them no means of subsistence, and an uncertain supply of pasturage for their horses and oxen. They are probably now without the necessary teams and wagons to transport so large a population at once to a place of plenty, or to carry a sufficient amount of provisions from the nearest settlements to the Salt Lake Valley, if they had the money to pay for them. If the accounts of the ravages committed by the grasshoppers are not overstated (and they have not been contradicted, but confirmed,) our fellow-citizensi n Utah are in a most perilous condition. We need not be surprised if we learn, next spring, that thousand have perished miserably of starvation. In view of this alarming condition of many thousands of our countrymen and countrywomen, we might reasonably expect to witness some manifestations of sympathy in a portion, at least, of the numerous newspapers which publish the accounts of the damage the crops are sustaining. But not one word is spoken anywhere of regret or sympathy; on the contrary, there are frequent manifestations of satisfaction that the problem of Mormonism and its destiny is likely to be settled by the grasshoppers. What little comment we have noticed here and there has a tone of delighted chuckle that chills the blood. There is a spirit of murder in it, a suppressed shout of triumph of the persecutor over his victim, that is suppressed only because the triumph is not yet sure. Why is this so? What have the Mormons done that should engender the spirit of persecution in our breasts? Is it that they openly avow and practice the doctrine of polygamy? No. They were driven by persecution and annoyance from Ohio, and by the sword and musket from Illinois, before it was known that polygamy was one of their doctrines. They were persecuted in Missouri by the same "border ruffians" who now disturb the whole country with their lawless outrages in Kansas, and for no other reason than that they were the converts in a new religious faith. It was religious persecution then, and it is religious persecution now. Their persecutors could find plenty of reasons for their conduct then in the alleged immorality of the Mormons, and can give equally good reasons for their outrages in Kansas now. Those who persecuted them then and who would delight now to see them perish by famine, are not all so pure in their own lives as to be shocked by the immoralities of the Mormons. Nor is it the intensity of their conviction of the errors of the Mormon faith that arouses the passions in their breasts. Very few of those who,—"despitefully use them," know anything of the Mormon faith except their polygamy, and, as we have shown, their persecutions began long before their polygamy was heard of. The henions offence of the Mormons, consists in their daring to have new opinions, which, if they be true doctrines, cast a reproach upon all other sets whose doctrines must be false to just the extent of their difference from the doctrines of the Mormons.

This is the true secret of all religious persecutions. It has its origin in our self-love and pride of opinion. For this reason, and this alone, in the first place, all persecutions of new and weaker sects are begun by the older and stronger. As the work of diobolism progresses, the quarrel begets new issues; and, as in all other quarrels, both parties get in the wrong before it ends. Many who would have remined totally indifferent are attracted by the excitement created, and when fairly involved in the vortex of contention their sympathies lead them to take sides with the weaker party. In this manner the new sect is strengthened in numbers, and in a few years it acquires that respectability in the eyes of the world which nothing but age, numbers, wealth, and influence can give.

No matter what the doctrines are, whether they damn unborn babies or claim salvation for all alike, age and influence will give them respectability and nothing else under Heaven will.

We have no partiality for Mormonism. We do not know in what it consists. We do not suppose that it is any better than any other of the hudred-and one ism that have passed through the same ordeal of public opinion through which Mormonism is now passing. Polygamy receives our utter condemnation, because we believe it is a violation of the moral and social laws of the Universe. So do the doctrines of the Shakers on the marriage relation and of the Oneida Perfectionists, and the Free-Loveites, and many other, and all for the same reason; we believe they are violations of Natural law.

But it is not to condem Mormons, nor to defend them, that we speak; it is to claim for them that charity which is a necessary element in our emotional nature, to demand that in this age of enlightenment and in this country of religious toler ation by law, the press, the people and the preachers shall not indulge in petty, spiteful; and malignant persecution of the weaker religious sects; shall not exult covertly over the misfortunes of those whose only offence is an honest difference of opinion certain points of religious doctrine which are obscure enough to puzzle the whole theological world. The bloodiest wars, the deepest hatreds, the strongest dominion of passion over reason, have grown out of religious intolerations. The time has passed for those evils. They should not be countenanced for a moment.

If any one doubts that the hatred for Mormons grows out of the baser passions of our nature, let them answer this question. Why do we hate Mormons whose doctrines are nearly enough like our own to excite jealously, more than we hate Pagans whose doctrines are so entirely different from ours as not to produce the slightest jar by a comparison! Why are we so anxious to convert the Heathens and to starve the Mormons.—[Woman's Advocate.

FOR THE MORMON.

Speculationism and Heathenism.

ARTICLE ONE.

The religious impressions of the heathen world tended to foster the indulgence of almost every affection and propensity of human nature, even to the pitch of wild excess. Polytheism was not only a pleasant mental fiction, it was the imaginative projection of human passions into an unknown region of divinity, where they assumed a dramatic attitude, and became the object of an awful interest, which the believer sincerely felt as he recognized their identity with the realities which swayed their own personal experience. He required no other proof of the existence of Ares, than that he had shared the fury and seen the slaughter and the shattered walls—the work of war; and in his own submission to amorous fascination, he found evidence of their potency. In the same matter, as, from his ignorance of natural processes, the primitive man assumed the existence of a great variety of unseen persons, whose volition was the perpetual cause of the familiar natural phenomena to the heathen nations—the Greeks especially, because their life exhibited a various and energetic development—so long as they had acquired no metaphysical science, no systematic observation of the range of human affections, motives and faculties, continued to believe in the special duty of each passion, of each moral and intellectual power or ruling principle. The ideas which Plato and Aristotle afterwards understood as abstractions, presented themselves to Homer, and in some degree also to Æschylus, in the form of mighty persons, whose mysterious power over nature and the human heart was limited, in the final determination of events, by their dissentions and contradictions among each other, so that none were omnipotent; but the result of their joint councils, or, in case of dispute, the superior cunning and force of the abler among the contending gods, would in that instance dispose of the affairs of mankind. Ultimate issues of events were subjected to the decrees of a power enjoying presidential supremacy within certain constitutional limits. Thus, to Jupiter was accorded supremacy, because no purposes of mortals can elude his order or harmony. Yet there was a distracted uncertainty of choice between the several objects of religious faith, the more so that in the religious ideas of the Greek, the conception of eternity was not involved. The gods in whose existence he most earnestly believed, those identified with the several emotions and conceptions of man, were a comparatively new race; for tradition never ceased to indicate the truth that our own species, consequently, also, its special deities, must be, as it were, late comers on the earth, having been preceded during a long course of ages, which the ancient philosophers had no clue to measure, by the elder creation, from the primal womb of chaos, through the birth of heaven and earth, and ocean, through the tremendous physical revolutions which are represented through the convulsive efforts of the Titans, through the production of inorganic masses, and then of monstrous broods that are long ago extinct. This mythology supplied the lack of geological science. There followed the subsequent humanized gods, who walked up and down amidst the primitive race of men, and, like the angels of Genearo, saw the daughters of men that they were fair. It was to these humanized gods the Greeks referred for the history of their own and other nations, computing their generations of descent from the godhead, and showing a mythical record of the circumstances by which their ancestors had been seduced by an Olympian mistress.

Carrier Pigeons and the Telegraph.

Many of the readers of the newspapers, says the Philadelphia Ledger, who wake up in the morning and find a column of European news, by telegraph, ready for their persual, in the morning paper, the steamer having arrived only the midnight before, do not know the labor and enterprise which are involved to procure this early transmission of the steamer's news. The "associated press" have an agent for the arrival for the New York steamers at the Sandy Hook lighthouse. He has fifty carrier pigeons, which are trained for the purpose of conveying news from the steamships to the shore. A man in an open boat, in all kinds of weather, drops alongside of the steamer as she bears directly upon Sandy Hook. The news is thrown over in a water-tight can, and the news being taken out a single sheet is affixed to the bird's leg. The man then gives the signal to the bird who raises his wings and away he goes, with all his powers of locomotion, in a straight line for the office, going a distance of three or four miles in as many minutes; and popping in at the window, is received by the agent, who transmits the intelligence over his wires to New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore, and thence to St. Louis, New Orleans, and all parts of the country, so that the news is frequently received over a large part of the United States and published before the steamer leaves the quarantine.

Commerce of the United States.

Hunt's Merchant's Magazine for September contains a statistical view of the commerce of the United States for each year, from 1790 to 1854 inclusive. The article is the result of great labor and research, and will prove of great value to the numerous readers of this excellent and useful publication. From it we learn that for the year 1790 the exports of foreign and domestic merchandise amounted to $20,205,156; imports same year, $23,000,-000. For the year 1854, exports, $278,341,-064; imports, $394,562,381. Total exports, from 1790 to 1854 inclusive, aggregate value, $6,721,432,984. The total value of property exported and imported since 1790 is the enormous sum of twelve billions six hundred and sixteen millions three hundred and fifty thousand eight hundred and thirty-two dollars! The tonnage of the country in 1789 was 201,-562; in 1854 it was, exclusive of steam vessels, 4,802,902; of which 181,901 was engaged in the whale fishery. The tonnage employed in steam navigation was in 1823, 74,879, (before that nothing.) In 1854 it was 676,607. Such figures exhibit the strides of progress which the country has made since the adoption of the Federal Constitution. Judging of the future by the past, it is apparent that we are destined to be a "great country.—[N. Y. Daily News.

Useful Hints.

Britannia should be first rubbed gently with a woollen cloth and sweet oil, then washed in warm suds, and rubbed with soft leather and whiting. Thus treated, it will retain its beauty to the last. New iron should be gradually heated at first; after it has become injured with the heat it is not likely to crack. It is a good plan to put new earthenware into water, and let it heat gradually until it boils, then cool again. Brown earthenware, particularly, may be toughened in this way. A handfull of wheat or rye bran thrown in while boiling will preserve the glazing, so that it will not be destroyed by acid or salt. Clean a brass kettle before using it for cooking, with salt and vinegar. The oftener carpets are shaken, the longer they will wear. The dirt that collects under them grinds out the thread. If you wish to preserve fine teth, always clean them thoroughly after you have eaten your last meal at night. Woollen should be washed in very hot suds, and not rinsed. Lukewarm water shrinks woollen goods. Never allow ashes to be taken up in wood, or put into wood. Always have your matches and lamp ready for use in case of sudden alarm. Have important papers altogether, where you can lay your hands on them at once in case of fire. Don't wrap knives and forks in woollen. Wrap them in good strong paper. Steel is injured by lying in woollens. Old bread may be made almost as good as new by dipping the loaf in cold water, then putting it in the oven after the bread is drawn, or a stove, and let it heat through. Isinglass is a most delicate starch for fine muslins. When boiling common starch, sprinkle in it a little fine salt; it will prevent its sticking. Some use sugar.

The Queen of England at the Tomb of Napoleon.

The Queen visited, the day before yesterday, the tomb of the Emperor. No one of her visits produced a deeper impression. As the review had lasted till very late, her Majesty was no longer expected at the Hotel des Invalides; nevertheless, she determined on going there, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour. The Queen arrived, consequently, at night fall, followed by a numerous staff, surrounded by the veterans of our old wars, who had hastened to meet her, while she advanced with noble composure towards the last resting-place of him who was England's most constant adversary. What a spectacle! How many remembrances with all the contrasts, they brought up to the mind! But when by the light of torches, the glitter of uniforms, amid the strains of the organ playing "God save the Queen," her Majesty was led by the Emperor to the chapel where the remains of Napoleon lie, the effect was overpowering and immense, the emotion profound for every one was reflecting that this was no ordinary homage offered at the tomb of a great man, but a solemn act, attesting that the rivalries of the past were forgotten, and that now the union between the two peoples had received its most signal consecration—[Paris Moniteur.

A Gift of Thirty Thousand Dollars from an Unknown Lady.—The Rev. Dr. Bethune of this city, stated on Monday evening that the Reformed Dutch Church had lately been very much in need of funds to erect additional buildings and make alterations to their theological seminary at New Brunswick, New Jersey, but that their wants had been supplied by the immediate donation of thirty thousand dollars by a lady in Philadelphia, belonging to a church of which he was formerly pastor. He did not give the lady's name.—[Brooklyn Eagle, Sept. 15.

A Prophecy.—Louis Kossuth published a letter in the New-York Times of Saturday, in which he makes this remarkable prophecy:

"If in this war the power of Russia be not broken, Russia issues from the contest victorious. There is no third alternative. The "four points' secured, gives victory to Russia. And one thing is certain—Russia victorious in this war, either by arms or by negotiations, Russia will be the ruler of Europe's policy; and of that be sure, she will lead all Europe to a crusade against American Republicanism."

Revision of the Bible.—In the British House of Commons recently, Mr. Heywood, the member for Lancashire, gave notice that he should at the next session move "and address to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to appoint a commision to inquire into the state of the authorized version of the Bible, and to prepare a plan for the further revision of that translation."

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC.

The United States mail steamship Baltic, Captain Comstock, from Liverpool 10 A. M. Saturday, 8th inst., arrived at this port last night. Her advices are a week later than those previously received.

The Queen and royal family left Buckingham Palace on the 6th inst. for Scotland.

The Bank of England has increased the rate of discount from 3-1-2 to 4 per cent. Consuls were quoted at 90 5-8 to 90 3-4.

EFFECTS OF THE BOMBARDMENT OF SWEABORG.

The Paris Moniteur, of Sept. 6, publishes the following:—

The additional details collected at Helsingfors confirm the statements already made respecting the losses of the enemy, which have been very considerable; and, moreover, they make known to us the damage caused by our projectiles.

Thus it was not, as supposed only to withdraw the Russian three decker anchored between Gustavswaard and Balsholmen that the enemy took away that vessel from the passage in which it had been placed. Hit and perforated by the shells, that vessel was sinking, and the Russians were obliged to tow her into shallow water. She is still there, lying over on one side, and full of water, which explains the inclined position in which she was seen from the sea. Considerable storehouses of corn and flour destined for the troops were consumed by the flames.

Great fears were entertained that the allied squadrons would attack and burn the town. Persons who have visited Sweaborg since the bombardment, have stated that the principal buildings destroyed in the citadel are—

Two powder magazines.

Two shell magazines.

One magazine full of flax and ropes.

Two storehouses, containing corn and flour for the troops.

One pitch manufactory.

One large house, containing hospital stores for the army.

Seventeen private houses.

The house of the Governor-General and his Chancery.

Eighteen vessels hit in the basins.

The granite quays are damaged by the shells.

Finally, the shells which fell on board the man-of-war wounded ninety-six men, who were conveyed to the town hospital, but the number of killed is not known.

The number of killed acknowledged is 2,000 but it is supposed at Helsingfors that the number is much greater. At the present moment the hospital at Helsingfors is full of wounded from the citadel, and, not being large enough to contain all who have been brought there, it has been found necessary to lodge them with the inhabitants.

Vienna, Sept. 4, 1855.

The following news has been received here, dated Constantinople, Aug. 30:

Mehemet Ali has been appointed Oapudan Pasha in the stead of Halil Pasha. Other changes are expected. Lord Stratford de Redcliffe has returned from the Crimea. Omar Pasha leaves on the 1st of September. There is no news of importance from Anatolia. The Contingent, under General Vivian, remains for the present at Constantinople.

Trieste, Sept. 5, 1855.

We have intelligence from Constantinople to the 27th ult.

Despatches from the East state that it is expected that the Russians will be compelled to act again on the offensive.

Kadikoi is entirely destroyed by fire.

Several English agents have left for Circassia, to incite the mountaineers to make a diversion on the Russian rear.

The greater part of the allied troops in the camp at Maslak have been sent on to the Crimea.

Hamburg, Sept. 5, 1855.

General Gortschakoff writes from Sebastopol that the fortifications have greatly suffered, and that the garrison has experienced considerable losses.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 5, 1855.

An imperial ukase has been issued, abolishing, on the proposal of Prince Paskiewitch, the Field Commissarist of the army on active service; Commissary General Annenkoff resuming his former charge.

Count Nesselrode has received "permission to travel."

GENERAL SIMPSON'S DISPATCHES.

Before Sebastopol, Aug. 25.

My Lord—Having been engaged since daylight in a careful observation of the position in front of Balaklava, I am unable to address your lordship at any length to-day.

The enemy have been concentrating troops at the Mackenzie, Tasova, and Karales, their left extending as far as the village of Makoul, and are supposed to have received considerable reinforcements, which probably consist of two divisions of grenadiers, which have been conveyed in carts from Bakshiserai and Simpheropol.

The bridge across the Great Harbor is nearly completed and large bodies of men are employed in erecting earth-works on the north side of the barbor. Entrenchments have been thrown up on the Sovernays hill, extending from the sea coast to the site of the first lighthouse, facing the north.

From various sources we learn that the Russians on the right bank of the Tchernaya are held in perfect readiness for an offensive movement.

Our siege operations progress steadily with, I regret to say, heavy casualties on our side, as your Lordship will see by the accompanying lists.

James Simpson, Gen. Commanding.

The Lord Panmure, &c.

SPAIN.

Madrid, Sept. 5, 1855.

The subscriptions to the loan of two hundred and fifty millions now amount to one hundred and fifteen millions.

The reform of the tariff is being compiled.

It is proposed to reduce the duty on cotton goods.

The duty on paper and on wood is to be suppressed.

New Ship Canal.—We learn from the Canada Ottawa Tribune that it is in contemplation to make a new ship canal from Georgian Bay to Lake Ontario; the following to be the route: "At the northeastern corner of Georgian Bay, French River enters from the northeast, connecting it with Lake Nippissing, which lies a little southwest of midway between Georgian Bay and Ottawa River. Arrived at Lake Nippissing, there is only an interval of a few miles by land to the first of the Turtle Lakes, three in number, through which flows a small stream into that river. From that point, the general course of the Ottawa River is south-eastward, emptying into the St. Lawrence a short distance above Montreal. Here we have the route of the proposed ship canal, which, it will be seen, passes considerably northward of that proposed from Georgian Bay to Lake Ontaria, and leaves Toronto and Oswego far in the distance."

The New World.—The North River has received during the past week an accession to the steamboats which already traverse its waters in the "New World," the greatest modern triumph in steamboat architecture. The New World is a three-decker, having a second upper cabin. From her keel to her sky-deck she is 41 1-2 feet; she is 370 feet long, has 48 feet beam, and her engine has a cylinder 76 inches in diameter, with a stroke of 15 feet. She has accommodations with room "to bed and board" 1,000 people; can carry upon her decks 250 tons of freight, and travel at the rate of 20 miles an hour. Enormous as is her bulk and rapid movement, the New World draws but 5 1-2 feet of water.—[Sunday Leader.

Statistics of Immigration.—The Superintendent of Statistics has furnished the subjoined statement of immigration, made up from the Custom House returns of the half yearly arrivols for 1855, compared with the numbers arriving at the same ports during the first half of 1854:

A Palpable Hit.—The Albany Evening Journal says:

"South Carolina never cast a vote for a presidential candidate from a free State."

To which the New York Day Book replies:

"In 1840, South Carolina voted for Martin Van Buren, a native of New York, instead of for William H. Harrison, a native of Virginia. In 1848, she voted for Lewis Cass, a native of New England, instead of for Zachary Taylor, a native of Virginia. In 1852, she voted for Franklin Pierce, a native of New Hampshire, instead of for Winfield Scott, a native of Virginia, and the Evening Journal and New York Tribune opposed every one of these Northern men, and went their death for the Southerners."

The Quebec Gazette will have it that a couple of Russian spies are in that city, watching the fortifications, and calls upon the authorities to make short work of them.

Letter Notice.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les eccès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Poetry.

Watch, Mother.

Mother! watch the little feet
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Bounding through the busy street,
Ranging cellar, shed and hall.
Never count the moments lost,
Never mind the time it costs;
Little feet will go astray,
Guide them, mother, while you may.

Mother! watch the little hand
Picking berries by the way,
Making houses in the sand,
Tossing up the fragrant hay,
Never dare the question ask,
"Why to me this weary task?"
These same little hands may prove
Messengers of light and love.

Mother! watch the little tongue
Prattling, eloquent and wild,
What is said and what is sung,
By the happy, joyous child.
Catch the word while yet unspoken,
Stop the vow before 'tis broken,
This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings in a Saviour's name.

Mother! watch the little heart
Beating soft and warm for you;
Wholesome lessons now impart;
Keep, O keep that young heart true.
Extricating every weed,
Sowing good and precious seed;
Harvest rich you then may see,
Ripening for eternity.

Railroad Improvements.

Since the Count de Pambour, whose careful practical experiments and thorough mathematical analysis are yet unrivaled in any treatises on steam engineering, descanted in glowing style upon the performances of the locomotive engine, this great agent of civilization has far surpassed the imaginations of that accomplished engineer. The "imposing spectacle" of moving on the straight, level lines of the Liverpool and Manchester and the Stockton and Darlington Railway "40 or 50 loaded carriages, each "weighing more than 10,000 pounds," is now immensely exceeded in daily practice on all the long roads in our country. Mountain grades are now surmounted on the lines of the Pennsylvania Central and of the Baltimore and Ohio Roads by the simple adhesion of the wheels, while but a few years since ropes and fixed engines were considered necessary even for hauling on levels. The empty freight car now weighs 10,000 pounds, and its load some 20,000 more. The ten-wheel engines of the Reading Railroad thunder steadily up grades of 21 feet per mile, with loads in coal alone of 500 tons each, and the seven-feet drivers on the Hudson River Road whirl passengers from Thirty-first-street to the Albany ferry-boats in 260 minutes. Less fuel is consumed per mile in the magnificent machines now employed on the New-York Central Road than in the dimuinutive traps used ten yers ago to pull half the present loads; and to compare still more recent dates, the working expenses on the New-York and Erie for fuel, oil and the like have been steadily reduced within the last year some three or four per cent with each monthly report.

This highly encouraging progress has been due partly to the adoption of absolutely new discoveries, but more to the better application of truths long known and published, but badly applied. School science is always both ahead and behind that of the workshop. While each has a mingled respect and contempt for the other, the liberal minds who can acquire, reconcile and apply both are fewer than is generally believed. In practice improvements are introduced by slow and careful degrees. A distinct and prominent recognition of every step forward or backward will do more to perfect machinery than all the colleges and patent offices in Christendom. A disquisition on momentum, for instance, may suggest a truly valuable idea to one thoughtful intellect, while leading another into an expenditure of time and money on some ridiculous device. The hope of producing something absolutely new has proved the ignis fatuus of many a noble mind, and embittered many an otherwise happy earthly existence; but a systematic and regular record and exhibition of actual results has been found to produce in its quiet, constant impulse, an almost unaccountable effect. It excites in the operator, the owner, designer and constructor of every machine not only emulation to excel but a vivid apprehension of most mortifying disgrace in case of either ignorance, carelessness or deceit.

Too high praise cannot be awarded to Mr. D. C. McCallum, the Superintendent of the New-York and Erie Railroad, for the energy and firmness with which he has introduced on this great avenue of traffic a system of recording and publishiug the results and methods of working its machines, which promises to place the locomotive in some degree on a par with the pumping engines of the Cornwall Collieries. James Watt with his partners manufactured Cornish pumping engines till 1800, and when his patent expired one bushel of coal was capable of lifting twenty millions of pounds one foot high, or its equivalent in other work. From this time the "duty," as it is termed, or amount of work done, actually declined, until 1810, when the mining proprietors, alarmed at the fact, began to publish the duty of every engine, good, bad and indifferent. Hereupon improvement commenced, and in 1834 the Fowey Consols engine pumped twenty-four hours in presence of a committee, raising one hundred and twenty-five millions of pounds one foot for each bushel of coal burned; and the average duty of all the largest engines is now nearly one hundred millions—an increase of four hundred per cent in economy without any marked discovery in either the generation or use of steam.

These remarks have been called forth by a recent trial on a magnificent scale of the actual effect of a powerful locomotive in hauling a heavy train over the whole New York and Erie road, instead of changing engines and men at certain stations as usual. The road is usually worked in four divisions, and the chief design of the experimental train was to test the comparative difficulty presented by each to a heavy train moving east. A large number of cars were provided and loaded with lumber, and ample arrangements were made for moving by other trains; all the cars left by the trial engine at each station. Every up grade was tried with big loads, which were gradually diminished till the exact limit was reached at which the train could proceed, in consequence of which much of the ground was many times traveled, and the whole experiment consumed nine days' time.

The width between the rails on this road is 6 feet, that of a great majority of roads being only 4 feet 8 1-2 inches; and many contend that the resistence to motion on curves is increased with each increase of width, an opinion which, although apparently well founded in theory, this experiment has done little to establish. Although frequent experiments of this kind have been tried at various times on long lines of narrow roads, this is the first to our knowledge on a 6 feet gauge, and we doubt whether a train half a mile in length and weighing in toto nearly or quite 1,800 tons has ever before been hauled over a road as crooked as the Delaware River portion of the Erie by a single engine. The smallest radii of curves on the whole line is 955 feet, and the greatest inclination 60 feet per mile. The most difficult points of course are those in which curves and grades are combined for long distances or at frequent intervals, and the equations of grades, curves and distances form some of the most perplexing problems ever presented to the civil engineer. The smallest number of cars hauled at any time was 22, and this was where a curve 1,294 feet long and 1,146 feet in radius was combined with the maximum grade of 60 feet per mile. The engine, No. 210, which hauled 100 cars at a speed of 6, 8 or even 14 miles per hour on levels and up grades of 6 feet per mile, combined with curves in many instances, as also through curves of 955 feet radius on level points on the Delaware, stuck fairly in the five-degree curve above mentioned, but started again and went through after being pushed about half a rod by another engine; a fact indicating a very close balance between the power and the resistance.

Experiments on the resistance opposed to motion on railroads are yet very indefinite, and any data from this experiment may be of some value. The variable elements are so numerous and complex that probably no two experiments have ever been made under precisely similar circumstances. Even the wind exerts an influence which is difficult to compute, and it is not yet agreed whether a head or side wind is most objectionable, as the latter blows out and continually replaces the air contained between the cars. The speed has evidently a very great influence on the resistence of the air, and by more rapidly consuming the steam affects very seriously the ability of the engine to haul with great power. The absolute highest pressure in the boiler of No. 210 with this train was 165 lbs., or 150 above the atmosphere, and probably the average pull on the couplings of the forward car in the tightest places was about 15,500 lbs., or equal to more than one-third of the whole weight on the driving-wheels. It is only by a liberal flow of sand upon the rails that the wheels can be prevented from slipping under such circumstances and it may be remarked that the wheels, when once slipping, have a most discouraging property of polishing the track. The only safety in a very severe pull is in a dry, gritty rail, well peppered with sharp sand.

The engine which was employed in this experiment is a most extraordinary machine, and is perhaps only equaled by three others on the same road, built from the same patterns. The design was by James B. Gregg, Esq., of Susquehanna, and the whole weight is 66,000 lbs., of which 4,000 lbs. are supported by the two pairs of driving wheels, and 26,000 by the track. It is outside connected, the cylinders being 17 inches in diameter, with 24 inches stroke of piston. The valves are worked by the link motion, and when moving very slowly the steam acts nearly at full pressure for 23 1-4 inches of the stroke. With no means of testing directly the actual pull on the train or even of approximating it by finding the average pressure in the cylinder when working expansively on level portions, we despair of settling any vexed question by aid of these results, and can only regret that some means were not devised for ascertaining both these quantities, as well as the actual quantities of water evaporated at short intervals. We notice these experiments not only as a means of calling attention to the subject, and to the more elaborate reports which will probably appear in the engineering journals, but also to place on record what is believed to be one of the most extraordinary performances in the history of railroad engineering.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Ulterior Objects of the Allies.

We said in giving a summary of the foreign news by the last arrival that there was nothing in it of much importance, which was true so far as immediate hostile movements were concerned; but a report of the proceedings in Parliament on the 10th inst. contains a confession on the part of Earl Gray of a very extraordinary character. The question under discussion was the guaranteeing of the Turkish loan by the Allies. He deprecated any such engagement on the part of England. "Without implying the smallest distrust of our ally," (France,) the noble Earl did very clearly imply that France might by and by back out of the arrangement, and then the whole responsibility would rest upon England. "Who would say it was disrespectful to France to contemplate that twenty or thirty years hence the government which might then exist in France would not contend that some circumstances had occurred to relieve them from the obligation, and would not decline to pay their share of the loan, leaving the burden upon us?" A pertinent question. But with regard to Turkey, Earl Gray is still more explicit. If paid at all, the money must be paid by some other power besides Turkey. He did not conceive that "any man in his senses believes that the Turkish empire will be in existence forty years hence, or that there is the remotest chance of our not being called upon to pay the interest which we have bargained to pay!"

Having begun to tell truth about Turkey, Earl Gray does not mince matters, but talks in this wise of the good friend and ally of England, for whom, ostensibly, they are pouring out blood and treasure like water:

"Your lordships know the present state of that most corrupt of all governments, the Turkish Government, and that it is notorious that, of the money which ought to go into the Turskish Treasury for public purposes, no small proportion goes into the hands of corrupt pachas and griping money lenders. Your lordships well remember the distressed state of the Turkish army in Asia last winter. By the concurrent testimony of all the newspapers, the state to which the army was reduced was, not because Turkey had not a sufficient sum of money wherewith to pay the men, but because the funds had been the subject of unbounded peculation. In all coutries there is a disposition to extravagance in the expenditure of the government money, but in a country like Turkey that extravagance and peculation it is impossible to check."

Here we have a confession by a leading member of the British aristocracy that England and France are not fighting to maintain Turkish independence, though that has all been their professed object. Earl Gray states broadly what all men of common sense knew before, that Turkey—except as a dead carcase to be buried as soon as possible out of sight—is a subject of no solicitude with the Allies. The Ottoman power could not have stood thus long by himself—it does not deserve to stand, and in forty years it will have passed away—its credit is no better than that of a broken down gambler, and John Bull is foolish if he endorses its bond for a few imillions of pounds. Such is the confession and the fact.

A sentence in Lord Palmerston's reply to Lord John Russell's latest apology for his Vienna diplomacy is even more significant than the confessions of Earl Gray. In that speech the British Cabinet for the first time avows "that purposes ulterior to the maintenance of the integrity of the Turkish Empire were the objects of the war." No intelligent person ever doubted about those "ulterior purposes," that from the multiplicity which might be conjectured, it was not always easy to determine precisely what they were. Some of England's leading objects are pointed out by the N. Y. Evening Post:

What then, will the reader ask, does England seek in this war? She wants a naval station in the Black Sea to play the same part that Malta does in the Mediterranean. She next wants, above everything else, a harbor for commercial and military purposes at some point in Syria, either at St. Jean d'Acre, at Tripoli or at Tyre, for a railroad terminus between the Mediteranean and the Euphrates. A report made by English engineers some two or three years ago demonstrated the feasibility of a railroad from the head waters of the Euphrates to Sidon or Tyre. That report impressed the British Government with the importance of securing a position near Bassora and Babylon, once the centres of the commercial world, to serve her as stations for the East India steamers, whence a railroad of only three hundred miles would be needed to transport their freight and passengers to the termini above indicated on the Mediterranean.

Such a station at Tyre, on one side, and Bassora or old Babylon on the other, brings London within fifteen days of Calcutta, and ten days of Singapore, and with Gibraltar and Malta, would complete her chain of guard posts from Windsor Castle to all her Indian possessions.

England is alarmed, not at Russian advances in Europe, but towards Asia Minor; at her railroads from Petersburgh to Moscow, and thence eastward and southeastward, in middle Asia. England, too, fears our westward progress.

A naval station in the Black Sea will check Russia in her designs upon Asia Minor. The railroads through Syria and its termini, fortified as they would be on the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf, would secure to her, as far as human foresight could guard it, the Asiatic commerce as far as Singapore, and also her East India possessions.

It will do more. It brings all the south coast of Asia and the whole of East India, excepting only Japan and Northern China, nearer Europe than it will be to New York, even if the Pacific Railroad were completed. And so far the Eastern question is a Western question; so far the present war has a double object. The factories and workshops of Europe must have the Asiatic trade.

The great question for England and all Europe always is, how to feed and employ her laboring millions. Asia is a field that must be looked to. The positions we have indicated, chain Asia forever to Europe. So argue British ministers. But man proposes while God disposes. Events are rapidly placing matters beyond the control of cabinets. We surmise that Lord John Russell feels this, and that he desired, at Vienna, to snatch England from the abyss which he sees yawning before her.

Cigar ashes will be found an infallible remedy for the bite of the mosquito and other insects. Wet the ashes and rub them on the part and the stinging sensation will be extracted almost instantly.

A Voice from the North.

The St. Lawrence Republican—the organ of that Democracy which rallied around Silas Wright and was long represented in the House by Preston King—thus indicates its sympathy with the objects of the new formation:

So many State Conventions have been called this year that it may be proper to state the objects of this Convention more particularly than we should otherwise feel called upon to do. The deep feeling of indignation produced in the whole community by the passage of the Nebraska bill, opening the free Territories of Nebraska and Kansas to Slavery; the fraud and violence now going on in Kansas, countenanced by the Administration of General Pierce; the disregard of party organizations, and the determination manifested by the slave propagandists to make this the paramount ground of their political action, all indicate that the day and the hour have come when those who agree in opinion against extending Slavery must act together politically to prevent it, or witness the subversion of the fundamental principles upon which free government and the Constitution of the Union rest for security.

The slave propagandists, steady, to their own purpose of overturning the free principles of the Constitution, have disregarded the obligations of honor, violated the faith of compacts, and destroyed the reliance placed in compromises. They leave no scheme untried, no stone unturned, to foment divisions among the people.

To distract the public mind, and to divert attention from themselves, the slave propagandists have instigated the formation of secret political societies, and attempted to make political action turn upon distinctions of birth and difference in religious creeds. No feeling or principle, however sacred, is secure from their unhallowed touch. They threaten to divide the Union if they cannot rule it with the rod of Slavery.

The Whig organization is broken up, and the Democratic organization is divided and broken to pieces by the despotic and overshadowing power of slave propagandism.

To bring order out of this chaos and to restore Government to sound constitutional principles of administration, it has been proposed, and a Republican State Convention has been called, to reorganize the old Republican party, founded upon the principles of Freedom and the construction of the Constitution promulgated by Jefferson. The Republican movement contemplates union and concentration into one party of all who agree in opinion that the wrong inflicted by repeal of the eighth section of the Missouri Compromise should be remedied by law of Congress, securing freedom to the Territories of the United States, and settling the controverted constitutional questions relating to Slavery.

Two hostile sections of the Democratic party in this State, both hunker in their positions, known as the Hards, who disapprove the course of the Administration, and the Softs, who support the Administration of General Pierce, have each held their State Conventions, and both have approved or acquiesced in the Kansas-Nebraska bill. Each of these divisions has already its distinct and opposing State ticket in the field.

The Republican State Convention is called to declare its principles, and to nominate candidates for State officers to be supported at the next election, that all who agree in the principles it sustains may act together as a single, solid, and united Republican party.

Eloquent Extract.

We copy the following passage from the new work, "The Old House by the River."

Go preach to blocks and stones, ye who believe that love is the clay! Go preach to the dead, ye who deny the immortality of the affections. Go reason with trees, or hills, or images of wood, or with your own motionless, lifeless, icy souls, ye who believe that, because that there is no marrying yonder, there shall be no embracing, or because we may not use the gentle words "my wife" we may not clasp these sanctified forms in our own holy arms! I tell you, man, that immortality would be a glorious cheat, if with our clay died all our first affections. I tell you that annihilation would be heaven, if I believe that when my head at length rests on its coffin pillow, and my lips sink to the silent repose of death, these loving eyes will never look into mine again, this pure clasp never be around my neck, this holy caress never bless me more.

A Slave of the Needle.

A young girl came into the Mayor's office yesterday, and entered a complaint against her employer, for whom she had worked a long time. This complaint originated as follows:—She had taken home a dozen stocks from him for the sum agreed upon, of thirty-seven and a half cents; and, after she had finished them, she went to his store for her pay. He already owed her $3, and tendered her this money, which she refused to take unless accompanied by the three shillings for the recent service.—This he would not give her, as he said the articles were not properly made. She then entered a complaint, as already noticed.

The above, from the New York News, is the statement of a case which is by no means a solitary one. Like occurrences are happening in the eastern cities, and especially New York, daily. The impositions and oppressions practiced on needle-women show a degree of heartless cruelty, on the part of employers, which is almost beyond belief. For these poor women, the case is a hard one. They are so numerous that competition among them reduces their wages to the point of starvation. They are at the mercy of those they work for. Many of these last are, of course, greedy and avaricious task-masters. But, even if all of them were as kind and considerate as some of them are exacting, unjust and brutal, the condition of these dependent women would be, as a whole only slightly meliorated. The pursuits of women are so little diversified, their field of labor is so contracted, that the openings which offer any room for their industry are filled at once by an eager crowd, each of whom is jostling and interfering with her neighbor. The consequences are sad, indeed. Penury and suffering, at the very least, comfortless shelter; insufficient or unwholesome food; wearing, exhausting work, which kills body, spirits and soul together. Such is the condition of thousands upon thousand of poor women in New York. And worse than all this, too, often happens. Bitter bread, wearisome toil and harsh masters, driving many a poor girl desperate, plunge her into that gulf of infamy from which, it may almost literally be said, there is never any rescue.

In view of so much wide-spread distress and misery in the free States, journals in the slave States insist upon it, with much plausibility, that the condition of the slaves, as a whole, is vastly preferable to the condition of large portions of the free working class, as a whole.—And, doubtless, if you suppose a negro population trained to slavery, and with no ideas of personal freedom, save what attach to the not unfrequent holidays which are enjoyed by the slaves of our South, the condition of such a class, well-fed, well-housed and well cared for, is, indeed, vastly preferable to that of thousands—perhaps hundreds of thousands—at the North. A great fact like this ought to make its suitable impression on Northern minds. Its bearings should, in a special manner, be considered by those of them who are sympathising with the slaves. For, unquestionably, the miseries which exist to such an extent in free societies are pratical arguments of immense force against freeing our slaves. Thousands of cool, candid and reflecting men, who by no means favor slavery in the abstract, still regard freedom for the slave, under present circumstances, as anything but a blessing to him. Before abolitionists proper can make any great progress in their work for the South they must do another equally mighty work for the North. They must show free society to be capable of diffusing happiness much more nearly universally than it does now, before they can convince others that such a society is a fair equivalent to the slave for that condition of wardship in which he is now held. The argument is, not that we should hasten to make white men slaves, but that we should pause before we make black men free. And the final conclusion, on a review of the whole matter, is, that Philanthrophy's first, great, and, at present, only legitimate work, is the improvement of Free Society. Let philanthrophy pluck the beam from the Northern eye, and then it may, with fresh force and sanguine hopes of success, apply itself to the task of removing the mote from the Southern eye. —[St. Louis Morning Herald.

Spiritualism at Buffalo.

The Buffalo Republic has given another instalment of the "circle" experiences of the editor. Here is the best story the article affords:

On the afternoon of the 8th inst., a circle of eight or ten, including two or three ladies, were engaged in getting manifestions around the table, and the spirits were demonstrating their ability to touch and handle different individuals. One of the ladies present had brought her little boy, aged about three years, who was asleep on a lounge about ten feet from the table. While thus engaged with the hands of every person present laid upon a table, round which all were seated, except the child before mentioned, with sufficient light to distinguish clearly every object in the room, the mother received a sudden shock, which turned her chair partially around, so that she sat facing her child. In an instant, and before any person had risen from their seats, she exclaimed, "Why, my child is in my arms!" And sure enough such was the fact. The infant was quietly sleeping in its mother's arms, as undisturbed as when lying not a moment before upon the settee, in which condition it remained until awakened some time afterward.

Every person in the room is willing to swear that no one arose or made any movement likely to lead to such a result—that the lady herself did not leave the table—and the child did not arise and go to its mother—that, in fact it was sleeping upon the lounge at the very instant before the lady received the shock. The lady herself had no expectation of such a result, and was perhaps more astonished (besides being considerably frightened,) than any person in the room. She states that the only thing she saw was a slight shadow passing like a flash of light across the room, and the child was reposing in her arms.—[Chicago Press.

Marrying Cousins.

The New York Day Book has the following paragraph in regard to a very interesting question:

Among other profound subjects discussed by the Association for the advancement of Science, now in session at Providence Rhode Island, is the question whether a man may marry his cousin. Some fearful examples in the deformity of posterity are cited to prove that such near relations should not intermarry. Instances of blindness, club feet, &c., are mentioned. The Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches both forbid such marriages; but, in the face of scientific and ecclesiastical authority, we ask what will the objectors to the marriage of cousins do with those cases where children, the result of such marriages, are more than usually beautiful and intelligent! We explain the matter in this way: Children sometimes inherit their mental and physical organizations from their mothers and sometimes from their fathers. If two cousins, who both inherit their constitutions from the same side, the consequences will and must be disastrous; but if cousins marry who are entirely dissimilar, one having inherited a constitution from the father and the other from the mother, no such result will follow. It is the uniting of similar organizations, no matter whether first or second cousins, that causes the injury to offspring, and not the simple fact of legal relationship.

Touching Delicacy.

There were many little occurrences which suggested to me, with a great consolation, how natural it is to gentle hearts to be considerate and delicate towards any inferiority. One of these particularly touched me. I happened to stroll into the little church when a marriage was just concluded, and the young couple had to sign the register.

The bridegroom to whom the pen was first handed, made a rude cross for his mark; the bride who came next did the same.

Now, I had known the girl when I was last there, not only as the prettiest girl in the place, but as having distinguished herself in school, and I could not help looking at her with some surprise. She came aside and whispered to me while tears of honest love and admiration stood in her bright eyes—

"He's a dear good fellow, Miss, but cannot write yet; he's going to learn of me, and I wouldn't shame him for the world!"

Why, what have I to fear, when there was this nobility in a laboring man's daughter!—[English paper.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 29, 1855.

Why the Hue and Cry against the Mormons?

Is a question sometimes asked by the few who venture beyond the pale of popular prejudice with independence enough to inquire, think and decide for themselves. We would answer such questions in true Yankee fashion, by asking others. Where, and what is the evidence adduced against the Mormons, that can warrant the floods of abuse that are heaped upon them by pulpit and press throughout the country? Let each one review all that he is cognizant of, and weigh the matter in his own mind, and see if he has sufficient evidence of a nature that would convict a prisoner at the bar of a court of justice. Hear-say in case of life and death would scarce be allowed to criminate a prisoner, if true justice were extended him, in any court in the world. Yet the slaughter of innocence has often been the result of "hear-say" verdict of public prejudice against Mormonism. If the testimony against Mormons was reduced to knowledge, there would be but little evidence found against them; this, the contradictory nature of the various reports continually prove, especially when the character of the witnesses is brought under investigation. For instance, the present position of affairs on our western borders (formerly the home of the Mormons) show the character of the materials by which they were surrounded. And the fact, of which every one is aware, that mobocracy and Lynch-law by those around them, and its advocacy or tacit admission by those not in their vicinity, have been the invariable tools used against them by their opponents in their lawless efforts to exterminate them. These facts, form an insurmountable objection to such evidence in the mind of every one, not lost through prejudice, to every feeling of justice, aside from any consideration of humanity. But what is the ground for the extended prejudice against the Mormons in the minds of the people? Is it not in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of the thousand, drawn from continued repetition and revamping of stories, as repeatedly proven false by the best of evidence, both in and out of their community? Almost every one is aware of this in the course of their own experience.

What city, town or hamlet in the United States has not contributed out of its midst at least one honest person to the ranks of Mormonism. This consideration alone would be an overwhelming evidence to any reasonable mind, that the reports of corruption and outrages said to exist among them are slanderous and false.

Every person seeking information relative to Mormonism, are sure to meet on every hand the oft-told tales of Mormon barbarity, wickedness and abomination, and in associating with that community, they are assured of participating in all its unpopularity, stigma and consequent suffering, resulting from this high state of popular prejudice. Thus it is seen, that every avenue is closed against the probability of obtaining correct information, except to a high degree of moral courage, perseverance, and the strongest desire for truth; this has evidently been the experience of those who have joined that community. It is therefore inconsistent, to suppose, having passed through such an ordeal, that any honest person with common intelligence, would, hound-like, tamely submit, to years of the most shameless corruption. The very industry and perseverance which all are forced to allow as characteristic of the Mormons, forbid the conclusion that the popular prejudice against them is well founded. There are many people in the United States, who though honest and upright in all else, have much to answer for in their course pursued towards the Mormons; in passing hasty and ill-founded judgment upon a community, of whose tenets and doctrines it is quite unpopular even to investigate, thus countenancing the less scrupulous and conscience hardened, in their outrages upon an unoffending people. This course is, to say the least, inconsistent, when it is remembered that History in the hands of almost every school-boy, abounds with the melancholy tales of injury, wrongs and bloodshed perpetrated upon the best of men, of almost every age, by the frantic and infuriate rage of the multitude, operated upon by misguided prejudice and fanaticism, and marking deeply each successive age with the footprint of blood and carnage. This should lead every honest person to pause ere they add their voice, to swell the popular cry, away with him! crucify him! crucify him!

It is said that we Americans are a free people, this is true, though many are still bowed down with the bigotry and prejudice of past centuries, and certainly not entirely free from the danger of infringing upon the sacred rights of others who differ with them in opinion, as has been painfully manifest in both politics and religion, in various portions of our country during the past season. It may not be more so than with other nations, but the liberty we enjoy, as a Republic, should make us sensitively alive to every infringement of others' rights, whether individually or collectively, as a part of the body politic, for this is the only sure protection of the individual rights of any one; therefore as American citizens, we claim the right to believe as we please, and though Mormons, we demand a suspension of judgment, until in addition to the difference of opinion, it can be proved that we have infringed upon the rights of others. Let the evidence be adduced if it can be, that the Mormons have not been illegally and shamefully abused in every instance, and these outrages aided and abetted by the press, and in many instances, with the powerful auxiliary of the pulpit, to throw a mantle of respectability over acts that would shame the most despotic government. This has been repeatedly done within the United States and in the sight of all Christendom. Can glaring acts like these pass by unnoticed in a land of freedom, and yet it be said, the Mormons have done us grevious injury? Pray show us when and where? This Nation and all Christendom have yet to learn, or otherwise her skirts still bear the accusing blood spots of innocence.

We are aware that the question of polygamy, with its supposed corruption, will loom up before the minds of those unacquainted with that community; but admitting the worst possible construction to be put upon that belief and practice, still it leaves fifteen years of endurance and suffering by the people, previous to the introduction of that belief, to be answered for by those pretending polygamy to be a sufficient apology for excesses committed by the opponents of Mormonism. And now, the distance of their last removal place them beyond the possibility of infringing upon the rights of others in this respect; and as little danger to morality may be anticipated, as from the followers of Mahomet in Turkey.

And again, the wide spread corruptions known to exist throughout the cities and towns of this whole country forbid the most charitable and pure-minded to hope for its extirpation by measures similar to those adopted towards the Mormons; nor could other results be expected from them. Not that such a state of morals exist in Utah as prevails through this and other countries; far from it. This the discontented and returned office holders and military can testify to. There, justice is at least done to women, whilst millions in the United States fall yearly, degraded and lost for ever, where not even law or justice can save or reach them. Let this be a question for philanthropists, whether the institutions of God with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were more fatal to posterity than the institutions of men in the present age. No, it is not polygamy that gives this poignancy to the opposition to Mormonism. It is not sufficiently explained by the term polygamy, nor by any acts of Mormons; nor can it be, except we look for explanation in the spirit of bigotry and superstition that sought to exterminate the Quakers, to expel the Puritans from their homes, burn a Rogers at the stake, hunt the Covenanters in their mountain fastnesses, slaughter the Waldenses, root out Protestantism, destroy the Apostles, and crucify our Lord and Saviour.

As severe as this may seem to the casual observer, by reviewing the history of Mormonism for the past twenty-five years it will be found to be too true; and the same proscriptive spirit of persecution, not content with murdering and driving forth the Mormons, turns in maddened rage to other prey, and falls upon the weaker party wherever found—religious or political, foreign or American, it is all the same; if holding different views, and venturing within its power, they fall a prey to this devouring dragon, reared upon the soil of freedom, and demanding of all men to bow down and worship.

Follies of this Generation.

To a person not whelmed in the fashions and peculiarities of this generation their absurdities appear to a degree ineffable. What can look more disgusting to a person unbiased by the contagious spirit that attends the fashionable world, than to see a lady trail a surplus quantity of skirt through the filth of the wet and dry sidewalks of our large cities? And also to see those fair creatures for whom Nature has been lavish of her bounties, and bestowed symmetry of form and features, and who claim to be modest, so arrange their attire as to have the bosom so much exposed as to leave the guessing Yankee little upon which to exercise his peculiar characteristic?

If they are modest, which we do not wish to dispute, why this exposure of person, that every one knows has only a tendency to excite the animal propensities of the opposite sex? Do such females expect to be admired the more by men that look at things in a matter of fact common-sense light? If so, they are much mistaken. But if it is the sensual, superficial eyes, with no brains behind them, that they wish to attract by their amorous exhibitions, then they have struck the right chord; but where this is the case, they must relinquish their claim to modesty. Modesty and true virtue will never set a trap baited with the kind that amitiveness alone will bite at.

Indian War.

It will be seen in another column of our paper that the telegraphic wires have conveyed the intelligence from St. Louis that General Harney has commenced operations in very deed. We are not informed how the news was obtained at St. Louis, and the whole thing needs confirmation; but the last news from the General was that he was making forced marches in the interior of Nebraska, swearing vengeance on the poor Sioux. He had probably obtained information of the whereabouts of some lodges, and the recent news may be the result.

If the despatch be true it is very evident (from the children taken) that the General carried the war into the camp of the Indians, as they never come out to war with their families in attendance.

Poor creatures, we pitty them, notwithstanding they stole our blanket when we came through Nebraska last season; but we would sooner give them another than kill them for it; and we believe that the old cow they killed, that commenced the fuss with Uncle Sam, was of less value than a good blanket.

For the benefit of our readers that may not be cognizant of the particulars leading to the present war, we will give a short account as we received it from mountaineers and traders near the place of the Laramie massacre. We were there a few days after the sad affair, and saw the fresh graves of the killed, one of which contained twenty-six of the thirty-one in all killed. We were informed that some twelve hundred Sioux warriors, with their women and children, had assembled in the vicinity of the American Fur Company, four or five miles from Fort Laramie, awaiting the payment of their annuities by the United States agent at that place. They were detained longer than they expected to be, and their provisions were nearly out; companies of emigrants were constantly passing, and one had a cow give out, so that they were obliged to leave her behind. The Indians, thinking no harm, killed and eat her. After the company that left the cow had camped for the night, the individual owning her returned, thinking to be able to drive her into camp, when he was told by the Indians that they had killed her, not knowing that he intended to return for her; he was satisfied, and took no further thought about it. The next day, when the company passed Fort Laramie, the story of the cow was told more from its amusing character than anything else. It so happened that the senior officer of the fort was away at the time, and the charge devolved upon Lieutenant Grattan; quite a young officer, and full of blood and ambition, anxious to spread himself, and make his mark for greatness. Hastily he gathered a company numbering thirty-one, including himself and interpreter and repaired to the Indian lodges. Instead of taking position at a respectful distance he went with his men directly into the camp and there surrounded by Indians on every hand demanded of Big Bear, the chief, the man or men that had taken the cow. The Indians hesitated to give up the men but offered to pay the worth of the cow from their coming annuities. Such offers were to no purpose with young Grattan, and nothing short of the trespassers would satisfy him. Big Bear hesitated to grant the request and by order of Lieut. Grattan to his men to fire, this chief received four bullets into his body which eventually proved fatal. No sooner was this done than the incensed Indians in less time than a person can tell it, rushed upon and slew the entire party save one who crawled away into some brush mortally wounded, was taken to one of the trading ports near by and died in about twenty-four hours.

The Indians, in their excitement, marched into the store of the American Fur Company, and helped themselves to their annuities in shape of whatever suited them best in quality or quantity, and precipitately returned to their homes in the north. These are the facts as we learned them from those who had the best opportunity of knowing. And we never saw the first man (and we talked with a number) that attached one particle of blame to the Indians; yet it was the opinion of some, that if they were not punished for this, they would be more saucy in future. In regard to this, however, there was a diversity of opinion.

From this rash act on the part of the Government over so trifling a matter many thousands of dollars have already been expended, and a number of lives lost, and the war has just commenced. When and where it will end who can tell!

Great Battle with the Sioux confirmed.

We learn by the St. Louis Republican, just before going to press, that the reported engagement between the United States troops, under General Harney and the Sioux Indians, at the Sand Hills, near the North Platte, is true.

Henry W. Beecher.

This modern innovator upon the old singsong, go and come doctrines of christian denominations, is a cruel child; and if he continues his work of reformation, as he has begun, he will soon bring down the gray hairs of old sectarianism with sorrow to the grave.

By the way, there is much truth ground out of old fogydom by this same self-constituted mill. He is doing good, he is. He makes the rust fly, he does.

The Coming Congress.

Touching the organization of the coming Congress, the scene-shifters and pipe-layers are, as it appears, already hard at work. From the materials of the new House of Representatives we may expect a lively opening of the drama; lively, racy, pungent and revolutionary beyond all parallel this side of Mexico. We know what we are; but we know not what we are coming to. God save the Union.—[N. Y. Herald.

Woods Meeting at Hornerstown, N. J.

We enjoyed the pleasure of a visit with our friends at Hornerstown, N. J., last week, and had an opportunity of being present at the woods meeting held at that place. Although the weather during Thursday, Friday, and Saturday was not quite so propitious as we could have desired, yet there was a pretty good turn out; the people all appeared to enjoy themselves, and much interest was manifested relative to the belief of the Latter Day Saints.

On Sunday, especially, the day being pleasant, there was a general gathering throughout that vicinity; there were about one hundred and fifty carriages, and we suppose six or eight hundred persons on the ground, and the utmost cheerfulness, order, and good feeling prevailed.

There were present, Elder John Taylor, N. H. Felt, J. Clinton, and S. B. Rose, from the Valley; Elder Samuel Harrison, from Philadelphia, and Elder Curtis, President of the Hornerstown Branch. At the close of the afternoon services, in the woods, on Sunday, the meeting was adjourned till evening, to meet in their commodious meeting-house in Hornerstown, where, after addresses from several of the brethren and benediction by Elder Taylor, the meeting was closed by singing the "Merry Mormons."

Professor Spencer arrived amongst us on Monday the 17th inst., but has been unable since his return, through sickness, to resume the more active duties of his mission. He has been suffering from an attack of chills and fever during the last fourteen or twenty days, and is consequently much debilitated; but with careful and attentive nursing, and the blessings of our heavenly Father we hope soon to see him convalescent. His short mission to the Cherokee Nation, has been highly satisfactory to himself, the brethren in the nation, and the Cherokees themselves, who are said to be particularly friendly and well disposed towards our missionaries, and the message borne them.

Our readers may expect much interesting and instructive incident from the editor, so soon as his health will enable him to re-engage in his literary labors; in the meantime, let the prayers of the faithful ascend to our Father in heaven for the blessings of health and salvation to rest upon brother Spencer, that his presence may soon be enjoyed by the congregations of the Saints, that the righteous may rejoice in his ministrations.—[St. Louis Luminary.

From Council Bluffs.

Brother Spencer: We have a branch of the Church here, of some eighty members. Brother W. H. Folsom is the Presiding Elder, who, with Brother F. A. Brown and myself, hold meetings regularly every Sabbath, and preach and bear our testimony to the truth of Mormonism. The old members have generally been re-baptized, and a few new ones have embraced the truth; but it is an up-hill business here, as is the case in every place, from which the authorities of the Church have removed. It then becomes a kind of spiritual whirlpool that gathers within its vortex, all the filth and scum of apostacy that floats in the wake of the Church. But we are determined by the help of God, to keep up the organization here, to bear our testimony that our garments may be found clear of the blood of this people, when we are called to give an account of our work upon the earth.

A difficulty occurred in Nebraska, day before yesterday, near old Fort Calhoun, respecting a claim. A Mr. Goss, of this county, was shot through the heart. His body lay at the Pacific House, in this city, during yesterday. Five other men were wounded, but not fatally. Much excitement existed here yesterday, and I understand, men were volunteering for both parties, to fight the matter out, but I look for nothing serious to take place.

Yours respectfully, L. O. Littlefield.

Indian Troubles in Nebraska.

We clip the following from the Nebraskian:

Indian Depredations South of the Platte.

It is only a short time since the Nebraska City News published with evident satisfaction, an exaggerated report of "Dangers from the Sioux North of the Platte River!" And while the News affected to sympathize deeply with the people in this vicinity, it assured the public that the settlers "South of the Platte" were perfectly safe, being protected by the government with "two good forts, Laramie and Kearney." Now every intelligent person knows that while both of the above named forts are nearer to Omaha than to Nebraska City, they are too far from either to afford any immediate protection to that place or this. But the Editor of the News was shallow enough to suppose that by such statements he could attract settlers to the South part of the Territory and retard the settlement of the North.

However, notwithstanding the previous assurances of security South of the Platte, we find the following in the Nebraska City News of the 8th inst. But glad indeed, should we be to know that it is as false and unfounded as most statements are, which have their origin in that paper.

Indian Outrages.

But again, on day before yesterday, our people were aroused by the arrival of Col. Manners, who reported that his party of Government surveyors were attacked by a band of Pawnee Loups, who broke up his camp and endeavored to steal his mules. In the foray, six of the Col.'s party were separated from their companions, which six have not yet been heard from. The cook, attached to the party, when last seen, was going full speed on a mule followed by two other mules, and was hotly pursued by several of the Indians. But the Col. and five of his men escaped and arrived safely to Nebraska City.

FOR THE MORMON.

Man, Individually and Socially.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

Man is a social being; and however independent he may affect or assume to be, he is himself a part and parcel of that element that in the aggregate makes up the great whole of human existence. Society at large is just as good and just as perfect as the combined goodness and perfection of each individual with his fellows constitute it. The same may be said with reference to the evils and imperfections of society. Hence every man is responsible in a measure to his fellows for his conduct and example in and to society. Pope, who took an extensive view of this matter, justly and significantly observes, that the individual that departs from true principle, just so far "sins against the eternal cause." His transgressions are not isolated or confined to himself, but have to be borne by his fellows just in proportion as his example or influence extends to corrupt society. And with regard to the extent of that influence, I have never yet seen the person with anything like an approximation to the ordinary capacities of man, who had not an influence for good or evil on society, seldom appreciated by those who are bound in the nature of things to realize it.

In view of this social principle, men have from time to time endeavored to take advantage of the fact, and making it the groundwork or foundation of their schemes, have built up societies, sects, and parties, holding particular principles or tenets, which they considered best adapted to the promotion of human happiness; and have endeavored to isolate themselves as far as possible from the rest of mankind, in order more effectually to carry out those tenets. Some to this end have emigrated at different periods from among those that were opposed to their ideas of reform. The question here might arise with some, why so many have failed to accomplish the drsired end—a millennium in miniature—if, as asserted, the social principle be correct? The answer is, the social principle has never failed, or been proven incorrect; men have erred (as men are wont when not directed by divine revelation) in their systems of government, and in what would actually constitute their greatest happiness if attained unto. Some have caught a glimpse in their imagination of a happy community of brothers, each bearing the other's burden as his own, having all things common, and the whole community sustained by a common interest and common effort—a merging of the individuality or self into the common weal.

The individual entertaining such views, has in the heat of his imagination supposed it possible to bring all men or a goodly portion of them, to conform to the same views and reduce them to practice; but here is the difficulty. Man is not only a social being and composing as a member, a part of society, but he has constitutionally his own individuality, he must be allowed to think and act for himself and household directly, and community at the same time indirectly. It is a mistaken idea that men under existing circumstances, tuition, and training, can be induced to act for all with the expectation of better providing for his own household, than he could in his individual capacity; although such might be the case in many instances. Yet, owing to his peculiar organization, it is only under the most extraordinary circumstances that he can be induced to depart from this rule. There have been instances, and no doubt there will be again, when individual interest was best subserved by sustaining the general, at the expence of the individual interest for the time being. When such is the case, and men are convinced of it, they will do so from policy. Our fathers of the Revolution are examples of this kind; the individual happiness of themselves and posterity could only have been affected by the contribution of individual interests, to the common weal. It was a voluntary concession, yet it was an investment that paid the best dividend to self that could be made.

Man being thus twofold in his constitution and adaptation, having both an individual and social capacity, it is sometimes difficult for him to determine the dividing line between the two, to know when to act in a private and when in a public capacity. But in reality there is no dividing point, when properly understood; and so far are the two from being antagonistic to each other, it will be found that they run parallel to each other, and that whatever is really conducive to individual happiness is conducive at the same time measurably to all; and vice versa. That that really constitutes happiness, here is meant, and not what men in their selfishness sometimes imagine is such. The greatest trouble in this connection is, that men form wrong conceptions of what will produce the greatest amount of happiness if attained. Dishonesty toward the community is practised extensively by some, thinking to make themselves happy at the community's expense. This will never accomplish it; and a dishonest man, or community, can never be happy, can never be at peace with themselves, much less with their neighbors. The trite saying, that "honesty is the best policy," is as true as it is trite, while dishonesty in men, or sects and parties, is the great bane to society in general; it strikes at the very root and foundation of all society in which it exists. This is the reason why no nation or people have ever been able to perpetuate their existence beyond a length of time sufficient to fill up the measure of their iniquity. They have arisen from obscurity, practicing honesty and humility during their weakness, until eventually, under the providence of God, they have become great and mighty. They have forgotten "the pit from whence they were digged," have ripened in their iniquity, and through the justice of God, whose handdealing has always been visible among the nations, they have sunk into oblivion, to exist only in a name.

The inhabitants of our own country, the most free and enlightened of any on the globe, believe as a general thing that we are to go on with the same rapid strides that have characterised Jonathan from his infancy. But might he not learn a lesson by the many precedents before him, ere he too shall be among the things that were? The same elements that have destroyed the greatest and most powerful kingdoms on the earth, are at work at the very vitals of this premature giant. Already he staggers from the almost constant ruptures of the delicate machinery within, and but for the organ of hope, which is largely developed, he would not exhibit the strength he now does.

The secret of all this is, notwithstanding their great profession of piety and honesty, men in this government are growing yearly and daily corrupt, and false at heart. It does not begin in high places, in offices of trust and power, but it begins nearer home. Men are dishonest with their wives, their children, and their neighbors; and the man who is dishonest in his domestic relations, is never the man to be trusted with the affairs of State. He that will recklessly trifle with his own flesh and blood, is a fitter candidate for the madhouse than the Congress of the United States or any great office of the people's trust. Yet how different do we find it. Do men expect to "gather figs from thistles," or obtain honest legislation from dishonest legislators? Such is contrary to the laws of nature. When men cannot be found who are honest in their individual capacity to fill offices of public trust, then truly is the handwriting visible, "thy glory has departed!" and the generations that follow must suffer the consequences. Who can contemplate the iniquities and corruptions of this generation, and not shudder for the future—and not emphacize when he prays "Thy Kingdom come, and Thy will be done on the earth." But oh! the darkness and confusion that shall roll between this and the final consummation. Brothers shall bathe the sword in the blood of brothers, or "flee to Zion for safety," for the "wicked shall slay the wicked," and "the Kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

Oppression of Emigrants from Free States in Kansas.

Kansas River, Aug. 21, 1855.

The oppression of the people of Kansas is far greater than that attempted by King George before the Revolution; he was a legitimate king, our sovereign rulers are illegitimate. They have been foisted upon us not only without our consent, but by an armed force of mercenaries from another State. This lawless legislature not only refuse to legislate for citizens from the free states, but deprive them of their rights. They reject the free State delegation from the legislature. They appropriate to themselves all the offices of trust and honor. They have seized upon all the valuable points in the territory, and direct their legislation to make them still more valuable. They select a new town for the seat of the government, where the majority can take an interest. United States judges truckle to them, and give a judicial opinion that this mob legislature is legal, and the seat of the government is called Lecompton; and General Lecompt invites them to partake of a public dinner, all hail fellows well met, HE will not be removed for speculating in lands. The names of these legislators and judges who have an interest in this new seat of government (where twenty-five thousand dollars of government money will soon be expended) I have not room now to mention. The roads, ferries, railroad charters, county boundaries and county seats are all made for the interests of the Mobocrats and Nullifiers. Every obstacle is put in the way of emigration from the free States.

County lines to give them trouble are run through their central settlements. And if there are citizens in favor of a free State in the most central town, they immediately locate the county seat at some other point, however inconvenient, if it is for the interests of the pro-slavery men, and refuse to leave the location of the county seat to the vote of the citizens of any county where a majority are free State men. Thus the Nullifiers go on, having seized this valuable county by force, they proceed to appropriate all its valuable interests to themselves. They deprive citizens opposed to slavery of the right to sit as jurors where slavery is concerned. They inflict a death penalty for all tampering with slaves. They imprison for writing or speaking in opposition to slavery. They have filled all the offices with men who will carry out these laws, and have armed mobs at hand to help. There are no jury or judges for justice and freedom.

We are arming! Will the free States aid us in this unequal struggle for our just rights! We look to the next Congress for relief, while we trust in our right arm, and hope in God.—[Peru (Ill.) Chronicle. H.

Still they Come.

Thomas Gibson, Esq., from Quincy Illinois, late Editor and proprietor of the Western Patriot, with his family, together with several others, passed through this city yesterday, on their way to Fontenelle.

Mr. Gibson informs us that a number of other families are now on the way, and more about to start from Quincy, Jacksonville and other portions of Illinois, all bound for Fontenelle, Nebraska.—[Nebraskian.

From all parts of the country the most cheering reports reach us with regard to the corn crops. The labors of the husbandman have been largely blessed thus far, and visions of plenty greet him in the future. Their granaries are filled with wheat, oats and rye, and their empty cribs will be replenished to overflowing with corn. Abundant rains have fallen, and every where the corn crop is most promising.—[Squatter Sovereign.

New Hampshire, which usually raises very little wheat, will have enough the present season to supply one-half of its population with flour.

Great Battle between United States Troops and Indians.—St. Louis, Monday, Sept. 24.—A great battle took place on the 3d inst., at Sand Hills, near the north fork of the Platte River, between the Sioux Indians and the entire force of the United States troops under General Harney, numbering about 450 men.

Major Cady commanded the infantry, and Col. Cook the dragoons, mounted infantry, and artillery.

The battle commenced early in the morning, and lasted several hours. The Indians fought desperately, but were routed. A running fight for some ten miles followed, during which the Indians made a stand, and fought with much gallantry. They were, however, defeated, with the loss of eighty men killed and fifty women and children taken prisoners. The Indian women fought furiously. General Harney lost six killed and as many wounded. No officers were killed.

The Indians engaged in this battle were the Brule and Sioux, the same that massacred Lieutenant Grattan's command and murdered a mail party—the way-bill of the mail having been found with them.

Masonic Celebration in Baltimore.—Baltimore, Sept. 24.—It is estimated that 30,000 persons, principally ladies, visited the new Masonic Hall to-day, and about 100,000 during the four days it has been open to the public. The Masons are making great preparations for the dedication on Wednesday next. The procession is to be very grand, and a banquet will be given in the evening to the delegates from Grand Lodges in other States, who may be present by invitation.

Yellow Fever at Sea.—Wood's Hole, Sept. 24.—Yesterday the schooner Joseph James, of and for Bangor, from Georgetown, S. C., loaded with yellow pine lumber, was picked up at anchor off Great Rip by some fishermen and brought into Edgartown. The captain (Smith) and all hands were down with the yellow fever and unable to navigate the vessel. They had been in that condition about seventeen days. The officers have been taken ashore and comfortably provided for.

Aid from Boston for the Yellow Fever Sufferers.—Boston, Sept. 24.—The total amount collected in this city and remitted for the relief of the sufferers from yellow fever in Norfolk and Portsmouth, now reaches $9000.

Suspension of a Steamship Line between Boston and Halifax.—Boston, Sept. 24.—The British steamship Curlew, which was recently placed on the route between Boston and Halifax, has been withdrawn by order of the British Admiralty, the steamer being required for Government service.

The Yellow Fever in Virginia.—Baltimore, Sept. 26, 1855. The boat from Norfolk this morning reports an improvement in the health both of that city and of Portsmouth.

At Norfolk on Tuesday there were 30 deaths and 12 new cases, and at Portsmouth only 4 deaths and 2 new cases.

Cool weather was having a very favorable effect on the diminution of the new cases.

The Yellow Fever in Louisiana.—New Orleans, Sept. 24, 1855.—The yellow fever, as an epidemic, may be considered all over in this city—the deaths from it during the past week amounting to 89, out of a total of 214 from all causes.

The fever is raging badly at Alexandria, and many cases are reported along the Red, Ouachita and Chafalaya Rivers.

Boston, Sept. 26, 1855.—A letter has been received from Julius Rockwell, accepting the nomination of the Fusion or Republican party for Governor. He declares his opinion based upon his experience in Congress that the Whig party as a national party has ceased to exist, and he expresses a hope that the Republicans of the Free States may unite and form a national party.

The struggle, if brief or protracted, will not, he thinks, break up the Union. The more earnest it be the less danger of that; but if it results in the establishment of slavery as a national institution, the seeds of decay and dissolution will be planted. The acceptance of Mr. Rockwell of the fusion nomination, makes it very doubtful if the Whigs will adopt him at their Convention on Tuesday next.

Further from Mexico.—Baltimore, Sept. 26, 1855. The New-Orleans papers of Thursday last are received, and contain Tampico dates to the 1st inst.

The revolution against the Government had been participated in at Tampico, and the plan of Ayutla adopted. The Government of Carrera had been recognized.

The San Antonio Sentinel says that the American Boundary Survey found no gold in the Mesilla Valley territory, but the Mexicans reported its existence near Santa Cruza. Rich silver ore had been found, however, in great abundance by the surveying party.

From New Mexico.—St. Louis, Sept. 26, 1855. We have received dates from Santa Fe to the 1st inst., but there is no news of special interest.

The mail party saw but few Indians and they all appeared friendly. The Indian relations in New Mexico were assuming a better aspect. Treaties had been formed with the Mescalves, Navagos and Capate Utahs, and other tribes had appointed a meeting with the Governor.

Some United States recruits arrived at Fort Union on the 17th July.

A fire at Little Arkansas had nearly destroyed the camp.

Captains Bowen and Whittlesey and Lieut. Davidson left on the 6th for the States.

Col. Sumner left Fort Leavenworth on the 20th inst., for the Plains with seven companies of troops.

From Washington.—Washington, Sept. 24.—An order has been issued to close all the Departments on Wednesday, that day being designated as a day of fasting and prayer on account of the yellow fever scourge.

From Washington.—Washington, Sept. 24, 1855.—I was informed to-day, by a gentleman high in authority, that there is trouble again in the Cabinet. Marcy is getting out of patience with Jeff. Davis. He says if Davis' councils are to prevail, the administration is bound to go to the devil. The trouble seems to be that Davis has intimated that the hard shells of New York are "the" democratic party, and the only party the administration should countenance, and in that opinion he was sustained by Dobbin and Cushing, the President all the time remaining mum. There is evidently trouble in the wigwam, for the Cabinet were in session till a late hour this evening.

Gen. Davis has also got into difficulty with Gen. Scott. The correspondence between this high functionary and Gen. Scott will be laid before the public in a few days.

I was also informed, at a late hour this evening, that there will be a reconstruction of the Cabinet between this and the meeting of Congress. Dobbin is anxious to leave; Guthrie is tired of office and wishes repose, and Cushing wants Buchanan's place. There is trouble ahead.

The President has accepted an invitation to to visit the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Fair at Harrisburg, which opens on Tuesday of this week. He will leave here on Wednesday morning, and will remain there two days, returing on Friday.—[Correspondence N. Y. Hearld.

Important News from Europe.

Sebastopol Taken.

The steamer Washington arrived at New York, Sept. 27th, bringing three day's later news from Europe than that received by the Baltic. The news is of much more than ordinary interest, as it furnishes the information that Sebastopol is at last taken by the Allies.

On the 8th inst. the Allied forces attacked the defences of Sebastopol, and the French succeeded in gaining possession of the Malakoff.

The English who attempted the Redan were not successful. During the night the Russians in the exacerbation of despair, began to sink their ships, blow up their magazines and burn their city, and on the following morning Sebastopol was evacuated, and the communication between the north forts and the town broken off.

The following telegraphic despatch received by Lord Panmure, from General Simpson, appeared in the English morning journals of the 11th inst.

Sebastopol is in the possession of the Allies. The enemy during the night and moring evacuated the south side after exploding their magazines and setting fire to the whole of the town. All the men of war were burnt during the night, with the exception of three steamers which were plying about the harbor. The bridge communicating with the north side is broken. General Simpson reports that the casualties in the attempt on the Redan are somewhat heavy, but there was no general officers killed.

In a supplement of the Moniteur, the following telegraphic despatch, received by the French government from General Pelessier, appears:

Karabelnaia, and the south part of Sebastopol, no longer exists. The enemy, perceiving the solid occupation of the Malakoff, decided upon evacuating the place, after having destroyed and blown up by mines nearly all the defences. Having passed the night in the midst of my troops, I can assure you that everything in the Karabelnaia is blown up, and from what I could see, the same must be the case in front of our left line of attack. This immense success does the greatest honor to our troops. Everything is quiet on the Tchernaya.

The assault on the Malakoff was made at noon of the 8th inst. Its redouts and the Redan of Careening Bay were carried by storm by the French soldiers with admirable intrepidity to the shouts of "Vive l' Empereur." The Redan of Careening bay was not tenable, owing to the heavy fire of artillery, which was poured upon the first occupiers of that work. On beholding the French eagles floating on the Malakoff, Gen. de Sulles made two attacks on the Central Bastion, but did not succeed. The French troops returned to their trenches. The losses were serious.

The plan of the battle appears to have been as follows:

The place was attacked in four directions. The British troops attempted the storming of the Redan, the French attacked the Malakoff. The extreme right of the French made a diversion on the Little Redan, and a united attack of the English, French and Sardinians was made on the Central Battery. All the attacks were made simultaneously, with great spirit and energy; but the one which was eminently successful was led by Gen. Bosquet and Gen. M'Mahon on the Malakoff. Both the Redan and the Central Bastion were at times in the hands of the storming parties; but so accurately did the guns of the Russians cover these, that as soon as the English had gained possession of them, it was found impossible to hold them.

The following despatch is from Prince Gortschakoff, and is dated the night of the 9th:

The garrison of Sebastopol, after sustaining an infernal fire, repulsed six assaults, but could not drive the enemy from the Malakoff Tower. Our brave troops, after resisting to the last extremity, are now crossing over to the northern part of Sebastopol. The enemy found nothing in the southern part but bloodstained ruins. On the 9th of September the passage to the northern side was accomplished, with the loss of 100 men. We left, I regret to say, 500 men dangerously wounded on the southern side.

The intelligence of the fall of Sebastopol was received in London with demonstrations of great joy. At the various theatres and places of public amusement the fact was officially announced, and the bands at each place immediately played the national anthems of England and France. Throughout England the demonstrations were general.

On the night of the 8th inst., whilst the Emperor of the French was at the door of the Theatre Italien, at the moment the carriage containing the ladies of honor of the Empress stopped at the entrance of the theatre, an individual who was standing on the trottoir discharged, without taking aim, two pocket pistols at the carriage. No one was struck. The man who had more the appearance of a maniac than an assassin, was immediately arrested. The name of the individual arrested is Belleinarre. He is about twenty-two years of age, and was born at Rouen. When sixteen years of age he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for swindling.

The funeral of the late Mr. Fergus O'Connor took place at Kensal Green Cemetery on the afternoon of the 10th inst., and was attended by a large multitude of his friends and the supporters of his political principles. A complimentary address was delivered by Mr. Jones, late of Liverpool, to the people assembled around the grave. It was estimated that not less than from 15,000 to 20,000 persons were present at the cemetery, all of whom quietly separated at the close of the proceedings.

Grand Attack on Sebastopol.

THE MALAKOFF TAKEN.

From the London Times.

War Department, }
Sept. 9, 1855. }

Lord Panmure has received the following intelligence from Gen. Simpson, dated

Crimea, Sept. 8—11.35 p.m.—The Allied forces attacked the defences at Sebastopol this day at 12 o'clock.

The assault on the Malakoff has been successful, and the work is in possession of the French.

The attack of the English against the Redan did not succeed.

BY SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH.

Paris, Monday, Sept. 10—7 a.m.—The Moniteur announces that the Minister of War has just received the following dispatch, dated Varna, Sept. 9—3:35 a.m.:

The assault on the Malakoff was made yesterday at noon.

Its redoubts, and the Redan of Careening Bay, were carried by storm, by our brave soldiers, with admirable intrepidity, to the shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!"

We immediately occupied ourselves in lodging ourselves there.

We succeeded in doing so at Malakoff.

The Redan of Careening Bay was not tenable, owing to the heavy fire of artillery which was poured upon the first occupiers of that work. Our solid installation at Malakoff cannot fail soon to make it surrender, as also the Redan, of which our brave Allies carried the salient with their usual vigor. But, as was the case at the Redan of Careening Bay, they were obliged to give way before the enemy's artillery and powerful reserves.

On beholding our eagles floating on the Malakoff, Gen. de Salles made two attacks on the Central Bastion.

They did not succeed.

Our troops returned to their trenches.

Our losses are serious, and I cannot send a precise return.

They are amply compensated for, as the capture of the Malakoff is a success the consequences of which are immense.

War Department, Sept. 8.—Lord Panmure has received the following intelligence from General Simpson, dated Crimea, Sep. 8:

Another Russian frigate was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon in the Great Harbor of Sebastopol.

A large fire is burning this morning about the middle of the town of Sebastopol.

Last night, about five minutes past one o'clock, a great explosion took place, supposed to have been one of the enemy's magazines on the north side.

The subjoined dispatches have reached the Minister of War:

Crimea, Sept. 6, 10 p.m.—Our fire against the place continues under favorable circumstances.

Our losses are extremely small. Nothing new on the Tchernaya line. The enemy contemplate no movement there.

Crimea, Sept. 7, 10 p.m.—The fire of our artillery has been kept up for the last twenty-four hours.

A French bomb set on fire a Russian frigate, which is still burning.

The Fall of Sebastopol.

From the London Times, Sept. 11.

On Saturday, the 8th day of September, within a few days of the anniversary of the landing of the Allied forces in the Crimea, and 316 days after the opening of the besieging batteries against Sebastopol, on the 17th of October, 1854, a final and victorious assault was made upon the southern part of the town. Before night the French flag waved in triumph upon the Malakoff Tower, which had fallen before the indomitable courage and perseverance of the assailants, and within a few hours more the Russian garrison had evacuated the Karabelnaia suburb and the southern proportion of the fortress, after blowing up the magazines and principal works, setting fire to the town in many places, and then endeavoring to withdraw by the bridge across the harbor from this terrific scene of devastation and defeat. So fell Sebastopol.

The catastrophe surpasses in horrible interest all the preceding scenes of this gigantic contest. The columns of the Allied armies, combined in a fourfold attack, struggled all day with equal valor, though with unequal success, against the principal points marked out for assault. The extreme right of the French attack was directed against the work called the Little Redan, which was at first carried by the impetuosity of our Allies, though they were subsequently driven back by the fierce resistance of the Russians.

The second and principal assault of the French army was against the Malakhoff, which was carried by storm, and determined by its fall the fate, not only of the day but of the siege. A third attack was made by the British forces on the Great Redan, and, although we learn that the salient angle of this formidable work was at one moment carried and occupied by our troops, it must be added that they were subsequently driven out of it by the fire of the Russian batteries which commanded it, and this check in some degree diminishes the exultation which will be felt in this country at the triumphant termination of the siege. The French columns on the left also assailed, in the fourth place, the Central Battery, but failed to establish themselves in the work. We have no doubt that every man who attacked the defences of Sebastopol on that eventful day fought with the same undaunted gallantry and the same determination to carry the place or to perish in the attempt; and, although the results of these several attacks were unequal, all were animated by the same spirit and contributed to the great result. The first prize of this glorious victory belongs of right to our gallant allies, the French, since the Malakoff Tower, the key of the main position, fell before the vigor of their assault; but, with that chivalrous feeling which is the noblest bond of men who have fought and conquered together, the names of all those who carried the rugged defences of Sebastopol deserve to stand side by side on one page, and no invidious distinctions shall sully or lessen their common renown.

The Russians on their side unquestionably defended the place with the utmost determination, and on more than one point they had the advantage of the besiegers. But it was the courage of desperation, for this effort was their last. No sooner were the outer works taken, which laid the town and the port at the mercy of the Allied forces, than the men-of-war and steamers in the harbor were all set on fire, blown up, sunk, or destroyed, either by the fire of the Allied batteries or by the orders of the Russian authorities.

Such was the fate of the Russian Black Sea fleet, on which the Imperial government had expended incalculable sums of money and incessant labor—that fleet which two years ago threatened the very existence of the Turkish empire, but whose solitary naval achievement was the atrocious outrage upon a far inferior force at Sinope. Of the authors of that nefarious attack what remains?

The Emperor Nicholas sleeps in the vaults of St. Peter and St. Paul, no longer conscious of the chastisement his wicked ambition has brought down on his empire and his heirs. The admirals who commanded and the crews who fought on that occasion, have most of them fallen in the batteries of Sebastopol. The very ships for which Russia contended at the Conferences of Vienna as essential to her dignity and power, are torn plank from plank and scattered upon the waves.

The dockyard and arsenal were already, on Sunday, in possession of the Allied troops; Prince Gortschakoff had, it seems, solicited an armistice, though we know not whether it was granted; but his troops were hurrying away with the utmost precipitation; and, considering the moral and physical result of such a defeat upon the remnant of his army, it may be doubted whether the Russian General can attempt to make any further stand on the north side of the harbor.

These great events terminate the siege of Sebastopol, properly so called, for the Allied armies have achieved within the last three days the grand object of their enterprise. They have wrested from the whole military power of Russia a fortress which she had converted into a place of extraordinary strength and defended with innumerable hosts of her best troops. They have annihilated the naval power on which she relied to secure her supremacy in the Euxine, and to establish her authority from the shores of the Caucasus to the mouth of the Danube. But, above all, they have shown the servile and credulous nations of the East that the Powers paramount in the world are not those of fanaticism and barbaric absolutism, but those of liberty and of civilization. In this struggle, Sebastopol became at once the test of strength and the reward of victory. To reduce it by force of arms was to overthrow that colossal fabric of Russian influence which a century and a half of rapine and intrigue had called into being, until it overawed the surrounding nations and threatened the independence of Europe. While the expedition to the Crimea offered the incalculable advantage of circumscribing within a few square miles of the enemy's territory all the horrors of war, and staking the strength of four empires on a single point, the result of our victory is as boundless as the globe.

It tells the world that the alliance of England and of France has stood the test of warfare by the sufferings of the camp and the perils of the field. It assures mankind that their united policy can impose its will and execute its resolutions, even though the timid stand aloof, and though men of baser minds may abandon the cause of their country in her hour of need.

We owe our success in no slight degree to the unwavering firmness with which the Emperor of the French has pursued this enterprise and adhered to the policy that dictated it. But we owe it no less to the clear and unanimous resolution of the people of England, whose mind was made up that this thing was to be done.

In the course of these events, which broke in so suddenly on our wonted avocations, we have had much to learn and much to bear. At times the tedium of suspended excitement became almost intolerable, and more than once the fainthearted or the factious lost confidence in the result. Yet what is the fact? What is it we have done?

A year has not yet elapsed since the allied armies set foot in the Crimea. Within that time they have won three pitched battles, and twice assaulted a fortress of extraordinary magnitude. They have encompassed the works of the enemy with trenches extending over more than thirty miles of ground; they have armed these trenches with the heaviest ordinance, and kept up so incessant a fire that not only an incalculable amount of projectiles has been consumed, but five or six siege trains have been worn out.

They have created at Kamiesch, Eupatoria, and Yenikale three military stations which the Russians have not dared to assail, and Balaklava has become a populous mart. A railroad connects the harbor and the camp; an electric chain binds the Crimea to Europe, and conveys to us in a few hours the tidings of these triumphant successes.

Upwards of 200,000 men encamped within the lines of the Tchernaya have been conveyed thither and are daily fed, clothed, and housed from the resources of the Western Europe. All this has been effected in spite of the rigor of winter, the heat of summer, and the distance of 3,000 miles from our shores, and within one little year from the sailing of the expedition the leading objects of the campaign are accomplished and Sebastopol is in our power.

The military and political results of this event, open a new chapter in the history of these transactions, to which we shall shortly take occasion to revert, but, be what they may, the grand fact now before us, justifies the confidence we have never ceased to feel and rewards our hopes—for within twelve months from the commencement of this enterprise Sebastopol has fallen, and the power of Russia in the waters of the Euxine is at an end.

Still Later by the America.

Halifax, September 27, 1855.

The royal steamship America, Captain Lang, arrived here at an early hour this forenoon, and will be due at Boston about two o'clock P. M. on Friday.

The America brings Liverpool dates to the 16th instant, one week later than those received by the Baltic.

The Collins steamship Pacific, Captain Nye, from New York at noon on the 5th instant, arrived at Liverpool at noon on Saturday, the 15th—passage nine days nineteen hours, meantime.

The Vanderbilt steamship North Star arrived at Havre on the 12th instant.

The news in the highest degree important, Sebastopol having at length fallen.

The bombardment was re-opened on the fifth and continued without interruption until the eighth when the assault commenced.

The French attacked the Malakoff and the Careening Bay, and the English the Redan.

Six repulses were sustained by the French before the Malakoff, but on the seventh attempt they carried the work in splendid style and hoisted their eagles on the Malakoff.

The slaughter was terrible, and is estimated at 2,000 English, 15,000 French, and as many Russians, making the aggregate upwards of thirty thousand men.

Five French Generals are reported to have been killed, including General Bosquet.

During the night succeeding the assault the Russians evacuated the entire south side first, blowing up the defences, sinking all the ships, firing the towns, and leaving nothing but smouldering ruins.

The Allies found immense materials of war in Sebastopol.

A large Allied force was marching along the coast to interrupt the retreat of the Russians inland.

It is reported that instructions have been sent to the Allied Generals in the event of Gortschakoff seeking to capitulate, to demand that Russia shall surrender at discretion all the troops, stores, and fortified places, including Odessa.

Another unsuccessful attempt has been made upon the life of Louis Napoleon.

The Bank of England had advanced its minimum rate of discount to 4 1-2 per cent., and a further advance to 5 per cent. was expected.

The Liverpool cotton market, in consequence of the stringency of the money market and another advance in the bank, rate of discount had been rather inactive, and prices were barely maintained.

The sales of the week reached 46,000 bales, of which speculators took about 6,000 bales.

Breadstuffs generally were dull; but prices had undergone no material change. Wheat was quoted 1d. higher.

The weather has been favorable, and the crop accounts satisfactory.

Provisions were without change of moment, but a dull tone pervade the market. Lard was in active demand, at 58s. a 60s.

Sugar had further advanced 2s. The London market was more stringent.

Consols closed at 90 5-16 a 90 1-2.

Southern Confederacy.

The Charleston Murcury thinks a Southern confederacy the grand Panacea for all Southern ills; and exultingly breaks forth in the following postical strain:

"Glorious and grand rises up the idea of a Southern canfederacy, free from the intermeddling of abolition fanatics—free from the exactions of a hostile and foreign goverment, whose ill-gotten gold is poured out to enrich our enemies, and make traitors in the South—free from connection with a people whose society and civilization are antagonistic to our own, and free from the eternal dissensions and bickerings which have disgraced the history of the Union.

* * * * *

"A southern confederacy, with free trade as the corner stone of her foreign policy, would be the best customer, both as buyer and seller, that England could possibly have. It would open a market of vast extent to her manufacturers, and supply, in return, cotton more speedily, cheaper and better than any that she can ever obtain from the fields of India. Cotton would be our army and navy—cotton would command for us the respect of nations. Aggression upon us would be aggression upon all who shared in the wide blessings of its culture, trade and use. And abolitionism in England would expire amid the proofs of the advantages of slavery, while abolitionism at the North would turn into and exhaust itself in some other form of social madness."

The aggregate amount contributed to the fund for the relief of the Norfolk and Portsmouth sufferers is now not much short of a hundred thousand dollars.

Scene in Court.

Judge—Bring the prisoner into court.

Pete—Here I is, bound to blaze, as the spirits of turpentine said when it was all on fire.

Judge—We will take a little of the fire out of you. How do you live?

Pete—I ain't particular, as the oyster said when they axed if he'd be fried or roasted.

Judge—We don't want to hear what the oyster said on the turpentine either. What do you follow?

Pete—Anything that comes in my way, as the locomotive said when he run over the little nigger.

Judge—We don't care anything about the locomotive. What's your business?

Pete—That's various, as the cat said when she stole the chicken off the table.

Judge—That comes near the line, I suppose.

Pete—Altogether in my line, as the rope said when it was choking the pirate.

Judge—If I hear any more absurd comparisons I will give you twelve months.

Pete—I am done, as the beefsteak said to the cook.

Judge—Now, sir, your punishment shall depend upon the shortness and correctness of your answers. I suppose you live by going round the docks.

Pete—No, sir; I can't go round the docks without a boat, and I hain't got any.

Judge—Answer me; how do you get your bread?

Pete—Sometimes from the baker's and sometimes I eat taters.

Judge—No more of your stupid insolence. How do you support yourself?

Peter—Sometimes on my legs and sometimes on my chair.

Judge—I order you to answer this question correctly: How do you do?

Pete—Pretty well, I thank you. How do you do?

Here the Judge was completely "sold," and Pete was allowed to retire without any further interrogatories as to his occupation or mode of living.

Just One Shade Greener.

A lady of this city—when young, a belle of the North—shopping one day last week, called for some green silk. A piece was produced—that would not do; another, another, and yet another, was brought forth by the salesman, but of no avail; none there among the ample pile that suited the fastidious lady's taste. "A deep, very deep, and dark green is what I wish," said the fair customer. The shelves were then again ransacked by the attentive attendant, deeper and still deeper glowed the green, until it emerged into a dark sea tint, but none had been displayed suiting the lady's fancy. At length, fairly out of patience with his customer, the irritated salesman exclaimed, "Madame, I do declare and very verily believe, that you do not know what shade of green you want yourself." "I do, sir, right well," returned the fair, fastidious and witty one, "select a pattern just one shade greener than yourself, and I'll take it at once."—[Boston Journal.

Letter Notice.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, Il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques,qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Building on the Sand.

BY ELIZA COOK.

'Tis well to woo, 'tis well to wed,
For so the world has done
Since myrtles grew and roses blew,
And morning brought the sun.

But have a care, ye young and fair—
Be sure ye pledge with truth;
Be certain that your love will wear
Beyond the days of youth.

For if you give not heart for heart,
As well as hand for hand,
You'll find you've played the "unwise" part,
And "built upon the sand."

'Tis well to save, 'Tis well to have
A goodly store of gold,
And hold enough of shining stuff—
For charity is cold.

But place not all your hopes and trust
In what the deep mine brings;
We cannot live on yellow dust
Unmixed with purer things.

And he who piles up wealth alone,
Will often have to stand
Beside his coffer chest, and own
'Tis "built upon the sand."

'Tis good to speak in kindly guise,
And soothe where'er we can;
Fair speech should bind the human mind,
And love link man to man.

But stay not with the gentle words,
Let deeds with language dwell;
The one who pities starving birds
Should scatter crumbs as well.

The mercy that is warm and true,
Must lend a helping hand,
For those who talk yet fail to do,
But "build upon the sand."

A YEAR'S EVENTS IN THE CRIMEA.

EMBRACING A JOURNAL OF THE SIEGE OF SEBASTOPOL.

FROM THE NEW YORK HERALD.

1854.

SEPTEMBER.

14.—The Allied army, 70,000 men, consisting of English, French and Turkish troops, landed at Eupatoria, in the Crimea. It was conveyed in one hundred vessels and escorted by the entire allied fleet of war ships then in the Black Sea. Twelve thousand men were left at Baltschik, (Turkey,) with an immense force of artillery.

20.—Battle of the Alma. In this engagement the English brought into action 20,000 men; the French 25,000; the Turks (as estimated by readers and the hints of civilized general officers,) 8,000. The Russians had 36,000 men in a good position on the heights across the river, which were stormed and turned by the allies. As a result, the generals stated that the English had 310 killed, 1,818 wounded; the French 318 killed, 1,033 wounded; the Russians 2,480 killed and 4,680 wounded; and the Turks (no official reports regarding their losses,) 256 killed and 1,230 wounded. The lists returned as "wounded" contain all who were lost by accident or in crossing the river or just after the battle. Amongst the English dead were 96 officers; 114 sergeants and 24 drummers. The French loss in officers was reported as about the same with that of the English. The Turkish loss is only estimated, as the English or French officers did not allude to it, and the Sultan has never made a return, in any way known to Christian readers in public.

23.—A powder magazine belonging to the Russian army exploded at Perekop, and 430 men were killed.

26.—Marshal Saint Arnaud resigned the chief command of the French army, and left for Constantinople. He was then in bad health, and died a few days after.

OCTOBER.

12.—From 5th to this day the Russian garrison of Sebastopol had, by bombardment, 120 men killed and 480 wounded. Admiral Korniloff was among the killed.

17.—Renewed bombardment. The allies fired by sea and land on Sebastopol, when the English had 44 men killed and 266 wounded, and the French 80 killed and 186 wounded on their ships by the Russian fire from the batteries. Russian loss not known—supposed to be trifling.

18.—Two hundred and thirty French killed by the explosion of a siege battery. Four hundred and sixty-five Russians killed by an explosion in the Redan.

23.—The Russian garrison in Sebastopol sallied forth and captured a French battery. The French had 64 men killed, and the Russians 20. During the sortie the English had 4 men wounded, the French 76, and the Russians 37. Lord Dunkellin was taken prisoner.

25.—Battle of Balaklava. There were engaged 30,000 Russians, 3,000 English, 4,000 French, and a little more than that number of Turks. The Russians had 1,730 killed, the English 1,100, the French 230, and the Turks about 980. The wounded were not counted by any party. The English light cavalry, "the light brigade," were nearly annihilated in their charge. Their horses are included among their "killed."

26.—The Russians made a sortie towards Balaklava from Sebastopol. They numbered 8,000. They had 675 killed. The allied loss was between two and three hundred.

NOVEMBER.

5.—Battle of Inkermann. Here the Russians had from 40,000 to 50,000 men; the English 8,000 and the French 6,480. The English had 462 killed and 2,143 wounded; the French 389 killed and 1,337 wounded; and the Russians 8,011 killed and 3,609 wounded. One hundred and five officers were killed.

6.—A Turkish troop ship lost in the Black Sea and 701 men drowned.

14.—A terrific storm occurred in the Black Sea. The English lost five war ships, including "the Prince" and thirty-five merchantmen. About 7,100 lives were lost, and twenty three other trading vessels were much damaged.

19.—Four hundred of the English and French lost by a second storm in the Black Sea.

25.—Russian sortie from Sebastopol. Forty-three English, 27 French, and two hundred and forty-five Russians killed; wounded not enumerated. The English took nine Russian guns.

28.—Seven hundred Russian powder wagons lost in a snow storm near Perekop, with 7,000 men.

29.—For eleven nights (up to December 13) from this date, the Russians made sorties from Sebastopol on the French trenches. Each night the French lost (in killed) about forty men and the Russians seventy. The French would have thus lost 440 and the Russians 770. No returns of the wounded.

Cholera and fever raged in the allied lines. The commanders estimated their losses from these diseases alone at the rate of fifty men a day; from November 15th to December 28th, thus running a dead list of 1,680.

From November 10th to December 1st, 1,020 Turks had died of disease and 255 from the effects of wounds. Total Turkish dead, 1,275.

DECEMBER.

12.—One thousand one hundred sick men of the allied army removed from the trenches and camps to Balaklava. One hundred English soldiers—Foot Guards and 97th regiment—died of wounds and disease.

16.—From this night to 28th, the Russians made eight sorties and had 897 men killed. The allies lost 608.

22.—The French had 3,794 sick in the hospitals of Constantinople, of whom 1,387 were dangerously wounded.

24.—Four hundred and fifty-six Russians drowned in the Sea of Azoff by the loss of five war ships.

31.—The Russians had lost 6,000 men in and around Sebastopol in ten days.

1855.

JANUARY.

7.—The English had 4,387 men in the hospitals at Scutari, dying at an average rate of sixty per day. The Turkish army was being cut off at the rate of forty men a day.

11.—Forty Russians and seventeen French killed in a sortie.

13.—Seventy-four Russians, forty-eight English, and twenty-six French killed in a sortie.

15.—Allies lost 101 in a sortie, and the Russians 210.

20.—Russians and French lost forty-nine men in a sortie.

23.—One hundred and seventy-six French and fifty-nine Russians killed in a sortie.

31.—One hundred and eighty-five French killed, and 115 wounded in a sortie. Russian loss not stated.

From 28th December, 1854, to 27th of January, the Russians said they had lost:

Killed or disease of wounds	7,301
Died of which or accident	4,019
Total	11,320

Of other wounded and prisoners they had also, 15,443—total hors de combat, 26,763.

FEBRUARY

The English army in the Crimea had dwindled down to 12,000 men. The Russian army in the Dobrudscha was being swept off at the rate of fifty men a day by fever and cholera.

The Turks in the Crimea were dying in large numbers, but no returns were made.

13.—Thirty-five Russians killed in a sortie, and 5 French.

17.—Battle of Eupatoria. The Russians had 20,000 infantry and 6,000 cavalry. The Turks and British fleet defended the place. Russians loss 260 killed and 1,140 wounded. The Turks had 150 killed, but wounded not stated. British lost none.

MARCH.

1.—Allied fire re-opened on Sebastopol.

12.—The Russians fired from the heights of Balaklava on the allies.

14.—The Turkish cavalry made an advance from Eupatoria, but was repulsed by the Russians, and lost 35 men.

17.—The Russians routed an advance of the Turkish infantry from Eupatoria and killed 60 men; Russian loss 14 killed.

—.—The French attacked the Russian redoubts before Sebastopol, but were repulsed, losing 169 men.

22.—Russian sortie from Sebastopol. They had 493 killed and 1,000 wounded. English and French loss reported as only "slight."

23.—Tremendous sortie of the Russians. They had 760 killed and a large number wounded. French had 350 killed, including two officers, and the English 430 killed, including four officers.

APRIL.

9.—Three hundred and forty allied guns opened fire on Sebastopol.

13.—Severe sortie engagement. Loss on all sides 1,000 killed and 2,380 wounded.

24.—Loss of a Sardinian transport by fire with eight men.

MAY.

1.—The French took the Russian rifle pits. French loss 380 killed, and had (about) 600 wounded. Russians killed, 463, and wounded (supposed) 2,000.

2.—Allied advance upon Russian works of counter approach. Severe engagement, but losses not reported.

3.—Russians attempt to retake their works but were defeated, with "great loss."

10.—Two severe Russian sorties on the right line of the allied attack were repulsed with "great loss on all sides."

11.—Another desperate sortie by the Russians.

12.—Sortie on the British right line. Over one hundred English killed. Russian loss much greater.

19.—The English, French, Turks and Sardinians had 220,000 men operating in the Crimea.

23.—The French carried on a severe fight with nearly the entire garrison of Sebastopol, who were defending a place des armes near the quarantine bastion. The French took part of it. The battle lasted all night, but the losses were not given.

24.—The French carried the remaining portion of the works. The Russians had 2,500 men hors de combat, and the French (17 battalions) nearly as many.

The allied squadron entered the straits of Kertch and commenced the destruction of all the houses, food supplies, public buildings, &c., near which the ships could reach.

28.—Up to this day the allies in the Sea of Azoff had committed great ravages.

7.—Capture of the Mamelon and White towers, after a dreadful fight. Russian loss 4,360; French 4,000 men hors de combat; English 150 men and 11 officers killed, 510 wounded, and 15 missing.

14.—The allies, in the Sea of Azoff, had taken Kertch, Arabat, Anapa, Genitchi, Bardianak, Mariapol and Taganrog. Most of them were burned, the inhabitants plundered, and the country devastated.

French loss, 37 officers killed, 19 desperately wounded, and 17 prisoners; 1,544 men killed and missing, and 1,644 gone to ambulances. The Fall of Sebastopol.

Additional Particulars of the Fall of the Southern Part of the Town.

From the London Correspondent of the N. Y. Herald.

LONDON, Sept. 14, 1855.

ADDITIONAL details come dropping in by telegraph of the events of the 8th of September, when Sebastopol fell to the Allies by the precipitate retreat of Gortschakoff and his garrison to the North side. It appears from Marshal Pelissier's last dispatch—for the Emperor of the French has appointed him Marshal of France—that the Russians have not succeeded in destroying everything before they left. Pelissier describes the resources of the place, the materiel, the scientific works of defence, as something unheard of in the history of war. I believe 1,200 guns have fallen into the hands of the allies. Until full details arrive, it would be impossible to form any idea of the actual state of the town. Some of your readers may not exactly know what is meant by the South side of Sebastopol. It means the whole town, with its faubourgs, the Malakoff, Great Redan, Little Redan, Flagstaff Bastion, Central Bastion, Quarentine Fort, forts St. Nicholas and St. Paul, the second line of defences, the Garden batteries—in fact, the whole of Sebastopol. The north side is, however, still a formidable fortress. The great Star fort of Fort Sieverna is an immense citadel, capable of containing an army, and the land army is encamped in its immediate vicinity. The entrance to the harbor is also still commanded by Fort Constantine and its three tiers of 104 guns. Then there is the Wasp battery and the Telegraph battery. The siege of Sebastopol may, however, be regarded as concluded. The French government has actually ordered the shipping of shells and mortars at Marseilles to be stopped, and a decree in the Moniteur discharges the soldiers of the class of 1847 under arms. The north side will probably capitulate, or after blowing up the works, the garrison will retire inland. Not a single vessel of the Russian fleet remains.

The number of English officers killed is 26; dangerously wounded, 17; severely wounded, 54; severely contused, 2; slightly wounded 37; missing, 1. Total, 137.

Marshal Pelissier gives the French loss at 240 officers wounded, and about 4,500 rank and file wounded. He estimates the killed at one-third of the number of the wounded.

It is said five French Generals fell; but the names have not transpired—at least not officially.

It was a sanguinary day's work that same 8th of September. Some 15,000 human beings bit the dust.

I do not trouble you with accounts of the rejoicings here or elsewhere. It is a great victory, and exultation is very great.

I enclose you the last circular of Count Nesselrode relative to the proposals of peace. It was observed that at the Te Deum given yesterday at Paris, at Notre Dame, both the Austrian and Prussian ambassadors were present. The Te Deum was in honor of the capture of Sebastopol.

A telegraphic dispatch from Vienna announces that the Emperor of Russia will be at Warsaw on the 22d or 24th.

This is the first blast announcing coming negotiations.

There is no other news.

Gen. Pelissier's Despatch.

CRIMEA, Sept. 10—11 P. M.

I inspected to-day Sebastopol and its lines of defence.

The mind cannot form an exact picture of our victory, the full extent of which can only be understood by an inspection of the place itself.

The multiplicity of the works of defence and the material means applied thereto exceed by far anything hitherto seen in the history of war.

The capture of the Malakoff, which compelled the enemy to fly before our eagles, already three times victorious, has placed in the hands of the Allies an amount of materiel and immense establishments, the importance of which it is not yet possible to state exactly.

To-morrow the Allied troops will occupy the Karabelnaia and the town, and under their protection an Anglo-French commission will be occupied with making out a return of the materiel abandoned to us by the enemy.

The exultation of our soldiers is very great, and it is with shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!" that they celebrate their victory in the camp.

From the Paris Moniteur, Sept. 13.

The irregularities which have occurred in the order of arrival of the last despatches from the East, the necessary laconism of those despatches, and the prodigious rapidity with which the events they announce have succeeded each other, have caused a feeling of uncertainty and surprise, which, perhaps, has not allowed at first a full appreciation of the decisive importance of the victory which the Allied armies have just gained.

This triumph, so laboriously prepared during a whole year, and gloriously achieved by a heroic and supreme effort, has not been generally understood in its full extent.

After so much expectation the news of the solution of the struggle has been so sudden and affecting that it has not allowed sufficient calmness to the public mind to explain clearly the facts that have been accomplished, and to enable them to form a correct estimate of their importance.

These facts are immense, and may be summed up in two words—the fall of Sebastopol and the destruction of the Russian fleet.

On the 8th of September, at noon, the signal for the assault was given. A few moments afterwards the Allies were masters of the Malakoff, and at dusk the besieged, despairing of continuing a resistance in the other defences of the place, abandoned them all at the same time, and hastily evacuated Sebastopol to place an arm of the sea between them and our troops.

On the 9th, at 3 A. M., the whole town presented one immense conflagration, and such Russian vessels as had been spared by our shells disappeared beneath the waters of the roadstead, sunk by the enemy himself.

The Very Latest.

TELEGRAPHIC FROM LONDON TO LIVERPOOL.

LONDON, Sept. 15, 1855.

THE Paris correspondent of the Daily News writes—it is reported that 25,000 men have embarked at Balaklava for the north of Sebastopol. This news appears to be highly probable. Yesterday's Debats contains the following notes on the present occupation of the Allied army, from the pen of Colonel St. Ange:

It has been asked if Sebastopol is tenable so long as the Russians remain masters of all the forts on the north side which line the sea in front of the town? Undoubtedly it may be held in spite of this. We received balls and bombs in our roofless trenches, sheltered merely by parapets thrown up in haste, under the fire even of grape and musketry, and we did not, on that account, abandon the trenches. In Sebastopol we shall be sheltered from the balls by the walls of the houses, indeed of several houses at once. No fire of grape or musketry need be feared at the distance the enemy is now—1,200 to 1,400 yards. As for the bombs, we may screen ourselves from them as the Russians themselves did against ours, by constructing strong hurdles with earth upon them. We cannot want the materials, since the Russians had not time to burn or destroy everything in this great city. It is true that the occupation of the north by the Russians prevents our entering the roadstead and the port, yet what need have we of them when we already possess excellent harbors of Cape Chersonese? Have not our fleets already passed the winter without incurring any danger in these waters? It has also been asked if the Allies will have to undertake now or later the siege of the forts on the north side? There appears no absolute necessity for so doing. That would be binding onrselves down again to labors slow and painful, as those which have occupied us so long, and cost us so many efforts, so many men, and so much money. The key to those forts is in fact a victory over the Russians in the Crimea. Then they would fall of themselves, seeing that they must instantly abandon them, or if the Russians choose to retain them still, a blockade and famine will compel them to surrender, and this is a humiliation that Russia's pride dreads more than all the rest. The forts of the north side can consequently neither prevent our occupation of Sebastopol nor can they thwart our operations in the interior of the Crimea on account of their eccentric situation. We should not be surprised at their being blown up so soon as the Russian army is compelled to retreat from the neighborhood of Sebastopol. The respective positions of the two armies remains the same, and will do so until one of the two shall take the initiative of a movement that will force the other to manœuvre in its turn. For the present the Allied army holds its strong position until the occupation of the town shall have been properly arranged, and its chief defences thoroughly repaired. It does not appear to have anything else at present to do. The Russian army, for its part, occupies the excellent positions of Mackenzie's, strongly intrenched and lined with redoubts like our own. On both sides the capability exists in receiving the attack with chances tolerably equal of serious resistance and success, and with the equal risk of losing a great many men. The Russians will probably continue in observation before us within their strong positions until the Allied army gives signs of some movement. But what will that movement be? Shall we venture to attack in front the Mackenzie heights, where the road from Simpheropol winds along? Shall we penetrate into the heart of the Crimea by another route? If so, by what route and where? All these are premature questions. Let us avoid tracing out imaginary plans of campaign. Rather let us permit time to develope the events; or if our imagination must need outstrip facts, the field of conjecture is open.

The Times expresses a hope that, in accordance with precedent and with the usage of other nations, a day may be appointed for a public thanksgiving for the glorious victory and that upon the arrival of the official despatches the honors due to those who have shared in the conquest of Sebastopol may be distributed without delay.

Lord Palmerston yesterday received an address from the inhabitants of Melbourne, in Derbyshire, where he was paying a visit, in compliment to the late triumph of the Allies.

The Latest From the Crimea.

Lord Panmure has received the following dispatch from General Simpson:

CRIMEA, Sept. 12—10:40 A. M.

The enemy has destroyed the remainder of his fleet, nothing now remains in the harbor.

The Secretary to the Admiralty has received the following telegraphic dispatch from Rear Admiral Lyons, dated

SEPT. 12—10:45 A. M.

The Russians are burning their steamers. Several have already been burned to the water's edge, and have sunk.

The Queen of England to the Army.

Lord Panmure has addressed the following telegraphic dispatch to General Simpson:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Sept. 13, 1855.

The Queen has received with deep emotion the welcome intelligence of the fall of Sebastopol.

Penetrated with profound gratitude to the Almighty, who has vouchsafed this triumph to the allied army, her Majesty has commanded me to express to yourself, and through you to the army, the pride with which she regards this fresh instance of their heroism.

The Queen congratulates her troops on the triumphant issue of this protracted siege, and thanks them for the cheerfulness and fortitude with which they have encountered its toils, and the valor which has led to its termination.

The Queen deeply laments that this success is not without its alloy in the heavy losses which have been sustained; and while she rejoices in the victory, her Majesty deeply sympathises with the noble sufferers in their country's cause.

You will be pleased to congratulate Gen. Pelissier, in her Majesty's name, upon the brilliant result of the assault on the Malakoff, which proves the irresistible force as well as indomitable courage of our brave allies.

Orders from the French Government.

The Moniteur also publishes the following dispatch, addressed by the Minister of the Interior to the Prefects in the departments:

PARIS, Sept. 12, 1855.

MONSIEUR LE PREFET—The indomitable courage of our soldiers and of our allies has just been crowned by a striking triumph. After three battles, which were three victories—after the gigantic efforts of a siege without a parallel in military annals, Sebastopol, its ports its arsenals, its materiel, are in our hands. The powerful fleet which once dominated the Black Sea and caused the disaster of Sinope, no longer exists.

The subjoined despatch, which the Minister of War has just received from the commander-in-chief, and which describes the appearance of Sebastopol to-day, will make every one understand the grandeur of the struggle which has just terminated, and the prize of the battle which the Russians have left in our hands.

For this immense success the Emperor wishes to render solemn thanksgivings to God, who disposes of the fate of armies. On Sunday, the 16th of September, a Te Deum will be sung in all the departments of the empire; you will concert measures with the ecclesiastical, civil and military authorities to give a brilliancy to this ceremony which will correspond with the grandeur of our victory; you will also authorize such public rejoicings as the patriotism of the people may improvise. The country, associating itself, as it always does, with the sentiments of the Emperor, will celebrate with enthusiasm the heroism of our soldiers and the new glory they have just added to the ancient glories of France.

Accept, M. le Prefet, the assurance of my distinguished consideration. BILLAULT,
The Minister of the Interior.

General Pelissier Made a Marshal.

The Moniteur of Sept. 13 contains the following decree:

Napoleon, by the grace of God and the will of the people, Emperor of the French.

Taking into consideration the eminent services rendered by General Pelissier, especially in the Crimea, while commanding our army in the East, we decree as follows:

Aimable Jean Jacques Pelissier, General of Division, is raised to the rank of a Marshal of France. NAPOLEON.

DATED St. CLOUD, Sept. 12, 1855.

YANKEE KNICK-KNACKS IN ENGLAND.—The London correspondent of the Boston Transcript, says:

"American wares are fast getting into repute here, and they are sold in most of the cities and large towns. American wooden ware astonishes our English cousins, by its lightness, beauty and low cost. American trunks and axes are advertised in the English papers, and I was greatly amused at reading a dealer's description of a lot of Connecticut clocks, which "had decorated faces, a mirror in front, and denote the passing hour in brilliant cathedral tones," and all for less than four dollars federal currency."

A few weeks since the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, sitting at Philadelphia, in final decision, denied the application of Passmore Williamson for a writ of habeas corpus. He is now imprisoned for a contempt of Court, for disobeying a writ of habeas corpus, commanding him to produce the bodies of certain persons alleged to be slaves. The decision leaves Williamson to remain in jail for an indefinite period.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 6, 1855.

America and its Destiny.

ABOUT three and a half centuries ago, Christoval Colon, or Columbus, discovered the continent of America; until then it was unknown to what is generally admitted to be the civilized world. How far the Spaniards were in advance of the Aztecs, and how much superior the rule and government which they introduced was, or is now, to the rule and government of the Montezumas, is a subject which we must leave casuists to decide, and the which it is not our intention, at the present time, to discuss. Suffice it to say that history describes them as a great and powerful nation, holding other powers and dependencies in abeyance to their will, and subjecting many smaller nations to their rule and dominion. And from subsequent discoveries by Stephens and Catherwood and others, in Central America, and other places on this Continent, it would seem that they were the remnant or debris of a once powerful people, whose Babylons, Ninevahs, Tyres and Jerusalems had been overthrown, destroyed, forsaken and deserted, leaving nothing but ruined cities, fragments of statuary and architecture, roads, acqueducts, temples and fortresses, as so many silent monuments of their illustrious occupants, and pointing to a time when a people inhabited this continent who were once enlightened, intelligent, scientific and powerful. The glories of that race, like the once powerful dynasties of Asia, have passed away; their crumbling towers, tottering columns, and magnificent ruins, bespeak their greatness—the Book of Mormon unfolds their history.

America seems to have been the theatre of great and important events; and if she has not figured as largely in the world's history as some of her continental cotemporaries, it has not been for lack of events, for the want of the rise and fall of cities, nations, empires, powers, and materials of which to compose such history; nor that she has not a record or history; but from the fact, that Asiatic and European historians, from whom we obtain our information, were separated from this continent by mighty oceans, and knew not, until Columbus made the discovery, that such a place was in existence.

Nations have risen and fallen, empires have spread and extended, temples have been erected, and in them myriads of worshippers have bowed the knee; she has had her warriors, her generals, her heroes, her emperors, kings, philosophers, statesmen, and judges; her rise, her decline, her fall. America seems to have been a peculiar place on the world's surface; extending from the north to the south pole, almost surrounded by the mighty Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; and what is not, is cut off by the frozen regions of the north. It has been the theatre of great and important events, and evidently is destined to occupy an important part in the world's drama in the eventful future of her history. It has evidently, for useful purposes, been hid up from the world for generations; its nations overthrown, its cities destroyed, its institutions changed and obliterated; its fertile lands have enjoyed, for generations, a species of sabbatic rest; while its nomadic or wandering tribes, the very dross of a once powerful race, are ignorant alike of their own history, their fathers, their institutions, of the past, present or future; and while they gaze upon the magnificent ruins of cities, palaces, and temples, feel a superstitious awe; and tell us that their oldest fathers who have conversed with their fathers of twelve hundred moons, when interrogated about the age, origin, or inhabitants of these places, only shook their heads, and said "I don't know." The spirit and prestige of the former inhabitants have passed away, and its rich fertile lands, where myriads have once enjoyed life, seem to be destined to be possessed and peopled by other races transplanted here for some wise purpose in the economy of God, and in the development of principles associated with his designs in the eventful period of the "latter days." Wrought upon by an invisible agency, Columbus could not rest, and would not allow others to do so, until he obtained a commission to search out this land; which, when found, the story of its riches, like the recent discovery of California gold, attracted the cupidity of the nations of the earth, who felt emulous to obtain its territory and wealth. Expeditions were fitted out, battles were fought, empire obtained, colonies and nations organized, charters and immunities granted; and each nation made their own peculiar speculations and appanage, according to their power, circumstances, or convenience, and according to the necessity, policy, or views of the various competing nations. In some instances men were banished for crimes, and it was made a receptacle of thieves, vagabonds, and scoundrels, the sweepings of jails; in others, an asylum from tyranny and religious persecution; whilst in others, adventurous colonists came out for the purpose of gratifying an ambition, or bettering their condition in life. Many good, wise, prudent, energetic, honorable, peaceable men, without ostentation, glad to escape peaceably from a state of things their judgments told them were not good, emigrated to these new colonies. Its destiny however was onward; and as David, formerly under the direction of the Lord, for the establishment of his kingdom, called together a mixed assembly of people, and had not only the honorable, but debtors and men in bad repute, to establish a kingdom that was to be powerful—so this country, in its embryo, was the receptacle of all kinds that should hereafter be amalgamated; that should, from its conglomerated materials, form a nation destined to become the attraction, and admiration of the wise, the intelligent, the good and virtuous of all nations. And hence the nations of Europe, long goaded by feudal anarchy, or despotic rule, struggling under the influence and power of corrupt dynasties, found an outlet or safety valve in this newly discovered land for the pent-up feelings of liberty, which, although feeble and in embryo, began to spread, and expand through the influence of the reformation, and other causes, among which it will be found that the goading influence of Popery over the monarchs of Europe, who had begun to earnestly desire freedom from its galling chains, was not the least. The genius of liberty once unchained, it was impossible to confine it to the bosoms of nobles, princes, kings and emperors; and however much opposed to the wish or will of their rulers, it spread among the people, and like the rays of the rising sun, penetrated the haunts of darkness and oppression, making manifest and exhibiting all the hideous deformity of their degrading vassalage, slavery and bondage. The genius of liberty once aroused, the latent, slumbering feelings of nobility in the human soul began to spread and expand; and though weak and feeble the notes at first, the cry of freedom began to be heard. Men talked of human rights, of freedom of speech; clubs were formed, caucuses held, books published, oratory was brought into requisition; the press thundered forth its voice, until the very kings who had given impetus to this freedom, seemed to be threatened with annihilation, and under the magic words vive la liberte, the desire of freedom in the human soul began to grow, expand and burn, until, like the pent up energies of volcanic fire, or the slumbering power of electricity, it was ready to burst over every barrrier to find room sufficient for its untried powers. And although Spain, France, England, Portugal, and Germany, sent out their several quotas to America, bringing with them more or less of the old leaven, yet here, "men began to understand the rights of man, and understanding, dared maintain them." On this land there was room for freedom; and under the fostering care of a Washington, a Jefferson, an Adams, and hosts of other patriots, its fires burned brightly over this continent, casting their brilliant rays over the still darkened continent of Europe; and reacting upon the already excited masses, it burst forth with uncontrollable fury, spreading desolation through France, and threatening to engulf that continent with its raging burning lava. But here where the Ephraimites and the Lamanites had flourished, and the Aztecs long ruled, was elevated the stars and stripes; here party feuds and sectional interests were forgotten. The Spaniard, the Frank, and the Anglo-Saxon clasped hands. Here, far away from the old influences of priestcraft and kingcraft, with a territory extending from the artic regions of the north to those of the south, and laved by the waters of the great Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, liberty found a home, free as the air, untrammeled as light, and extensive as the continent of America. Here was a fair outlet for the downtrodden millions of Europe; here was a field capacious for all governmental experiments; here was a "new world," whereon the inhabitants from all parts of the old might meet on the common platform of fraternity, of human rights, and be brethren: here were principles, land, water, and light, which were free as the air we breathe; here was emphatically and the "asylum for the oppressed." Here was all that man could crave, for soil, climate, minerals, woods and water—the garden of the world; here was room for the most sanguine and ambitious; here were facilities to form a world's empire, and ample opportunity for philanthropists, philosophers and statesmen to solve the problem of the efficiency of human governments, and to erect a nation more magnificent, just, extensive and glorious than the world ever saw. It remains then to be seen whether we are competent for the task; whether we can cope with coming events, lay the foundation, and rear the edifice; whether we have got men of stalwart arms, honest and firm purpose, and giant intellect, to guide the ship of state through the shoals, rocks, and quicksands of party strife, to a peaceful haven; or stultified pigmies, who will quarrel about straws—the debris of narrow, contracted, old rotten, effete European dynasties.

"The land of the free, the home of the brave,"

A great destiny lays before the United States; the question is, is she competent for the task? She has outrode the fiery test of revolution, hurled defiance at a despot's power, and grasped the sceptre of liberty with a nervous, powerful grip. She has, out of the chaotic, confused mass of material, associated with corrupt governments, organized a system of government, and framed a constitution, that while it is honorable to its founders; guarantees to all, to the fullest extent, "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité." Despised, persecuted, trodden underfoot, or banished from other nations, the goddess of liberty has found a resting place, an asylum in the land of Columbia, where she rules in every true American heart. Liberty here is more than a name. Here man is free to speak, free to think, free to write, free to act, free to do good; the very genius of our Constitution and institutions are freedom. If there is a fault, it is the fault of party, sectional strife, or narrow bigotry; it is not in our institutions. Our fathers have laid a good foundation, and we have built upon it, with few exceptions, thus far. Under its fostering influences the country has been populated, territories settled, States formed, and new territorial acquisitions made. Noiselessly, but steadily and rapidly, has been the march of improvement. Our deserts have become populated, and "blossomed as the rose;" whilst our "wilderness and solitary places have been made glad." The hum of industry, the tread of enterprize, and the march of improvement are everywhere seen and heard. Villages, towns, cities, arise like magic through the length and breadth of the land; whilst new territories are being formed, and State after State swells our glorious constellation. The wise, the intelligent, the talented, the scientific, as well as the poor and oppressed of other nations, have sought an asylum with us; they have brought with them the arts and sciences of those nations, whilst the enterprising energy of our own citizens has blended itself with theirs, and in many instances snatched from them the laurels. Our fertile and extensive territory, laved by the two great oceans, and reaching from the frozen regions nearly to the torrid zone, yields forth in rich luxuriance everything necessary for the comfort, luxury, and wants of man. Our rivers and lakes, like so many grand arteries, facilitate commerce, whilst our railroads are like a great network spread over the land. Our manufactures, ships, steamboats, mills, and machinery, are unequalled; and our country the glory of the world. Our ships float on all oceans, plow every sea, and enter every port, strait or inlet. Our commerce is as extensive as the globe: and our flag is respected among all people; we are at peace with all nations, and are the envy of the world.

Such is America at present. What is her future? Her destiny is evidently onward; for although yet in her youth, she has grown to be a giant among the nations. Again we ask, who can take the helm of state? Whilst new political elements are rising, and our healthy institutions grow, spread and increase; whilst wave after wave of population strikes our shore, and penetrates our territories; whilst demagogues at home, or cabals and intriguants abroad, worry and fret us, who can say to the troubled elements, "peace be still!" With the improvements that are daily progressing, what are her capabilities for using them? for preserving and maintaining them? Is she competent for the task? Is she equal to the emergency? Or, like some of the crumbling dynasties of Central America, will she quail in the emergency? Will there be no one of sufficient calibre to meet the crisis? Our rivers, our territory, our mountains, plains, lands, oceans, are American; what are our senators? do they grow with its growth? can they grasp the helm of state, and dare the raging elements of sectional strife? have they the mind, the talent, the energy, the honesty, to be patriots and statesmen? Or, forgetting the dignity of their position, will they basely forsake their country, and pander to the spotted, leprous, loathsome touch of sectional cliques? Will they plant themselves upon the Constitution, and amidst the crawling, hissing, poisonous reptiles, who would seek to gnaw the vitals of their country, stand proudly erect, and drive the slippery brood to their loathsome dens; and with a glowing pride, an honest heart, and upright head, thunder forth, "I am an American Senator!" Or will they pollute their senatorial robes; band with fanatics and traitors against their country's weal; enter into their dark cabals, until sunk, degraded, perjured, with the assassin's dagger, they strike the fatal blow at Columbia, sever her fraternal ties, set State against State, brother against brother, until the ghosts of their murdered, bleeding country, and her slaughtered sons, pale, ghastly, and cadaverous, shall shriek in their terrified ears—traitors, paricides, murderers! it is thou—thou that hast done this!

What might we not do with a firm, pure, stable, reliable government? Our national sins have been small in comparison with other nations. We are at the present time, comparatively, in our infancy; by pursuing a just and honorable course we should soon become the arbiter of nations and the wonder and admiration of the world. The United States is only a small part of Columbia. The question to be solved is, Shall she or some other power take the laurels? We need no chicanery nor gilded diplomatic deception. We need no fillibustering—no Kinneys or Walkers, nor any little petty thieving. When our Government shall be sufficiently strong, pure, and honorable, islands, states, and dynasties will seek shelter under its wings; the Canadas, the Central American States, Merico, Rio Janeiro, Bolivia, Peru, Chili, Brazil, and all of South America will naturally follow; they will need no coercion; they will seek to be one with us. We have the cards in our own hands—shall we play the fool or act as wise men? Are we competent to grasp the evident future, or shall we play at marbles and let the State crumble to ruins? Shall we place the capitol of the United States upon the plateau of Mexico—in the grand centre of the future nation—and thunder forth our laws from Montezuma's palaces, or dwindling down into insignificance, fritter away our patrimony, suffer mob rule, lynching, "higher law," "vigilance committees," secret societies, and sectional influences to bear rule; or shall the Constitution be maintained inviolate, and we act as a band of brothers? Shall the blessings of that Constitution extend from the North to the South Pole; or shall we, giving way to imbecile passions and sectional feelings, break up in a row, and become the laughing stock of the world? We may either take the lead of nations or become the very tail-end of creation; a prey to despots and demagogues, with only power to curse our own imbecility. We have the power to become great, generous, and noble; don't let us screw our hearts into a nutshell, and selfishly and niggardly withhold blessings that nature has so generously poured into our lap. Slavery and anti-slavery, prohibitions and proscriptions of any kind, are too small to talk about when the destinies of the American continent and of the world are at stake. If we wish to be philanthropists, and benefit the negro race, there is ample room in Africa for the exercise of our generosity; where they frequently sacrifice men by the thousand, ornament their trees with skulls, and bury men alive for amusement. The peace of this nation ought not to be disturbed by such fanaticism. If we cannot find Senators of sufficient calibre to settle so small a sectional difference as this, then indeed are we at a low ebb. Have we no Washingtons, Jeffersons, Jacksons, Clays, or Websters left? They certainly cannot be all Brutuses. Let us unite as brethren, respect each other's feelings; be noble, generous, patriotic, and right, and then free and liberal, as we can well afford to be. Let us invite North and South, East and West, all to come; and let America, whilst she is emphatically be as truly "an asylum for the oppressed," that there may be room for the generous upgushings of our better natures, that the stranger may find protection under the wings of the eagle; and that when the downtrodden sons of men in distant nations shall see the stars and stripes flutter in the breeze, they may, having heard of her fame, sigh for a spot on the land of Columbia.

"The land of the free and the home of the brave,"

Let us lay aside our senseless jars, and abide the Constitution; let us all concede, and not seek to root up the foundation of our Government. If the Constitution does not suit us, let us constitutionally change it; but let us lay aside our fanaticism and respect law; let us have no North, no South, no East, no West, no slavery or anti-slavery; but let us meet together as wise men, and adjust difficulties where they occur; let us legislate for the nation, and not for self or party; let us strike at real evils, and not imaginary ones. If slavery don't suit us, let us allow others the right of thought and judgment: the cutting off of an excrescence sometimes produces suppuration and death; if slavery is objectionable, let us purchase or compromise, and not turn thieves and stir up anarchy and confusion; let us give the South the same that we claim—protection; if demagogues have perverted the political franchise, and called on aliens to perjure themselves by voting, let us strike at the evil and correct it, and not make war upon foreigners; if thieves and disorderly persons swarm in California, or elsewhere, let us use the law and honor it, and not seek to overthrow it; if societies, East, send out men, and use extra-judicial means to control territory in the west, let us not meet one evil with another, but meet them legally and constitutionally. Let us unite together to sustain law in all its bearings, and let every officer, from the President of the United States to a village magistrate, be honored in their place and in their decisions; if they do wrong remove them; but do it legally, and let the Constitution, law, and order be the great bulwark of the land. Let us retrace our steps and come back to first principles. If we have flourished thus far under the institutions sacredly bequeathed by our fathers, let us not seek to better ourselves by anarchy and confusion. Let our institutions be honored and spread, and our motto be, "America for the world, and the world America."

There never was a nation so favorably situated as the United States, with such a great future before her—not even Babylon. The question again arises, Is she equal to her destiny? Will the stability, the purity, the order, the equity, the power, and the magnificence of her Government produce a desire among the contiguous nations to be assimilated with her and find shelter under her wing? Will she form a great national neuclus on the plateaus of Mexico, and while she spreads her wings over the continent of America, stretching east, west, north, and south, cause the genius of her institutions to pulsate to the ends of the earth? Or shall travellers, from distant nations, in after ages, point out, as a matter of history, the ruins of the capitol and public buildings at Washington; the City Hall, Custom House, and hotels of New York; Girard College and the United States Bank in Philadelphia, as matters of curiosity for the antiquarian?

Let us not weaken ourselves through dissensions as Carthage did, and boast of our military prowess, mercantile resources, and extensive acquirements, until Rome thunders at our gates and demands the unconditional surrender of our fleets, armies, and kingdom.

Let us learn a lesson from Babylon, who, in her fancied security, closed her ears and gates upon her enemies, and revelled in debauchery, until there was written on the wall, "Mene, mene, Tekel Upharsin!" Shall we follow in the footsteps of Greece and Rome, who, after subjugating nations and conquering the world, trusting to the prestige of arms, to her once invincible legions, and to the deeds of her fathers, fell the victims of avarice, voluptuousness, dissensions, and tyranny. The crumbling monuments and broken fragments of these mighty dynasties speak in words of thunder in our ears, Beware, ye sons of Columbia lest you should become like unto us!

From these crumbled ruins of Europe, Asia, and America; from the rise and fall of empires, and from the present position of Europe, we may learn; and while we breathe a free atmosphere and enjoy the blessings of liberty, let us guard the sacred trust until its blessings, spread as the light, extend wide as the universe—till

"Every son of Adam shall be free."

Ye Senators and Statesmen of America, can you do it? If not, we think we know who can.

The Elders.

WE learn by the Star of Sept. 22d, that President F. D. Richards, left Liverpool for Switzerland, on a visit to the Swiss and Italian missions on the 7th ult. Elder Daniel Spencer left Liverpool on the 30th of August, accompanied by Elders Hector, C. Haight, and Joseph A. Young, for Copenhagen on a visit to the Scandinavian mission. Bro. Haight has been appointed to that field of labor and will not return with the others.

The Foreign News.

THE foreign news has well nigh overthrown the basis of previous calculations. If anywhere, certainly in the United States, the impregnability of Sebastopol had come to be believed in. Here, to some extent, developed by republican institutions, exists the same indomitable spirit, that was conceived to animate the Russians in a defence that might be deemed heroic.

The southern portion of Sebastopol, with an arm of the sea, marked at the last advices, the distance between the vanquished and the besieged. Defensive when opposed in aggressive movements, the Muscovite wins his very triumphs out of defeat, and we have yet to see whether the Allied armies may not be entrapped and lost in the defiles of the Crimean mountains. Baktcheseria, to which the Russians were about withdrawing a portion of their forces, has been rendered almost impregnable by nature. Reached only by mountain gorges, huge natural bastions confront the intruder at its very entrance. It is the geographical as well as the political capital of the Crimea, and was the centre from which the Tartar hordes who spread over the whole southern provinces of Russia, with scimitar in one hand and a sword of flame in the other, went forth on their conquests of bloodshed and death.

During the last nine hundred years, the Crimea has been conquered and re-conquered some forty times between different races; even now it is inhabited less by Russians than by Greeks and Tartars. The latter have proved themselves not indisposed towards the Allies. As commanding the outlets of the rivers that drain the empire, and giving to its possessor sovereign control over the mouths of the Danube, together with the facilities afforded by its position and its surrounding waters for reaching the chief Asiatic markets, its value in a commercial and political point of view is not lightly to be estimated. The policy of Russia has, for the time being, ignored it. Russia needed Constantinople to render of avail its foreign policy. It has made its move too quickly and too undisguisedly. Yet the other powers are not a whit the less honest in the matter of the integrity of Turkey, and England would rather go shares with Russia than with France. All three are commercial powers, and so all have commercial interests, of which all are mutually zealous. In this matter, England has the greater stake, and Russia confidently calculates, so soon as the results gained begin to be disposed of, that France and England will not hold together. We shall yet have incredible complications, for which even the genius of a Napoleon and the casuistry of a Palmerston may prove insufficient to solve.

The Sun Out Upon the 'Distress of the Mormons.'

THE New York Sun of last week gives us a glimpse of spiritual manifestation of an entirely new character, not that there was not the usual amount of rapping, for he raps the Woman's Advocate over the head most unmercifully. His peculiarity, differing from every other manifestation, is in the fact that he assumes to be a medium, not for the spirit of the dead, but the spirits of all living—Yankees especially. He don't like the way the Woman's Advocate handles charitable dogmatics, and "truculently adds" it is in error, "it misrepresents the case, and the spirit of the people."

Now we take it for granted, as the Woman's Advocate does not represent "the spirit of the people," and the Sun puts it aside, and takes the stand, that he does, so we will hear what "the spirit of the people" signifies through their brilliant medium:

"As to the alleged want of sympathy, it is enough to say, that there has yet been no appeal from Utah. If an appeal were made in the name of humanity, the degrading and disgusting doctrines which Brigham Young and others of the Priesthood promulgate as articles of faith would not hinder the American people from responding to it. They would contribute of their means to save from starvation even the deluded votaries of the most gross and sensual creed."

Indeed, Brigham Young and others of the Priesthood never could have imagined that such God-like virtues existed; nor can they, until the bright rays of this refulgent medium shall penetrate that darkened region beyond the mountains, and we shall have to wait some months before its exuberant effects can be heard from, if indeed they are not already starved out. But let us listen to the Oracle:

"But as yet no cry for help has come from Utah, and we know not to what extent distress prevails or is threatened. The crops are reported to have been almost destroyed by drought and grasshoppers, but the same mail which brings this news, brings also the commands of the Mormon Priesthood to the people to contribute liberally of their substance to carry on the building of the Temple. No excuses of bad crops will be accepted. At the same time a large building for the use of Brigham Young and his wives was erecting at the expense of the community. Surely, the people ought not to be thus burdened if famine threatens them."

Hold! hold! thou ubiquitous spirit of the people. Who says this "large building for the use of Brigham Young and his wives" was erected at the expense of the community? Now, sir, that is false; the people's spirit spoke not then—your own predominates. Such mistakes are sometimes made by mediums. Are your splendid dwellings and magnificent country residences erected at the expense of the community, that you charge this upon Brigham Young? Do not you know that Brigham Young is a tolerably smart man, and able to get his own living? Now be consistent, Mr. Sun, for you may want to refer to Brigham Young again in some of your flights of fancy to edify the people. But go on:

"Hostility to the Mormons does not arise from their daring to hold new doctrines, but from their acts and character. Their so-called religion is hostile to virtue, to christianity, and to our institutions."

Wrong again, Mr. Sun; they are the best people in the world, and won't you please to show us how "their so-called religion is hostile to virtue, to christianity, and to our institutions?" They believe as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Peter, James, and John did. That your so-called religion is hostile to the virtue and christianity of these ancient worthies, we don't doubt; but that the Mormons are hostile, would require more than the mere assertion even of so pure a medium to prove. As "to our institutions," we believe they do differ a little from some of them; at least the evidence of some of the returned learned Judges was to this effect, for they said it was "very hard," and the "code moral," which the military tried to introduce into Utah, appears to have met with some disfavor. If they and the New York Herald, as well as yourself, represent the virtue, christianity, and "our institutions," then the Mormons certainly are hostile, nor will they ever submit to your code. As to governmental institutions, Utah is like every other Territory of the United States, governed by its "organic act," and men appointed by General Government; but we will leave you to answer these questions another time, and continue this interesting development of spiritualism:

"It degrades woman worse than the creed of Mahomet, from which its central idea is borrowed."

Indeed! and who did Mahomet borrow his "central idea" from? We used to have a dreadful idea of the poor Moslem women until we read Stephens and Lamartine's interesting reports; but then we never went to Turkey. Have you, Mr. Sun, ever been to Utah? and are the women there degraded by honorable marriage, or, like the "nymphs du pave" of this our metropolis, wander by thousands in wretchedness through the streets of Salt Lake City? If so, why did the immortal Brocchus and his honorable friends say it was "very hard!" And why did Ammon's squaw demand the blankets and looking-glass of certain honorable United States officers? It is strange indeed that it is so hard there, while it is so easy here under your virtuous teachings. We fear you, too, are getting dogmatic.

"Brigham Young and the priesthood aim at political as well as spiritual power; and, if they dared, they would openly defy the United States Government."

Surprising! It was only the other day you said that Brigham Young was swearing awfully about the United States; and now you say, "if they dared." Now do try to be consistent, or we shall be forced to think you don't mean what you say.

"Their ranks are recruited abroad with great zeal, from among the ignorant and sensual. Thus, they are introducing among us a debased and dangerous element, and it is not strange that thoughtful men look with disfavor and distrust upon this veritable pest which is gathering strength in the heart of the Republic."

The Mormons have done remarkably well, for fools, during the last twenty-five years, especially when it is considered that such "ignorance can gather strength," and cause such "distrust among thoughtful men." But proceed:

"That it will be dispersed sooner or later by its own discords, we believe, and if providential causes should hasten its destruction, none who wish to see our country rid of a troublesome question in our internal politics, will indulge in regrets."

"Oh consistency, thou art a jewel." You have forgotten your charitable purpose, "to contribute of their means to save from starvation even the deluded votaries of the most gross and sensual creed;" and so piously leave their destruction to "providence." Why not leave it "to be dispersed sooner or later by its own discords?" Very much like the pious soul that raised his eyes to heaven, saying, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." The Mormons, poor souls, left to their destruction, first to the tender mercies of Missouri, and then to Illinois, and now to Providence; and what the mob didn't do to "rid the country of a troublesome question," we may expect Providence will. But this is not the first time the Mormons have been turned over to the hands of Providence; when last turned over, they had no crops or homes either—not even the benevolent rays of the "Sun" to shine upon them: and yet they live. How strange that Providence did not perpetrate their destruction upon those boundless deserts, when the charitable wishes of the Sun had been so forcibly expressed by Missouri and Illinois. How easily the Indians could have fallen upon them and finished the job, especially during the time that most of their men were off to the Mexican war. And how easily it might have been accomplished, when their crops were nearly destroyed by the crickets, had it not been for those gulls, who like Moses's serpent, consumed the Egyptian serpents; so the gulls ate up all the crickets, and thus your benevolent purposes were again thwarted.

But now let us hear from the "Mormon" in behalf of the spirit of the people of Utah. The Sun says there has "been no appeal from Utah for help." An appeal for help, indeed! They have called for their own, but their rights have been continually withheld though your statesmen owned their cause was just. And shall they now ask charity of those that robbed and despoiled them of their goods and murdered their best men? We have been robbed of millions and driven from our own firesides into the cold wintry blasts of the desert, to starve by your "charitable institutions," and shall we now humbly crave your paltry sixpences? Talk to us with your hyprocritical cant about charity! Pshaw, its nauseating to every one, not ate up with your corruptions, humbugery, and pharisaical egotism. You forget you are talking to Americans, born upon the soil of freedom, suckled in liberty, who have inhaled it from our fathers lips, our ears yet tingling with the tales of a nations birth right, sons of fathers who fought for rights, that you in your bigotry and self-conceit would fain wrench from them. Intolerence has thrice driven them from their homes, but the wild bursts of the liberty of '76 now reverberate through the mountain passes of Utah, bidding defiance to mobocracy and its leaders, and hurling your mock charity, and pretended patriotism back to the font of corruption from which it issues. The Mormons neither need your sympathy or your cankered gold. Your malicious slanders only excite contempt for those base enough to utter them. Your contemptable falsehoods fail to ruffle a feather in our caps. Nor is Brigham Young the least offended at your weakness; fear nothing from "the elements that Mormonism introduce," you have "base and dangerous elements" nearer home to cause your fears, the "pest" is in your own midst, the "ignorance and sensuality" crowd your streets, patronize your operas and saloons, lounge in your parlors, fill your offices, sit at your desks, dictate in your sanctums, and make night hideous with its horrid reveling and debauchery through the cities and towns of this wide spread country.

The "providence" so often cause without or provocation, invoked to destroy the Mormons, will soon enough visit their base maligners with the just measure of his indignation and wrath, for their shedding of the blood of innocence, oppression of the poor, robbery of widows and ophans, and outrages upon purity and virture.

The God of Jacob in whom the Momons trust, He who brought up Israel out of Egypt, He it is also that sustained the Mormons in their tedious journeyings over the barren deserts and wild mountain passes of this continent; in the dark hour of trial, amid all their distress, without friends or home, God upheld and sustained them; He sustains them still and will cause them to shine forth with the bright radiance of eternal truth over the wide world, long after its malicious slanders shall have sunk to oblivion in the filth of their own corruptions.

The Prohibitory Liquor Law.

FROM all quarters we learn of the repudiation of this proscriptive law. Men that wielded a great influence for good in the temperance moral suasion phalanx, previous to their assumption of coercive power, are now powerless; and intemperance with a loose rein runs riot through the land wherever the prohibitory law has been adoped. The provisions of that law are a dead letter, and consequently a disgrace to the statute books that contain them.

No man deprecates intemperance more than we do, and this has been the principle reason of our objection to the prohibitory law from the first. A law that cannot be respected is much worse than equivalent to no law; it begets an opposition, or mob law, which is an important step towards anarchy, and absence of all law, but that of might

One Week Later from Europe.

THE United States mail steamship Pacific arrived at this port on Wednesday morning, the 3d, bringing one week's later intelligence from Europe. She sailed from Liverpool at 5 P. M. on September 22.

Dispatches from General Simpson, from the seat of war, had been received by the government of England, describing the assault and capture of the Malakoff. He says:

At 12 o'clock on the morning of the 8th of September, the French columns under Generals Bosquet, McMahon, and De La Motterouge entered and carried the Malakoff with impetuous valor. The British column stormed the Redan, but after a bloody combat could not hold it. A second assault could not be organized until the following morning, when the Redan was found to be evacuated.

The loss of life has been fearful, particularly amongst officers.

General Pelissier's dispatches had not arrived.

The retreat of the Russians to Perekop was contradicted. It was expected they would be unable to hold the north of Sebastopol, for want of provisions.

Nothing decisive was known in regard to the next move of the Allies.

Four thousand cannon, fifty thousand balls, and immense stores of gunpowder were taken possession of by the Allies at Sebastopol.

There was more talk about Austrian negotiations. The latest was that Austria was willing to undertake the work of mediation at Vienna, and France at Paris.

It was reported that Russia had undertaken the task of mediation between Denmark and the United States on the Sound dues question.

At Paris there was considerable excitement in regard to the high prices of bread. The Exhibition of the Industry of All Nations would continue open until the 25th November. The Empress was progressing favorably.

The inauguration of Don Pedro, King of Portugal, was celebrated on the 16th with great enthusiasm.

The Czar Alexander, in an address to his army, says: I rely confidently upon your courage to repel all future attacks.

And in a letter to the King of Prussia states that he will accept no conditions of peace derogatory to Russia.

The Czar, in company with the three Grand Dukes, has signified his intention of proceeding to the Crimea.

The Turks still hold Kars, having repulsed the Russians of the 7th of August, with considerable loss, the Russians retiring to Erzeroum.

No later news from the Baltic has been received.

The Emperor of Austria had congratulated Queen Victoria and Louis Napoleon on the victory of the Allies.

The King of Naples had sent apologies to England and France for recent insults.

Mazzini's revolutionary manifesto to the Neapolitans had been published.

Money in good demand. In American stocks little was doing, and prices were nominal.

THE MORMON.

Correspondence.

From Our Irish Correspondent.

199 COLLINGWOOD STREET,
BELFAST, Sept. 18, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER TAYLOR: I cannot but accuse myself of ingratitude, in having so long neglected to accept of your kind invitation to continue my correspondence. But really the idea of publicity being given to my letters, almost scares me from the track. Not that my deeds would make so black a record that I should be afraid of the light; but this is a very cruel criticizing world; and the best men's acts and words are continually being misconstrued. Your example, however, suggests to me and everybody else that we ought to act and speak uprightly and the truth, without caring a straw for anybody. In the first place, I owe you very many thanks for the file of the "Mormon," regularly received. It is not my fault that it is not acknowledged by subscriptions for a thousand numbers instead of empty thanks.

I have just finished the business of our two quarterly Conferences in Dublin and Belfast. During the quarter we have only added twenty-seven to our numbers in the two Conferences, but, better than additions, with the help of the Lord, we have converted the most of those that we already had, from semi-sectarians to Latter Day Saints—a work which I found quite as necessary as preaching the Gospel to strangers. In fact, in Ireland, as in other places, I found that many had yet to learn into what baptism they should be baptized. They had loved and embraced the doctrine for the sake of the darling record of it in the good Old Book, but were yet to be told, that the principles of the Gospel did not emanate from a book, but from the mouth of God through a living Prophet. To tell you the truth, I wasted all my flesh away hunting up proofs from the old Scriptures for the doctrines of Christ; for saint and sinner alike demanded that every principle I advocated, should be blessed and approven with a text. A new era has dawned upon us, and even strangers find that the simple tale of the Gospel told in sincerity, and confirmed by the testimony of living apostles, has more marrow to it than when too freely prepared by the seldom understood and oft misquoted Bible.

Since I wrote you last, I have spent a good deal of my time visiting the Scotch and English Conferences; and wound up my visit in North Wales, with Capt. Dan Jones.

I was much pleased everywhere I went, to find the same increasing faith and energy manifested among the Saints.

In attending their Conferences and preaching meetings, you are no longer carried back among the sepulchres of dead prophets, and doubtful parchments; but the timely discourses of prophets and apostles that we know, have become the texts relied on, and at last the people are learning in this land to anticipate the practical lessons they will have to learn, when they get home. You will be pleased to learn that an extensive emigration of the Saints is contemplated the ensuing season. The darling houshold gods of many who have lingered here for years, are being immolated. The old arm-chair, and the cottage clock that had defied the decay of generations, are at last ticketed for sale, and the cry is now among the people, "I will go, though it be in rags," nor, in my opinion, is such a feeling in the least premature. Never did Government totter nearer the edge of a more dismal precipice, than does the British Government now. Everything tells but too plainly that the whole is an unguarded magazine; the train laid; the match kindled; and the hand only wanting to apply it. Nay, even the hand is not wanting; but only trembles because of the calamity of the explosion. You will have heard that a portion of the long-desired prize Sebastopol, is in possession of the allies. You would have been astonished at the silence with which the dispatches were received here. To be sure the boys fired their pop-guns, a few bon-fires were kindled, some flags were hoisted, but no breeze was felt to open them, and they hung, as it were, ashamed that so little had cost so much blood. The general answer to the dispatches was "What have we gained?" "We are conquered by our own victories." I could scarcely have believed that the feeling existed towards the war that I find among many in this country. In Ireland that furnishes so many victims for the sacrifice, thousands are found to bite their lips at the success of their own colors, and exult when they are buried with the corses of their countrymen. Anything, they cry, Russian despotism, Republican anarchy, anything but a prison on their own land with their uninformed kindred for jailors. Yet such must be their fate, bitterer and more binding till they win back their crown, and lay it at the feet of the Lord's anointed, and claim a ruler from God's house. In the midst of all their own troubles in these countries, they find time to exult over the anticipated famine in Utah. Poor creatures! they will only learn by sore experience, that the tale of Joseph will be told again with practical illustrations. But such dismal forebodings do not affect the Saints. The grasshopper has no terror for them. They thank God for all: and would not break the leg of one poor cricket.

I learned by the June mail from Utah, with much regret, of the death of my warm good friend Judge Shaver. It was scarcely unlooked for by me, as I was aware, his constitution for years had been supported almost entirely by stimulants. But I was not the less grieved. I had while with him, a good chance to learn his character; and ever found him a fearless friend to right and justice. Though his decisions were often against my own clients, I never could, but respect them. Among the last words he spoke to me when parting with him were, "I am removed, but I will remain in Utah; I can be at peace, nowhere else." The opposite of nearly every Judge and Secretary sent to Utah, he was an honest man, a profound lawyer, an upright Judge, and an eloquent orator.

Added to our little force in Ireland, is now our old and tried friend, Elder John Scott. He comes full of the true fire of Zion, and I anticipate much to my poor country from his labors.

The brethren here and in England are well. Brother Franklin is becoming more and more endeared to us all, and he with all "the boys" are ever praying that you may have strength for the hard struggle you have on hand. Elder J. M'Allister, Scott, and Craig who are now with me join in love.

May you live to see your last enemy on his knees at your feet.

Your fellow servant in Christ,
JAMES FURGUSON.

California Correspondence.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4, 1855.

DEAR UNCLE: As steamer day, the 5th, is approaching, I seize the opportunity of communicating with you, and by writing frequently try and atone for my former derelictions. Since my last letter we have been progressing quietly with our business, doing our best to get the Book of Mormon through the press; of course with the limited means at control it must be rather slow; we have 144 pages printed. A few days after I wrote to you to forward me a few lbs. of k's to make up the deficiency in our fount for printing Hawaiian, I succeeded in finding a man who had a k matrix, and from him I procured enough to enable us to put up a form of sixteen pages—the form suitable for our paper—and which facilitates our operations considerably. We will in a short time, I hope, be able to devote our time to the publication of the somewhat long deferred paper, and have an opportunity to combat the many lies and errors which are so industriously circulated by the press through this country in relation to us, our motives, and movements. Everything, however absurd or improbable it may be, that is calculated to operate against us and place us in a ridiculous position, is seized with avidity and sent forth embellished to suit the morbid appetite of the mass, by the myriad tongued press, whose business it is to cater for the public; while everything that is calculated to place "Mormonism" in a favorable light is carefully suppressed. These same men, who descant so eloquently on what they are pleased to term, the corruptions of the Mormons, are the servile tools of factions whose favor they are willing to purchase at the sacrifice of truth, virtue and honesty.

The State election comes off to-morrow, and as it is likely to be very strongly contested, each party is exerting itself to the utmost to hoist its nominees into power; the papers of each teem with eulogies on their own candidates and abuse of their opponents; and each adducing sufficient proof to convince a looker on that they are all unworthy of any place of trust, honor, or profit. Many augur from the spirit already manifested that the day will not pass off without blood being shed. Democracy and Know-Nothingism are the two great war cries at present; an effort has been made lately to resuscitate the Whig party but with what success the proceedings of to-morrow will unfold.

Several Elders have lately arrived here from their fields of labor. Soon after my arrival here from the Valley Br. Luddington arrived from Siam, via Hong Kong; he was in the enjoyment of excellent health and spirits. He has started for the Valley by way of San Bernardino. Bros. N. V. Jones and Wm. Fotheringham, arrived from the East Indies by the same route, a short time afterwards, and they have been successful in getting ready for home and starting last week, on the northern route. These brethren were also in the enjoyment of the spirit, and they felt thankful that the Lord had spared their lives to behold again the land of Joseph. On the 26th inst. Br. Hugh Findlay, with Br. Tate and child, and Br. Davis and family, arrived from Bombay, by the same route. Br. Paul Smith also, who has been on a mission to Australia, arrived here with his wife on the 24th ult. from Honolulu, S. I., where he left the company, numbering about fifty, with Brs. Burr Frost, and Owens. They had engaged the vessel in Australia to take them to San Pedro, but she leaked so badly that they were obliged to put into Honolulu, to repair, and Br. S. thinks it doubtful about her ever leaving there, she is in such a wretched condition.

It is extremely cheering to witness the spirit of peace and happiness which attends the brethren on returning from their long and toilsome missions, all uniting in one grand testimony that, whether on the land or on the sea, in typhoons or in calms, in sickness or in health, the Lord has always been with them and they have been delivered; they had travelled thousands of miles among all races, casts, and classes, without purse or scrip, yet they have lacked for nothing. India, through their instrumentality, has once more, after a long night of darkness, had the glorious gospel of the Son of God laid at its feet, and whatever the results may be, the brethren have the proud satisfaction of knowing that all in their power was done to lay the principles in plainness before them. Australia still yields a few to swell the number of those who are to be gathered out of every nation, and although the thirst for gold, as in this country, blinds the eyes and hardens the hearts of the majority against the principles of truth, still there are those who will admit its claims and become obedient thereto.

I have not heard anything very definite from the Sandwich Islands lately; the work is still progressing. Their conference was to be held on the 24th of July; I am looking daily for the arrival of news and also several Elders who contemplate returning this season.

We hold meetings weekly in this place, and occasionally we have a few strangers to hear us. The spirit of inquiry among the people seems to be dormant, and they have no inclination to investigate. I hope for better things when the paper starts, for I do desire to see the honest in heart gathered out. Br. O. Hyde has been in Sacramento lately but has now returned over the mountains to Carson Valley; he gave some lectures, with Br. Amasa, in Sacramento. Br. Amasa is in Sacramento; he was well at the last accounts. Br. Rich is expected up from San Bernardino shortly to attend a conference to be held in Sacramento on the 22d inst., when the elders who came up with Br. Amasa will give in their reports; they having come up to preach, and raise the necessary means to liquidate the liabilities on the Rancho of San Bernardino.

With respect I remain your affectionate nephew,
GEO. Q. CANNON.

Later from California.

THE George Law brings California news up to the 5th September.

A complimentary card to Capt. Gray, of the George Law, from the passengers on her last outward trip, is published in the Aspinwall Courier of Sept. 18.

During the voyage of the George Law collections have been made for the Norfolk sufferers, and the amount of six hundred and ninety-one dollars raised.

Cholera raged with great violence on board the steamship Uncle Sam, of the Nicaragua line, on her passage from San Juan to Acapulco. She arrived at the last named place on the 6th of September, and during her voyage had thirty-three deaths on board.

Much loss of life and property had taken place along the west coast of south America from late gales.

The Valparaiso and Santiago Railroad was to have been opened on the 17th of August, and on the next day the anniversary of national independence was to be celebrated.

From The Alta California, Sept. 5.

The city was disgraced by a sanguinary affray which occurred at the Sixth Ward polls on the afternoon of the 21st August, when the Democratic primary election was held. Mr. T. W. Bagely and Mr. James Cushing were severely wounded, but are now recovering. The evidence thus far has shown that these persons commenced an assault with pistols on James Casey, and the latter inflicted the wounds in self-defense. He was discharged: the matter will be more fully investigated as soon as the wounded men are able to appear in court. Some twenty shots were fired and many persons implicated.

The 21st August, the primary election day of the Democrats, was remarkable throughout for street fights and bloody encounters. John Farley was stabbed on Pacific-street by a man named John Ricketts. The wounded man is recovering.

Jose Lafuente, an intelligent Chilean, connected with the editorial department of the Sud. Americano of this city, stabbed his wife, Maria Martines, on the 21st August. His victim died two days after. A domestic dispute is the alleged cause of the deed. Lafuente is now in the county jail, pronounced by some insane.

The frigate Amphitrite arrived from the Amoor River on the 21st August, having left that river on the 15th July; touching at Sitka on her way to this port. Again, a small town on a river of that name was visited, but found to be deserted. A proclamation was issued declaring that private property would be respected. A small iron steamer belonging to the Russians was blown up.

A slight shock of earthquake was felt in San Francisco on the morning of the 28th August, at about 3 o'clock.

The new Custom-House and Post-Office is nearly completed, and meets with general admiration.

The Whig party has revived, nominated a ticket, and issued a party newspaper entitled The Whig. They exhibit much enthusiasm, and have made strong nominations.

No disturbance is apprehended during the approaching election day.

Another Kansas Outrage.

ON Monday of last week, a fight came off at Doniphan, K. T., about six miles above Atchison, in which bowie knives were used freely. The difficulty arose out of a political discussion, the combatants being a pro-slavery man and a free-soiler. Both parties were badly cut, and we are happy to state that the free-soiler is in a fair way to "peg out," while the pro-slavery man is out, and ready for another "tilt." Kansas is a hard road for free-soilers to travel.—[Squatter Sovereign.

There never yet in our recollection was a paper on our table avowedly edited by a blood-thirsty ruffian, until we had the Squatter Sovereign, the organ of Ex-Senator Atchinson. The above is a specimen. "Peg out" is a slang phrase for "die," and this ruffian editor hopes that a citizen wounded in an election brawl, may die, because he differs in opinion! This spirit will in time provoke its own corrective. If pro-slavery men rely on such support, we may tremble for the cause. The sooner such men are thrust down to their proper place, the better for the cause.—[St. Louis Intelligencer.

THE WHIG PARTY NO MORE!—The Albany State Register (Know Nothing) thus notices the recent demise of the Whig party: The Whig Party was murdered in cold blood by those whom it has so long nurtured, at Syracuse yesterday. The scheme set on foot by the Astor House conspirators, as has ever been the wont of conspirators, was perpetrated in the name of Republicanism and Liberty! The result is Fusion; and if a picture could be drawn of this embodiment, it would be a farce all radiant with promise—with form huge and without symetry, and with hands greedily stretched forth to grasp the Public Treasury. Fusion is a league for spoils. It was conceived by spoilsmen. The object was and is office and plunder. The ticket nominated are old political stagers with scarcely an exception; men who all their lives have been office holders or office seekers.

LAZY rich girls make rich men poor, and industrious poor girls make poor men rich.

Later and Interesting from Mexico.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 26, 1855.

By the arrival of the steamer Orizaba, we have dates from the City of Mexico to the 19th instant, from which we learn that Correra had abdicted his office of Provisional President.

The Council had decided to adopt the plan of Ayutla, thus putting an end to all fear of collision between the army and civillians. Still however, it cannot be said that there is any actual Government, and there are well grounded fears that anarchy will yet prevail in the city and country.

Anniversary of the Jerry Rescue.

SYRACUSE, Oct. 1, 1855.

Addresses were made by Mr. Salisbury, of Albany; Beriah Green, Gerrit Smith, Rev. S. J. May, Abram Pryne and Rev. J. W. Joguen. The Rev. E. P. Rogers, of Newark, N. J., read a poem on the Fugitive Slave law. A collection was taken to defray the expenses, and 4 o'clock the meeting adjourned. The Prohibitory Liquor Law Again Pronounced Unconstitutional.

BUFFALO, Oct. 1, 1855.

Interesting from Washington.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2, 1855.

There has been of late quite a number of distinguuished individuals here to ascertain what disposition is to be made of the three million dollars to be paid by our government to Mexican and American capitalists, on ratification of the Gadsden treaty, which has been negotiated by Santa Anna. The Secretary of State, it is understood, has decided that the assignments of Santa Anna connot be reconciled, and that the three million must be paid to the existing government of Mexico. This decision has caused great excitement and fluttering in certain quarters.

Mr. Marcy, through the columns of to-day's Star, appeared in the Albany Atlas. He intimates that Van Dyke has taken advantage of the absence of editor Cassidy and inserted the abolition article—therefore, it is not of the slightest political importance—which, when translated, means that the Union must not reply to it.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.
Steel Engravings by Charles Fenn and Edwin Roffee:

Poetry.

Little at First, but Mighty at Last.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

A TRAVELLER through a dusty road
Strewed acorns on the lea,
And one took root, and sprouted up,
And grew into a tree.
Love sought its shade at evening time,
To breathe its early vows,
And Age was pleased, in heats of noon,
To bask beneath its boughs;
The dormouse love its dangling twigs,
The birds sweet music bore,
It stood a glory in its place,
A blessing evermore.

A little spring had lost its way
Among the grass and fern;
A passing stranger scooped a well,
Where weary men might turn,
He walled it in, and hung with care
A ladle at the brink—
He thought not of the deed he did,
But judged that all might drink.
He passed again—and lo! the well,
By summers never dried,
Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues,
And save a life beside!

A dreamer dropped a random thought;
'Twas old, and yet 'twas new—
A simple fancy of the brain,
But strong in being true;
It shone upon a genial mind,
And lo! its light became
A lamp of life, a beacon ray,
A monitory flame,
The thought was small—its issue great;
A watch fire on the hill,
It shed its radiance far adown,
And cheers the valley still!

A nameless man amid a crowd
That thronged the daily mart
Let fall the word of hope and love,
Unstudied from the heart;
A whisper on the tumult thrown—
A transitory breath—
It raised a brother from the dust,
It saved a soul from death
O germ! O fount! O word of Love!
O thought at random cast!
Ye were but little at the first,
But mighty at the last!

The Field of Blood.

THE history of the world seems to justify the teaching of Machiavel, that—

"War ought to be the only study of a prince. He ought to consider peace only as a breathing time, which gives him leisure to contrive, and furnishes ability to execute, military plans."

War is the matter which fills all history, and consequently the only, or almost the only view in which we can see the external of political society is in a hostile shape; and the only actions to which we have always seen, and still see, all of them intent are such as tend to the destruction of one another. To judge of the individuals of our race by their conduct when united into nations and kingdoms would lead to the conclusion that every sort of virtue was unnatural and foreign to the mind of man. Let us, by the aid of ancient history, trace the stream of blood from the remotest period in the past that we are able to reach.

Sesostris led out of Egypt an army of above 700,000 men: he overran the Mediterranean coast as far as Colchis; of this immense number but a very small part returned to enjoy the plunder accumulated by the loss of their companions and the devastation of a considerable part of the world. Half at least of those who composed the expedition perished. Add to these the still greater number lost by the vanquished—for the greatest slaughter is always in the flight—and we see this conqueror, the oldest on the records of history, opening the scene by a destruction of at least one million of his species, unprovoked but by his ambition, without any motives but pride, cruelty, and madness; and without any benefit to himself, but solely to make so many people, in so distant countries, feel experimentally how severe a scourge Providence intends for the human race, when he gives one man the power over many, and arms his naturally impotent and feeble rage with the hands of millions, who know no common principle of action but a blind obedience to the passions of their ruler.

Under the martial Queen Semiramis we see an army of about three millions led out to war against the people of India. We see the natives of that country arming a yet greater number. We see the Queen retreating with scarce a third of the troops employed in the expedition which must therefore have cost two millions of souls on her part; and if the Hindoos lost but half as many, in this war alone did three millions of souls expire with all the horrors which attend all wars, and in a quarrel in which none of the sufferers could have the least rational concern.

We pass over the Babylonian, Assyrian, Median and Persian monarchies, which, in their formation and destruction, caused seas of human blood to be poured out.

Xerxes—treading in the footsteps of his predecessors, who had consumed in military madness the flower of numerous kingdoms, and wasted the force of an extensive empire—drained half Persia of its inhabitants that he might head an expedition of nearly two millions, who were wasted by the thousand accidents that ever befall a vast army, or were slaughtered by the indomitable foe they sought to vanquish. The Persian empire, in its wars against the Greeks and Scythians, to say nothing of its other wars, offered up in sacrifice not fewer than four millions of its subjects. The conflicts waged abroad were at length brought home to the Persians by Alexander, who, in his career of carnage, swept from the face of the earth not less than twelve hundred thousand of its inhabitants. But the tide of blood ceased not to flow when he fell an early victim to his personal vices. His death did but make a thousand breaches for ruin to enter and complete the scene of misery and destruction. His conquered empire was speedily rent and divided. The several parts turned to tear each other to pieces, and bury the whole in one wide-spread crimson flood. The kings of Egypt and Syria, of Pergamus and Macedon, were at war with each other without intermission for more than two centuries, until at last a strong power arising in the West rushed in upon them and silenced their tumults, by involving all the contending parties in the same common destruction. The contentions amongst the successors of Alexander depopulated the earth of at least two millions.

The disputes of the Greek commonwealths among themselves, and subsequently the struggle between the Macedonians and the Greeks, form one of the bloodiest scenes in history. It is astonishing how so small a space could furnish such hosts for the sacrifice. What a history! of armies cut off; of cities sacked; of inhabitants immolated, or enslaved—the decision of the fate of universal humanity might have depended upon it. Yet all this was through the pitiful ambition of possessing five or six thousand more acres, or two or three more villages. This internecine warfare ended, as all such disputes have ever done, and ever will do, in reducing all the parties to weakness, and the subjection of all to the yoke of a stranger who knows how to take advantage of their mutual exhaustion. From the earliest accounts of the Greeks to their absorption into the Roman empire, their intestine divisions and their foreign wars must have occasioned the massacre of three millions of their number.

Sicily was, in ancient times, a field of blood—first through the struggles for the mode of its government between the republican and the tyrannical parties, and afterwards for the possession of it by the Greeks, the Carthagenians and the Romans. At one time an army of 300,000 was utterly destroyed. Every page of its history is dyed in blood, and blotted and confounded by tumults, rebellions, massacres, assassinations, proscriptions and a series of horrors beyond the history, perhaps, of any other nation in the world. Two millions may, at the lowest computation, be put down as the amount of the loss in human beings suffered by this island during this period of its existence.

Let the wars, and the consequences of them, which wasted Grecia-Magna before the Roman power prevailed in that part of Italy be rated at one million, and let us hasten to open that great scene which establishes the Roman empire, and forms the grand catastophe of the ancient drama. The Roman Empire commenced by an effusion of blood scarcely creditable. The Sabines, the Samnites, the Æqui, the Volci, the Etrurians, were broken by a series of slaughters which, had no interruption for some centuries; slaughters which, upon all sides, consumed more than two millions of the wretched people. The Gauls, rushing into Italy during this period, added the total annihilation of their own armies to that of the ancient inhabitants. It would be impossible to conceive a more horrid and bloody picture, but that the Penic wars that succeeded soon after, presented one of still more appalling features. These wars reached a climax of devastation and ruin that seemed to shake the earth. The extent to which they made havoc of the human species astonishes beyond the power of expression. They devoured three millions of the rational creatures of God. Yet this number describes a part only of the wholesale butchery caused by the Roman ambition. How bloody was the war with Mithridates! That prince cut off at one stroke 150,000 Romans. In that war, Sylla destroyed 300,000 men at Cheronea. He defeated the army of Mithridates under Dorilaus, and slew 300,000. He himself lost 300,000 before Cyzicum. In the course of the war he sustained innumerable other losses, and in his intervals of success revenged them with equal severity. At last he was totally overthrown, but he fell not alone. In the greatness of his ruin he crushed to pieces his ally the King of Armenia. All who had connections with him shared the same fate. At this period, the sword, glutted with foreign slaughter, turned its edge upon the bowels of the Roman Republic itself, which presented a scene of cruelties and treasons enough to obliterate the memory of all past external devastations.

We stay not to observe upon the Servile, the Social, the Gallic and Spanish wars; nor upon those with Jugurtha, nor Antiochus, nor many others, equally important, and carried on with equal fury. The butcheries of Julius Cæsar alone have been reckoned at 1,200,000.

Let us change the scene and contemplate for a few moments the march of the destroyer on another field. Let us go to the land of Judea—small in extent, but ennobled by the sublime events of which it has been the theatre.

The first settling of the Jews in this land was attended by an almost entire extirpation of all the former inhabitants. Their own wars, and those with their petty neighbors consumed vast multitudes almost every year for several centuries; and the irruptions of the Kings of Babylon and Assyria made immense ravages. But let us come to that part of the history of the Jews which coincides with Roman history, and to the time when they experienced that final and tremendous stroke which utterly scattered them as a nation—a stroke which is allowed to have cut off little less than two millions of that doomed people. Now, if in this considerable part of the globe such a carnage could be effected in two or three short reigns, and if this carnage, fearful as it is, makes but a minute part of what the histories of that people inform us they suffered, what are we to judge of countries more extended, and which have waged wars far more considerable?

Instances of this sort are almost uniformly the subject matter of history. But there have been periods when no less than universal destruction to the race of mankind seems to have been threatened. It was so when the Goths, the Vandals and the Huns poured into Gaul, Spain, Italy, Greece, and Africa, carrying destruction before them as they advanced, and leaving horrid deserts everywhere behind them.

Then came the overwhelming and resistless torrent of Arab invasion and conquest—a torrent that, pouring from the South, ravaged all to the North-East and West, to the remotest parts of Persia on the one hand, and to the banks of the Loire, or further, on the other—destroying all the proud and curious monuments of human art, that not even the memory might seem to survive of the former inhabitants.

Behold, again, the effects of bigotry and avarice in the conquest of Spanish America—a conquest purchased by the murder of ten millions of the species.

Laying together all those actually slain in battles, or who have perished in a no less miserable manner by the other destructive consequences of war, from the beginning of the world to this day, in the four parts of it, it is no exaggerated calculation to place them at 30,000,000,000. Into this calculation must be taken the wars innumerable which have found no record on the pages of history—the massacre of the species over those vast spaces of the globe which History, until modern times, never embraced within its comprehension; those deluges of silent and inglorious blood which have glutted the thirsty sands of far-streching Africa, or fed the savage forests of America—from the Polar snows to the most Southern Cape—those general massacres which have devoured whole cities and nations—those blasting pestilences and wasting famines which follow in the train of war. This calculation of the slaughter of mankind, which any one who sits down to consider the subject will admit to be a most moderate one, amounts to forty times the number of souls this day on the earth!

From the earliest dawnings of political society to the present day, the invention of men has been sharpening and improving the mystery of murder—from the first rude essays of clubs and stones to the present perfection of gunnery, cannonading, bombarding, mining, shelling, rocket firing, and steam-vessels of war. All this is called "improvement," "civilization," and "refinement." How far Nature would have carried us we may judge by the example of those animals who still follow her laws, and even of those to whom Nature has given dispositions more fierce, and arms more terrible, than were ever intended for the use of man. It is an incontestible truth, that there is more havoc made in one year of men by men, than has been made by all the lions, tigers, panthers, ounces, leopards, hyenas, rhinoceroses, elephants, bears and wolves, upon their several species since the beginning of the world. The politics of the statesmen, legislators, and civilizers of mankind have done more mischief in cold blood than all the rage of the fiercest animals in their greatest terrors or furies has ever done or could do.

The interest, the ambition, the malice, or the revenge—nay, even the whim and caprice of one ruling man is enough to arm all the rest, without any private views of their own, to the worst and blackest purposes; and what is at once more lamentable, and more ridiculous, the deluded instruments of such a man will fight under his banners with a fury greater than if they were animated by revenge for their own proper wrongs.

O shame to men! Devil with devil damn'd
Firm concord holds. Men only disagree
Of creatures rational, though under hope
Of heavenly grace; and God proclaiming peace,
Yet live in hatred, enmity and strife
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars,
Wasting the earth each other to destroy,
As if (which might induce us to accord)
Man had not hellish foes enough besides
That day and night for his destruction wait.

[From the (London) Empire.

The Declaration of Independence.

MANY popular impressions concerning "the Declaration of Independence" are derived from Fourth of July orations and pictures, both of which are as apt to mislead as does the picture of "the First Prayer in Congress." Nine out of ten suppose that somewhere about noon on the Fourth of July, 1776, Congress passed the vote affirming the Colonies independent, and that the old bell-ringer in the steeple of the State House, receiving the intelligence of this event, was seized with a sudden enthusiasm to swing the old bell to ring out the news to the people in such a loud joyous manner as put the quiet citizens of Philadelphia in a wonderful excitement. In fact, I once heard a very intelligent member of a Presbyterian General Assembly, met in that city, work this incident into a telling paragraph in his speech on slavery! Then there was the signing of the Declarstion, we have a picture of that too, which teaches us how the representatives of the Colonies vied with other in putting their names to the immortal instrument, so that before night the famous parchment the original paper, which now is seen in the Patent Office was engrossed, and signed as we now have it!

A few facts gleaned from various sources will be interesting as rectifying these impressions about this famous transaction—this crisis in human affairs. On the 10th of June, 1776, Mr. Harrison, of Virginia, reported a resolution, part of which is said to have been a literal transcript of the instructions given by the Convention of Virginia to their representatives in Congress, and which was moved on the 7th of June in Congress by Richard Henry Lee. Mr. Harrison's resolution embodied Mr. Lee's in these words: "Resolved, That the consideration of the first resolution be postponed to Monday, the first day of July next; and in the meanwhile that no time be lost, in case the Congress agree thereto, that a Committee be appointed to prepare a declaration to the effect of the said first resolution, which is in these words: 'That these United States are, and of right ought to be free, and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown; and that all political connexion between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.'"

This resolution was adopted.

On the 11th of June, Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and R. R. Livingston, were appointed a Committee to draft the Declaration. Richard Henry Lee as the original mover of the resolution for declaring the Colonies independent would have been named as chairman of the committee, but unfortunately for himself, he received intelligence of sickness in his family, which made it necessary for him to be absent before that Committee was appointed. Jefferson had the reputation of being a brilliant writer, and succeeded to the place of honor. The elder Adams, in his autobiography, says that he saw and read the original draft of the declaration, and he speaks in terms of rapturous admiration of it; "I was delighted with its high tone, and the flights of oratory with which it abounded, especially that concerning negro slavery," &c. He further says of the Committee, intimating that Jefferson's paper had not been read by all the members, "We were all in haste. Congress was impatient, and the instrument was reported, as I believe, in Jefferson's handwriting."

On the 28th of June, the Committee reported the original declaration, which was read for the first time in Congress. On the 1st of July, this declaration was again read and discussed in Committee of the Whole. It was carried in the Committee by vote of the States, Pennsylvania and South Carolina voting against it. John Adams says, that in the discussion of July 1st, Dickinson, of Pennsylvania, opposed the declaration, "in a speech of great length. * * * * He conducted the debate not only with great ingenuity and eloquence, but with equal politeness and candor, and was answered in the same spirit."

Dickinson, a brother of Gen. Philemon Dickinson, of New Jersey, an officer whom Washington frequently mentions with honor, was a strong debater, and a sincere patriot, acknowledging the grievances complained of, but lacking that stern and heroic spirit that animated such men as Adams, Witherspoon, and Lee. Hence he shrank from an open rupture with Great Britain, as certain to end not only in greater evils to the country, but to individuals prominent in the rebellion. In this feeling two other representatives from Pennsylvania shared. But of this more in another place.

Dickinson's speech produced a profound impression, and this is not to be wondered at, when we consider the nature of the contest which it was the object of that speech to show. John Adams, one of the most fluent and powerful speakers, answered Dickinson, and it cannot be too much regretted that not a scrip of that speech remains, except perhaps the tradition out of which Mr. Webster made one of his most splendid paragraphs. It was on the 1st of July that the newly elected delegates from New Jersey, of whom Dr. Witherspoon was one, took their seats and voted a solid vote for the declaration.

The next day, July 2d, the paper was again read and subjected to a severe process, which sifted out some expressions, some phrases, and some paragraphs. Some were thought too disrespectful toward the English people, some too hostile to the king personally, and some were too condemnatory (indirectly) of the institution of slavery. During this eliminating process, Jefferson was greatly excited, at times showing his chagrin; which state of mind Franklin greatly relieved by telling to Mr. Jefferson the criticisms made on the sign which a hatter in Philadelphia had over his store. About one-quarter, according to the elder Adams, or one-third, according to Jefferson, of the original paper, was stricken out, leaving the document as we now have it. The adoption of this paper was warmly debated through the second, third and fourth days of July, and toward the close of the latter day the motion to adopt prevailed. It was then signed by nearly every member present, except Mr. Dickinson, who refused to sign. Willing and Humphreys, two delegates from Pennsylvania, purposely absented themselves to avoid signing. These three gentlemen were decapitated forthwith by the Convention of Pennsylvania, then in session, and men elected in their place who would sign. Of the other Pennsylvanian delegates, Franklin, John Morton, and James Wilson, signed the declaration at once, and Robert Morris, the remaining delegate, was absent on public business and had permission to sign afterwards.

It is a fact worth knowing, that the delegates from New York were willing to sign, but waited for instructions from home, which they received, and put their names to the declaration on the 15th of July.

Matthew Thornton did not take his seat in Congress until the 4th of November, and at that time he signed the declaration.

The original paper, as interlined and amended, was given to the Secretary of Congress to be engrossed on parchment, and this engrossed copy, the one in the Patent Office, was again signed by most of the members on the second of August, and at different intervals afterwards by the rest. Can any one tell whether the real original is yet in existence?

These facts are gleaned principally from the Journals of Congress, Tucker's Life of Jefferson, and the Works of John Adams.

The passage on negro slavery which was erased from Jefferson's original draft, is not published in books accessible to the most. That passage is as follows: "He—the king—has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating its most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people who never offended him, captivating and carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of Infidel nations, is the warfare of the Christian King of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where men should be bought and sold, he has prostituted his negative for suppressing every legislative attempt to prohibit or to restrain this execrable commerce. And that this assemblage of horrors might want no fact of distinguished dye, he is now exciting those very people to rise in arms among us, and to purchase that liberty of which he has deprived them, by murdering the people on whom he also obtruded them: thus paying off former crimes committed against the liberties of one people with crimes which he urges them to commit against the lives of another."

Tucker, in his Life of Jefferson, supplies this remarkable passage, together with all the changes made in the original draft of the declaration.

Gordon, in his History of the Revolution, says the reason why the first of July did not become Independence Day, was, that "neither the colonies nor members being unanimous, it was postponed till the next day."

But when did the venerable bell, still preserved in Independence Hall, peal out the notes of liberty? Gordon has the following answer: "July 8th. This day, at 12 o'clock, the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed at the State House in Philadelphia, amidst the greatest acclamations. The same evening the equestrian statute of the king was laid prostrate on the ground. The lead of which it is made is to be run into bullets."—[Cor. N. Y. Observer.

A LIFE OF TOIL.—A Wilmington (Del.) paper says that an Irish weaver named John Brown, who emigrated to the United States in the year 1794, and who set up his loom in Wilmington, in the same place it now occupies, has ever since been engaged in weaving carpets there, and still continues it, as happy as the day is long, after a lapse of sixty-one years.

A FIGHT IN HIGH LIFE.—We learn that a fight occurred in Richmond the other day between Hon. M. Oliver and Gov. King. They were separated just as the Governor was in a fair way to get well whipped. The Governor struck the first lick. The quarrel occurred in the court room, and originated in the examination of witnesses. The Judge fined them $50 each.

STEAM BOAT CASUALTIES.—From Lloyd's forthcoming Steamboat Directory, says the Cincinnati Gazette, we learn that since the application of steam on the western waters, there have been 39,672 lives lost, 381 boats and cargoes lost, and seventy boats seriously injured by steamboat disasters, amounting in the aggregate to the enormous sum of some $67,000,000.

CHEAP PAINT FOR BARNS.—An excellent and cheap paint for rough wood work is made of six pounds of melted pitch, one pint of linseed oil, and one pound of yellow ochre.

Aluminium,

The New Metal From Clay or Brick.

A large bar of this new metal, presented by the Emperor of the French, is now on exhibition at the Polytechnic Institution, London. This rare gift evokes the admiration of all who see it, not only on account of the external silvery appearance, but also from its extreme lightness, malleability and durability, difficult fusibility or absolute indifference to that tarnisher or destroyer of metals, oxygen, a stern resistance to the action of water, and a chemical contempt for that bane of large cities, sulphuretted hydrogen. Aluminium, it is reasonable to expect, will form all our culinary vessels; no more copper or brass pans to poison our acid sauces, pickles, condiments and confectionary.—[London paper, Sept. 8th.

If this description of aluminium, which, although discovered many years ago, by the late Sir Humphrey Davy, has been very little known, if correct, it possesses many properties which are not found in silver. The latter is not only very expensive, but it is easily tarnished by the yolk of an egg, sulphuretted hydrogen, &c., and its weight is about four times greater than that of aluminium. The color of the new metal, we understand, more nearly approaches the bluish white of platinium than the purer white of silver. Its specific gravity is only about 2 1-2 times that of water; that of silver being nearly 11, and of platina 22 times.—[Boston Traveller.

Currant Wine.

IN making currant wine a writer in the Working Farmer insists on the use of double refined loaf sugar. Single-refined it says contains a portion of gum which makes the wine foul. His directions for making the wine are:

"Before expressing the juice from the currant pass them between a pair of rollers to crush them after which they may be placed in a strong bag, and they will part with the juice readily by light pressure, such as a common screw, heavy weights &c. To each quart of juice add three pounds of double-refined sugar—single refined sugar is not sufficiently pure—then add as much water as will make one gallon. Or in other words, suppose the cask intended to be used to hold 30 gallons. In this put 30 quarts of currant juice, 90 lbs. of double refined sugar, and fill the cask to the bung with water; roll it over until the sugar is all dissolved. This will be told by its ceasing to rattle in the barrel. Next day roll it again and place it in a cellar where temperature is sure to be even. Leave the bung loose for the free admission of air. In the course of one or two or three days fermentation will commence. By placing the ear to the bung hole, a slight noise will be heard, such as may be observed when carbonic acid is escaping from champagne or soda water. Fermentation will continue for a few weeks, converting the sugar into alcohol. As soon as this ceases, drive the bung in tightly, and leave the cask for six months—at the end of which time the wine may be drawn off perfectly clear, without any excess of sweetness.

NIAGARA TUNNEL.—It is proposed to dig a tunnel for a railroad track under the Niagara river, at Black Rock, near Buffalo. Its length will be two thousand four hundred feet; descent of grade on each side, seventy-five feet per mile; cost one hundred thousand pounds. The river is twenty feet deep at the proposed locality, and its bed of solid limestone.

IRON SHIP BUILDING.—There are said to be thirty-six iron ship building establishments in the neighborhood of Glasgow, on the river Clyde. The capital employed is $10,000,000, and 50,000 skillful workmen are engaged. At the present time there are thirty-two new iron ships on the stocks.

THE corner stone of an immense granite monument, commemorative of the landing of the Pilgrims, is to be laid at Plymouth on the 1st of August, 1856. Thirteen years is the maximum of time allowed for its construction, and it is expected to be one of the most magnificent monumental structures in the world.

THE English papers mention that among the recent presentations to Queen Victoria was the Envoy of the negro Emperor, Faustin I.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 13, 1855.

England, France, and Russia.

WHAT an extraordinary spectacle has just now been presented to the gaze of a wonder-loving world—the queen of Britain's empire bowing before the tomb of her once dreaded enemy! It seems as though the very spirit of "le petit corporal" had been permitted again to visit earth, and re-assert his right to rule, and demand submission of the very powers that crushed him—first of all demonstrating his power upon the last who held that proud spirit in bondage till it fled from earth. Like the gaily decked lamb, led by the priest to the sacrificial altar, the lion of England tamely bows his proud head at the mausoleum of the mighty dead—how strange! If one could but believe in the transmigration of the soul, astonishment would end and wonder cease at the unwonted vigor that seemed so suddenly aroused in the breast of the despised "offshoot of self-made royalty," "the dwarf in giant's clothes," the "unsuspected blunderer of Boulogne," the Emperor of France, and view him as no less than the prisoner of Helena upon his throne again. But so it is, proud lips are made to wreath in smiles, and the aristocratic nostrils of the long lines of Bourbons, Hapsburgs, Guelphs and Plantagenets are unaccountably forced to inhale the plebian atmosphere of self-made greatness; and Europe now stands waiting the nod of one it once thought not even worthy of derision, each power awaiting its task from the master mind that rules their destiny. How inscrutable to man are the ways of God! how strangely are moved upon the chess-board of life its kings, its dukes, its bishops, and even popes, as though amid the impatience of men, a superior hand, for his own wise purposes, checkmated every move in the great complicated game of life.

The last grand move! Nicholas disappears behind the scene, and Sebastopol is taken; what then—is it the Waterloo of Russia? Who dare say it, and who dare attempt to measure the mission placed upon the head of Louis Napoleon? Are not these reverses only to add strength to the maiden sword-flashing of the young Czar—who can tell?

There is before Europe a vast dark abyss, into which to look will make the strongest head grow dizzy and the firmest heart quail. Will the house of Rurik and Romanoff give up the darling hope to reign supreme in Europe—a cherished hope of a thousand years, while backed by millions of their war-bred sons? Will Russia, tutored under the ferocious hand of Zinghis Khan, intrigueing to outwit the dreadful Tamerlane, and conquering the conqueror of Europe, now pale at the fall of a single fortress, and flee the track because she is checked for a single moment in her speed? The collision may shake her to the centre, but will the shock rend her or the adverse materials used to block her way? She has before conquered her foes, by burning her own cities—it did not check her growth; she can afford to let others do it now, and yet grow. Chroniclers state that she is united, while her foes are divided; her power is cementing from the pressure without, while there is every chance of the discordant materials that oppose her soon decomposing of themselves, leaving the way yet open for her to dictate terms upon the Bosphorus and even at Gibraltar. The end is not yet, and we sometimes look with interest at the picture drawn by Daniel, where he says, "At the time of the end the king of the south shall push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind;" perchance this may yet be done, who can tell!

Will our own favored country remain unmoved amid the wild surges of conflicting nations, or will she too be drawn into the huge maelstrom of war! The north, hurling her abstract missiles of "higher law" at the south, and the hot-blooded southron throwing out his feelers to foreign alliance, by the less abstract and more material cotton bales, to balance accounts with the north. Can these sage philanthropists tell us how long it will be before these harmless feints will be transposed to strong, sturdy, serious blows!

If ever poor mortals needed a prophet of God in this world, they need one now, to pierce the dark clouds that so densely cover the rocks and shoals of the great future.

"And Samuel said unto Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams; therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do."

The Massacre of Indians Squaws and Children at Blue Water Creek.

NEVER before nor since the dreadful outrages of the Boggs administration upon the Mormons in Missouri, has this nation been disgraced by such a revolting butchery as that perpetrated upon the Sioux nation near Ash Hollow, by Gen. Harney and his command. It makes the very blood run cold, to read that wretched, heartless account of treachery, brutality, and bloodshed enacted upon the poor, ignorant, and much-abused Indians. The whole account is one of unprecedented treachery and barbarity, enough to make an American foreswear his country, if she did not immediately repudiate this act by her utter condemnation. The Indians have for years been openly cheated and imposed upon by unprincipled officials and traders, who take every advantage of their ignorance, through the complacency with which our government look on; and in the instance of the slaughter of soldiers at Laramie, we passed there but a few days after that sad event and learned directly from eye witnesses it was caused by the most unwarrantable course of young Lieut. Grattan, then temporarily in command, who went with only thirty men into the midst of a camp of twelve or fifteen hundred warriors, and hastily demanded certain Indians who had taken a lame cow left upon the road; the men who killed her were not in camp, and while the chief, who was said to be an excellent man, was in the act of trying to dissuade him from the rash act, he was shot down, and immediately the soldiers were swept down by the excited Indians, and not a man in that vicinity, that knew the circumstances, blamed them in the least. It was only the year before that three of the same tribe had been shot down upon a somewhat similar occasion, and without provocation, for, it was said by the soldiers, that the Indians offered to make restitution out of their annuities; these facts, with many others of a similar character, were generally known, and yet the government suffered itself to be influenced by a few interested speculators in annuities, to become responsible for deeds of treachery and bloodshed, fit only to embellish the reign of a Nero or Caligula.

We hope that this wretched affair will at least turn the attention of the benevolent and humane to exert their influence with Congress to investigate more closely the circumstances of the poor Indians, and deal them some degree of justice by sending reasonable and just men to deal with them, who will not misrepresent the Indians for the sake of a better opportunity to rob them, as has too generally been the case for years past.

Archbishop Hughes, the Prophet Brigham Young, and James Gordon Bennett—what a Contrast?

MR. BENNETT, of the New York Herald, is occasionally inclined to be a little facetious, and withal sometimes given to flattery. In the columns of the 8th he quite humorously takes up the speech of Bishop Hughes before the Benevolent Irish Society of Newfoundland, and compares his sentiments with those of the Prophet Brigham. Never having heard anything disreputable of the Bishop, we have ever felt a peculiar respect for that gentleman; not that we have the honor of a personal acquaintance with his Grace, but our high estimation of his intelligence, influence and worth arises very naturally from the tumultuous barking among all the curs, whenever he makes his appearance before the public. We therefore cannot be deemed egotistical, if we feel in some degree flattered by the evident compliment intended for the Governor of our Territory, by so prominent and valuable a member of society as the sapient editor of the New York Herald, in comparing the Governor's sentiments with those of the illustrious Bishop Hughes. And the deductions drawn are with that profound acumen so characteristic of this "very Daniel" of the press, that we are forced thus to express our estimation of the purity of motive that inspires him in all his patriotic efforts for the advancement of virtue, morality and general good of the public. We should not be at all surprised if the Herald should yet come out with the name of Bishop Hughes or Brigham Young at the head of its columns for Chief Magistrate of the United States. Upon the acceptation of either to that office of high trust, they undoubtedly would remember the virtues and commendable zeal of Mr. B., and place him in a sphere where those virtues might shine forth in their true brilliancy upon benighted christendom.

From Utah.

WE give to-day a brief synopsis of the news from Utah, up to Aug. 29th.

We are happy to be able again to inform our friends of the cheering reports of crops this season in the Vallies, notwithstanding the gloomy prospects in the early part of the season; through the interposition of providence, and the energy and exertion of the Saints in replanting, they will secure enough to last them till another crop. Nothing but that union, known only among the people of God, could have saved them. We venture to say, had it have been any other community upon the earth, but the Mormons, under such discouraging circumstances, and liability of starvation, they would ere this, have been scattered to the four winds. So large a number of persons, comprised in the Territory of Utah, to have scattered, illy provided with provisions, and nearly a thousand miles to traverse before reaching other settlements, many thousands would have inevitably perished, and left their bones to bleach upon the parched prairie and burning sands of the desert.

But in Utah are the servants of God, and there, there is faith enough to unite them, and the God of Israel who has before sustained them, amid the most trying scenes, over plains and mountains, still preserves them to pour upon them yet, his richest blessings.

The people appear to have turned their attention to the building of the Temple, with renewed energy, its massive foundation was already finished, and the workmen were rapidly progressing with the stone wall of the basement story, fine dwellings are going up throughout Salt Lake and other cities, canals constructing rock-quarrying, machinery and manufactories of every kind progressing, denoting a vigorous thriving, and flourishing community, and however else the world wags, the Saints rejoice in Union, Prosperity and good Rulers. More than can now be said of all the world besides.

Philadelphia Conference

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. Held Oct. 7, 1855, at the Washington Hall, corner of 8th and Spring Garden-streets, Philadelphia.

ELDER JETER CLINTON, Presiding.

Present at the Conference from Utah, John Taylor, one of the Twelve; Elds. Jeter Clinton, Alexander Robbins, Jr., Samuel A. Woolley and Angus M. Cannon, of the Seventies.

MEETING called to order at half-past ten o'clock, A. M.

Singing by the choir. Prayer by Elder Robbins. Singing by the choir—after which the meeting was addressed at some length by Elder JOHN TAYLOR, upon the present position of the religious world, contrasting it with the religion of Jesus Christ as taught in the Bible and with the Kingdom of God as set up in these last days. The discourse was highly instructive, and was listened to with much interest by an attentive audience.

After singing by the Choir, and Benediction by Elder Angus M. Cannon,

The Conference adjoured to meet again at 2 P.M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At 2 o'clock P.M., Conference met, pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by President CLINTON.

Singing by the Choir. Prayer by Elder S. A. Woolley. Singing by the Choir.

President Clinton then arose, and made a few remarks; after which the business of the Conference was laid before the meeting in the following order:

Moved, that we sustain and uphold by our faith and prayers, Brigham Young as the President, Seer and Revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in all the world; and that we also uphold by our faith and prayers, Heber C. Kimball and Jedediah M. Grant as his counsellors.

Moved, that we uphold and sustain the twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as their President.

Moved, that we uphold and sustain John Taylor, one of the twelve Apostles, as President of the mission to the Eastern States.

Moved, that we uphold and sustain, in connection with President Taylor, Elders Jeter Clinton, Nathaniel H. Felt, Alexander Robbins, Jr., Samuel A. Woolley, George J. Taylor, and Angus M. Cannon, as his assistants. Carried.

Moved, by Elder Harrison, that we uphold and sustain Elder Jeter Clinton as President of the Philadelphia Conference.

President Clinton moved that we uphold and sustain Elder Samuel Harrison as President of the Philadelphia Branch.

Also moved, that the officers comprising the Philadelphia Branch be sustained in their several offices.

After which, the various branches were represented in the following order:

The Philadelphia Branch—by Elder Samuel Harrison. He remarked that he felt thankful that the Philadelphia Branch was in so good standing; the officers were doing their duty, and a good spirit prevailed throughout the branch. The life and spirit of Mormonism was beginning to be more prevalent, especially lately; union, peace and harmony prevailed, and he felt proud of his association with such a people. Mormonism fused and united different elements: national predilections gave way, and new and old members, foreign and American, were all one. He felt happy in the Lord, and rejoiced with the Saints. He said before he sat down he would propose that the members uphold and sustain each other by their faith and prayers.

All the above resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Toms River Branch—represented by Elder Reamer. He said that he was glad to have the opportunity of representing the Saints at Toms River; he had found them faithful in their duties, and were willing to do all in their power to build up the Kingdom of God; and he believed them to be a first-rate people, a people that the Lord would bless, &c. Since the last Conference there had been new additions by baptism, as in my report, besides a number of European Saints, who were added by letter; they were all united, enjoyed the spirit of the Lord, and were happy in the enjoyment of the principles of eternal truth. They felt willing to comply with all the requirements of the gospel, and were preparing, as fast as circumstances would admit, for a removal westward.

Mineraville, New Mines, and Pottsville Branches—were represented by Elder James Sewell. He said that they, upon the whole, were in good standing and doing their duty; that they were mostly persons who had emigrated from England and Wales; that they were organized, held meetings regularly, and enjoyed the good spirit of the Lord; and that they were united, and using all their energies to prepare for emigration to Utah.

Union Branch, Franklin Co.—represented by Elder Angus M. Cannon, who said that the Saints were in good standing, doing their duty, and willing to obey all counsel that may be given them from time to time; that during the short time he had been with them he had been enabled to awaken them to fresh life and vigor; and that the old members, with the exception of one, had all renewed their covenants; and that he had baptised twenty-two new members. The spirit of God was with them, and they rejoiced in the blessings of the new and everlasting covenant. Some few were going to Iowa this fall, preparatory to an early start to the valleys next spring.

Trenton Branch—represented by Elder Dove, who said that things in Trenton were not as good as he could wish, but that he was willing to do his duty as far as he was able, and to magnify his office.

Hornerstown Branch—represented by Elder Angus M. Cannon, in consequence of Elder Curtis, the President of the said Branch being unable to attend. He could not give a full representation, but so far as could be ascertained the Saints were in good standing and doing their duty, and several new members had been baptized.

Delaware District, comprising Delaware, Centreville, and Stanton Branches—was represented by Elder Samuel A. Woolley, who said, as the President of the Stanton Branch was not there, he would give the report from memory as correctly as possible. The Saints were upon the whole doing well and willing to respond to any call that may be made.

New York Branch—represented by Elder Alexander Robbins, Jr. He said the New York Branch had been organized a few months since, and Brother Wm. H. Miles appointed its President. It had arisen from nothing at the commencement of the year, to number now some eighty-one, who met weekly, and a good feeling prevailed. They were, many of them, emigrants from England.

The following Statistics were then presented:

Names of Branches	Apostles, &c.	High Priests.	Seventy's	Elders.	Priests.	Teachers.	Deacons	Baptized	Rec'd.	Remo'd	Emigrated	Scattered.	Dead.	Cut Off.	Members.	Total?

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was then administered to about 300 Saints, whose hearts swelled with gratitude to God for the blessings of the gospel, the light of truth, the wholesome instructions received, and the privileges that they enjoyed. During its administration President Taylor spoke of the present happy position of the Saints as contrasted with their state a few months ago. He had required their assistance in regard to making provisions for and assisting the European brethren on their arrival, their influence and means to spread 'The Mormon,' and to preach the gospel. Some of these things seemed hard at the time, but they had taken hold with a good will, not only in Philadelphia, but throughout the Conference; and now we witness the result. We had used our influence, and administered a little in temporal things, and received them as strangers and brethren; and this had stirred up our energies and roused the latent principles of good that seemed to be slumbering in our bosoms. And whilst we had the gratification of doing them good, we had, in our own turn, received blessings from them; fresh from their large conferences, where they had ample teachings, they brought new fire with them, and we were mutually benefitted. He congratulated us upon our order, our singing, our magnificent hall, and the harmony, good feeling, union, zeal and love that generally prevailed. Mormonism might have taken a nap for a while in the east, but it had awakened up and was now alive and kicking. The feelings among all the branches were good. The brethren with him had labored diligently and had done honor to themselves, and so had Elder Clinton and his co-laborers here. The position of the Conference was proof of this. That Elder Harrison, too, deserved credit for keeping the Saints together in Philadelphia, in the dark and cloudy day; they, although feeble, found a nucleus to gather to, and he now saw the reward of his labors. He had not pressed the tithing lately because of the poverty of most of the Saints and of the heavy calls that the emigration and other things had made upon them; but although he did not wish to oppress the poor, there were those whose circumstances actually demanded their attention to this duty, which was an obligation binding upon all, and which nothing but the most stringent necessity would warrant our neglecting. In relation to "THE MORMON," it was unpleasant for him to have to call upon his brethren for assistance for that publication, owing to his position in relation to it; but they had cordially, so far as circumstances permitted, responded to his call. He stated that there was a heavy expense associated with the establishment of a paper, not understood by all; that owing to the outrageous delinquency of the mails he had had no returns from Utah; that he had become personally responsible for over nine hundred dollars; that out of the last seven years he had been away five from home, without compensation, and that in calling upon others for assistance in this matter, he asked for no more than he would do himself, and was engaged in all the time; it was for the dissemination of light and truth—was a shield to the Saints, and approved of by the Presidency. He need not tell them about all their duties; they had their organizations, good teachers among them, and understood what they ought to do; he exhorted them to obedience, faithfulness, diligence, and perseverance.

The Conference adjourned until 7 1-2 o'clock P.M.

EVENING SESSION.

Conference met persuant to adjournment at 7 1-2 o'clock P. M. Opened with singing by the choir. Prayer by Elder Harrison. Hymn by the choir.

President Clinton arose and moved that Eld. George J. Taylor and Elder Angus M. Cannon labor in this Conference under his direction.

Elder Robbins was called upon to address the meeting which he did at some length, on the reorganization of the Kingdom of God in the last days; after which Elder S. A. Woolley followed and introduced the first principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and bore testimony of the same being revealed in these last days attended with all its ancient blessings which thousands of living witnesses can testify.

Elder John Taylor then arose and addressed the meeting upon the principles of truth and the philosophy of religion, as revealed from heaven, showing the difference between it and that taught by men; and also showing that the Gospel of Jesus Christ embraces all truth scientifically, religiously, morally and politically.

Conference adjourned until the 6th of April, 1856.

Singing by the choir.

Benediction by Eld. Jeter Clinton.

Arrival of the Arctic Expedition.

Return of Dr. Kane and his Company.

THE United States Arctic Expedition, composed of the bark Release and steam brig Arctic, under command of H. J. Hartstein, left New York the 4th of last June in search of Dr. Kane, arrived at this port last eve. (Oct. 11) bringing Dr. Kane and party, with the exception of three who had died from exposure.

The Kane Expedition left New York in the brig Advance on the 31st of May, 1853, under command of Dr. Kane, U. S. N., in search of Sir John Franklin. His party, after undergoing excessive perils and hardships, having been forced to abandon their vessel in the ice, traveled over thirteen hundred miles of ice and arrived at Lievely or Godhaven, and had taken passage in a Danish brig, when the Release made her appearance; their joy at meeting their countrymen can be better imagined than described. As our paper is just going to press we have not room for more details. We sincerely congratulate Dr. Kane and family, the members of the expedition and their familes, on their safe arrival from this hazardous and trying expedition, the particulars of which we shall give at another time.

Origin of the Impositions of the Sound Dues.

As these dues may possibly give rise to a serious dispute between the United States and Denmark, it will be interesting to know what they are. The "Sound" is a narrow strait lying between the Island of Zealand, belonging to the Danes, and the Swedish coast, and gives entrance to the Baltic sea. The fortress of Cronburg Castle commands the passage, and extracts a payment from all vessels entering the Baltic; the ships of Denmark herself have to pay, as well as foreign tonnage. The origin of this exaction is, that in ancient times, Denmark undertook to build and sustain certain light houses along the coast, for which the Hansetowns agreed to pay toll. England France, Holland and Sweden pay a duty of one per cent. on every cargo entering the Baltic. Other countries including the United States, pay one and a quarter per cent; even Danish ships are taxed to this rate. In the year 1826, a treaty recognizing this duty was concluded between the United States and Denmark. This treaty, however, according to one of its stipulations, may be dissolved by either of the parties, provided they give one year's notice of their intention. During the presidency of John Tyler, our Government determined to put a forcible end to the imposition. Mr. Upshur, then Secretary of State, fitted out a fleet of merchantmen and vessels of war, under Commodore Stewart, which he designed should force its way into the Baltic, and thus at once rid the U. S. of the Sound duties. Mr. Upshur's sudden death however, by the explosion of a cannon, just as the fleet was ready to start, delayed the expedition and it was finally abandoned. Other attempts were made to abolish this tax. While Denmark was at war with Schleswig-Holstein, Mr. Flenniken, the U. S. Minister, offered on the part of his government to pay Denmark $250,000 for 10 years' suspension of dues; his death prevented the proposal coming to a head. Finally, on the 12th of April last, the U. S. notified the Danish Government of their intention to cease paying the Sound duties, and the stipulation of the treaty will accordingly expire next spring. Should no amicable arrangement of the question be arrived at in the meanwhile, we may then expect to see our vessels passing the Sound under warlike convoy. A serious conflict will then most probably arise.—[Ex.

The Mormon Conference.

To the Editor of the Birmingham (England) Journal:

SIR,—Observing placards posted on the walls throughout Birmingham, announcing the "Half-yearly Conference" of this peculiar sect, to be held in the Odd Fellows' Hall, Temple street, on the 22d inst., curiosity prompted me to attend. The Conference opened by singing and prayer. There were present about a thousand persons, including a number of "Elders." It was whispered that the sons of the Prophets were among the number. Joseph Young, son of Brigham the Prophet; W. Kimball, son of H. C. Kimball, First Counsellor to Brigham; and G. Grant, brother to J. M. Grant, Second Counsellor to the Prophet; also F. D. Richards, the supreme authority of Mormondom in Europe. The state of Mormonism in Birmingham vicinity was represented by the presiding and travelling Elders as prosperous. Much opposition from "sectaries" had been experienced in open air preaching. At Great Bridge, the Rev. B. Willmore, of West Bromwich, had been delivering anti-Mormon lectures, and also publishing anti-Mormon pamphlets, "but without any hope of reclaiming any who had embraced the Mormon delusion." The finances of the society were read to the meeting, and appeared to give general satisfaction. For emigration, temple, and general church purposes, £712 16s. 9½d. had been raised. The secretary also read the statistical report for the half-year, which represents 4 Seventies; 154 Elders, 155 Priests, 73 Teachers, 55 Deacons, 79 cut off, 18 dead, 84 scattered, 170 removed, 179 received, 104 emigrated, 173 baptized; total of members, 1,769. Next followed a train of extraordinary motions, all carried unanimously, "That Brigham Young be upheld and sustained by our faith, prayers, and means, as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ in all the world; that H. C. Kimball and J. M. Grant be upheld in like manner, as his counsellors; that the twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as president of the quorum, be upheld the same; also, F. D. Richards, as president of the Church in the British Isles and adjacent countries;" with many more of a similar kind.

In the afternoon several American Elders addressed the crowded audience, and bore testimony to the virtuous character of Joseph and Brigham, and the purity of morals in Utah. In the evening President Franklin D. Richards was introduced to the assembly. He declined addressing the meeting in consequence of ill health, but called on his friend, Elder J. A. Little, to speak for him, who rose and addressed the assembly on orthodox Mormonism. The pith of the oration was for saint and sinner to comprehend that salvation was only obtainable through Jesus Christ, and Joseph Smith, as the ambassador of Jesus Christ. At the close, Mr. Richards rose to endorse the views of Mr. Little.

On Monday evening a social tea party came off, the Hall being decorated for the occasion in Mormon style. High above the "eye of Providence" appeared to take cognizance of all; underneath, a motto in letters of gold attracted my attention, "Brigham, God's Vicegerent," from which was suspended the square and compass, line and plummet. The compass in the centre, just above the head of the speaker, was imagined to say, "Don't reveal too much, nor speak too long; keep within compass." I was informed three crowns suspended over the stand represented the "First Presidency." "Truth is mighty, and will prevail," "Union and Perseverance," "Utah the Star of the West," "Mormonism, born in poverty, cradled in storms, reared in hurricanes, won't fall in earthquakes," and "Truth and Freedom: while the first preserves us, let us preserve the other," were the favorite mottoes.

Mr. F. D. Richards presided over the after exercises of the evening. Elders from the Great Salt Lake City spoke "as they were led." Some good and original ideas were advanced. A few songs from Elder Dunbar, president of the French mission, enlivened the scene, and applause would have simultaneously burst forth in clapping of hands and stamping of feet, but a look from the Chairman reminded the "saints" that the only legal expression of approbation must be a smile. "This is the order of Zion."

Tuesday evening a lecture was delivered by Elder C. H. Wheelock, on the "Peculiar Institution of Plurality of Wives." The lecturer alluded to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for examples of piety and polygamy. David, the man of God's own heart, was introduced to advantage, but was criticised severely, because of his unlawful intercourse with Bethsheba, and the consequent murder of Uriah. David had his master's (Saul's) wives given him, and God would have given him more if he had righteously desired them; but he lost all forever through his folly and sin. He (the lecturer,) would challenge any divine in England to prove plurality of wives not a divine institution. He was willing to contrast Salt Lake City with any city in Christendom, as far as industry and morality were concerned. Could we find prostitution in Mormon Salt Lake City on a par with the same vice in Christian Birmingham, or pious Oxford, or holy Rome? He earnestly recommended Christian nations to purge out the old leaven from their own hearts, before they attempted to evangelize the sensuous people of Utah.

On Wednesday evening, Elder James Ferguson, president of the Irish mission, delivered an oration, on the absolute necessity of a temple of God existing in all ages on earth, in order that the human family might be saved. All ordinances appertaining to eternal life should be performed in a temple built by commandment. The Bible said so. This generation would be condemned for their belief in the lids of the Bible, and their disbelief in its contents. The temples that had been built by the Saints in this dispensation had answered the ends of their erection. Another temple was in course of erection in Salt Lake Valley.

A vote of thanks was moved to President F. D. Richards, for proposing this lecture. A sea of hands indicated the feeling of the meeting; and thus triumphed Mormonism in the heart of Birmingham. This strange people is on the increase; boldness is seated on the brows of their leaders; determination is perceived in every word, in every gesture. If they are prevailed against, honesty of purpose in their opponents must be the ruling motive. Calumny, misrepresentation, physical force, will fail to reform the weakest Mormon; it only adds energy to the system. Ministers, arm yourselves with facts—with truth gird up your loins and meet the advocates of Mormonism as men; and with the sword of the spirit cut the "Gordian knot" of the world's wonder while there is an opportunity.

AN OBSERVER.

Can any one Purchase Land of the Indians in Kansas!

COMMISSIONER Maneypenny's opinion is as follows:

"That the Indian tribes residing within the limits of the United States could not sell their original possessory right to the land occupied by them to any individual, and that no valid cession could be made of their interest in them but to the government; and [that] the same doctrine is also held in relation to the tribal reservations which have been confirmed to various Indian tribes, from time to time, by treaty stipulation.

"The 12th section of what is familiarly called the 'Intercourse Act' provides, expressly, that no purchase, grant, license, or conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation, or tribe of Indians, shall be of any validity in law or equity unless the same be made by treaty in convention entered into pursuant to the constitution; and if any person, not employed under the authority of the United States, shall attempt to negotiate such treaty or convention, directly or indirectly, to treat with any such nation or tribe of Indians, for the title or purchase of any lands by them held or claimed, such person shall forfeit and pay one thousand dollars, &c.

"No contract of the character you suggest would or could be sanctioned by the government."

THE Catholic Herald of Philadelphia, lamenting the decrease of their priests, says, that they cannot hope at present to supply their ranks from this country, as "one of the last pursuits Catholic parents, rich or poor, are likely to desire for their children, is the ministry of Roman Catholicism." It also states, that while the main portion of the supply has been of Irish origin, that is now on the decline, "as every year brings less priests from that country, and less young men desirous of becoming priests, than the preceding year did."

WONDERS WILL NEVER CEASE.—A lady residing in Ludlow street, about eleven weeks ago, presented her husband with a fine, healthy boy. A few days ago she was suddenly taken ill, and her mother, fearing an attack of cholera, summoned a physician. A few hours afterwards there appeared a bouncing fat girl! Mother and babe are doing well.

FOR THE MORMON.

The Pomp of Empire and the Price of Victory.

BY EDWARD EWBANK.

To a mind imbued with aught of the spirit of reflection, a perusal of the details of the scenes of carnage incident to war, and the empty display of pomp and glorification consequent upon the achievement of a protracted and blood-bought victory, cannot fail to induce a train of thought most suggestive of the vanity of all sublunary triumphs. In view of this, we consider the exultations manifested by the courts and people of France and England, at the success of the siege upon Sebastopol, as the result of a most corrupt national sentiment. It is true that these displays are in perfect consonance with the whole spirit and course of war, yet we are bound to confess to a degree of semi-barbarism uncalled for in an age of such exalted civilization and widespread christianity. Such scenes as those enacted in every town and village of the nations involved in the events now transpiring might have been viewed with shameless indifference in times of feudal darkness, when the observance of every thing obscene and brutal was tolerated with impunity, but at the present period, and especially when it is believed that the allied powers of Europe are leagued in an unrighteous compact, admit of no palliation. A correspondent to a New York paper, describing the celebration in Paris, says:

This morning, at the Te Deum, which was celebrated at Notre Dame in honor of the victory, the Emperor and a brilliant cortege of general officers were present. At ten paces from the cathedral is the hospital of Notre Dame, and while the cannon was roaring from the Invalides and the brilliant procession was entering the place of worship, there was something suggestive and touching in the appearance of the hundred heads looking from the place of suffering, for if the triumph of the more fortunate minions was represented on the one hand the sufferings of nine thousand were sufficiently indicated on the other. This afternoon gratuitous representations have been given at all the theatres, which have consequently been crowded to suffocation.

Such being the spectacle witnessed in a city noted for its refinement, at the moment that the groans of the wounded and the dying were grating harshly and mournfully upon the ears of the assembled populace—and such the tribute of respect paid to the memory of the half million of royal slaves whose lives have been sacrificed to satiate the passion of a base ambition for extended rule: was it not an insult and gross outrage upon the feelings and judgment of a people to manifest such hilarious joy and hollow adulation of the prowess and valor that wrought a conquest over a less favored nation. Truly ought we to exclaim with the poet of Avon:

"Vain pomp and glory of the world I hate ye."

Before entering our protest against the commission of such inglorious acts as were perpetrated on an occasion so replete with bitter reflections, painful remembrances of the past, and clouded anticipations for the future, in a country and among a community so noted for the diffusion of their social and religious privileges, and the dissemination of His word who proclaimed "peace on earth and good will to men," let us look at a few of the effects produced by this great triumph of arms. To arrive at a just estimate we must go back to the time when the announcement of the present contest was made to the world. Scarce a year has passed since the war-note of preparation was sounded. Then, men were at ease in their possessions, and dreamed not that the destroyer of their peace already lurked at the threshold—that for the maintenance of their country's honor, their social bonds were to be severed, their homes despoiled of all that rendered them dear, and their substance unjustly taxed to satisfy the demands of an execrable and oppressive government. For a long succession of years England, with her teeming millions, had been at peace with the world, but the decree had gone forth, and from fancied lethargy she must arise to action—her armies be collected, her fleets manned, and to thousands of her votaries "the place that knew them once should know them no more." Parents must be dragged from their children, husbands from their wives, brothers and sisters separated, and friend commune no more with friend—for what? not to seek a home on some more congenial shore, not to rear monuments of their industry and devotion to an adopted land—no, not for these ends were they to be banished from their fathers' domains and the soil that gave them birth—but to find an inglorious grave, with no stone to mark the spot on which they had shed their blood. This was to be the end of their mission, this the reward of their loyalty. Alas, alas, with what truth and precision it has been fulfilled, let the remnant of the once proud army of Britain testify. Renowned from time immemorial for their bravery and heroism, where are they now? Echo answers where?—and the plains of Balaklava and of Inkermann, the sea of Azoff, the tower of the Malakoff—all reverberate the cry. And not these alone; where are the deserted homes, the broken hearts, the wails of the widow and the orphan! heard are they in heaven, but unheeded, we fear, by man. England's lauded queen, amid her regal splendor, as she bows her knee or treads in solitude her gilded halls, perchance may breathe a prayer for their welfare: her ministers may, in the liberality of their hearts, provide a scanty pittance: the purses of the rich and powerful of the land may contribute to the alleviation of their sufferings; but in vain will they all compensate for the desolated hearths, the blighted hopes, the wreck of mind. What to them were the booming of the cannon, the acclamations of the throng, the illuminated mansions, the tapestried banquet-hall, the eloquence of the forum, or the heaven-raised choruses of the "Te Deum," while in solemn mockery the vaunted tyrant of France bowed his unworthy head! What to them availed all these! They could not "minister to a mind diseased"—they could not still the throbbing breast, or arrest the scalding tear. And though the rulers of the land may pity, or in some measure prove their sympathy, yet in death alone will their sorrows be assuaged, and the memory of their wrongs obliterated.

Such being the result of some of the evils and miseries caused by this wholesale human slaughter—and they are no chimeras of an imaginative brain, but, alas, too plain, too poignant truths—is not the evidence sufficient to justify a condemnation of the acts we have denounced, and to invoke the vengeance of an insulted God upon a nation that dare to perpetrate such solemn mockeries. Was it not the duty of the government and the people to engage in something nobler than a fulsome display of royal pomp, of gaudy processions, and midnight orgies? If a country's approbation must be shown, how much more would it have redounded to its honor, had a more befitting tribute been paid to the memory of the brave and noble hearts that perished martyrs to its degradation? How much more becoming the solemn event, had a day of fasting and prayer been proclaimed, that in meek submission every knee might have bowed in homage to the God of battles; and that, if any real benefit to the prosperity of the kingdom was to be derived from such a conquest, the people might have been assured of it, that, constrained as by one unanimous voice, they could have rendered heartfelt thanks and ascriptions of praise to Him who ruleth the destiny of nations.

From a Utah Correspondent.

NEPHI CITY, Juab County, August 18, 1855.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR:

Dear Brother—I thought that I would drop you a few lines, thinking you would be glad to hear from me and the brethren at Nephi. Myself and family have enjoyed reasonable health since you were here, as also the Saints in general in this place. You have heard before this of the destruction of our crops; the grasshoppers early in the season destroyed nearly all of our wheat crop, we shall not realize more than half the seed sown. Our potatoes were seriously injured by a gray bug that ate off the leaves; our corn was badly injured by grasshoppers and black crickets; our crops are late, but first-rate, considering the trouble we have had to save them; and we think we shall raise enough to sustain us until another harvest. In this county, after our wheat was destroyed, we planted our fields with corn and potatoes.

The Indians are hungry, and we have not bread to give them as heretofore; and they are destroying a great deal of our crops before they are matured. We are getting up a large amount of hay; our cattle look well; we have a great range for them. Grass is good on the low land, and we have a large amount of it.

Our city is enclosed by a wall of clay, six feet at the bottom, twelve feet high, two and a half feet thick at the top, with two gates, one on the north and one on the south, and are locked every night.

We have a grist and saw mill inside of the walls.

Brother T. B. Foot is making a large amount of salt by evaporation in vats at our salt springs, which is of an extra quality. The salt mountain six miles east of us is of a superior quality, but is mixed with clay, so that it is hard to separate. Our pine and fir timber has been a good deal injured by fire this season. The weather is quite dry, and the nights have been unusually warm. Our streams have kept up well, considering the dryness of the season, and have pretty well supplied us for irrigating purposes.

The saints in Nephi enjoy themselves well; they realize that the hand of the Lord is over them for good; and when we read in your most excellent paper of the wars, bloodshed, contentions, mobs, riots, whirlwinds, &c., it makes us say of a surety, the Lord has taken peace from the earth, and Utah only remains to shed forth over the earth

"Gentle rays of truth sublime,
And peace for ever dear."

The Saints in Nephi join in sending their kind wishes to you and Bishop Felt, and the brethren with you, for your prosperity and safe return to your friends at home, and may God bless you and all men who practice and promulgate high and holy principles.

I remain, as ever, Your Friend and Brother in the Gospel of Christ, J. G. BIGLER.

Terrible Ravages of the Cholera in Florence.

THE London News of Sept. 19th says: A letter from Florence gives very terrible accounts of the ravages of the cholera. No less than 11,000 persons have, it is said, been carried off in the month of August. The population of the city, which is on an average 100,000, is now reduced to 60,000 by death and flight. The Grand Duke, it must be said to his credit, has set a noble example. Although his family has left, he remains himself, and, clad in the black veil of the Fraternity of Mercy, he sometimes assists in the burial of the dead. It is positively affirmed in this letter that ten persons were lately buried alive. The horrible fact was brought to light in this way:

An Italian warehouse-keeper in Palazzuolo (a fauborg of Florence) was buried for dead in the Trespiano cemetery, with many other supposed corpses, in a common grave. He awoke to a state of consciousness, and so thin was the covering of the sandy earth above him, that he made his way out to the surface. Still weak, he lived for three days on roots in the forest which surrounds the grave yard. At last he recovered strength sufficient to reach his house, where he startled his family, who were in mourning for him. He assured them that he distinctly felt the bodies of numerous people interred with him moving about. The grave was consequently opened, and it was found that many (ten in number, as I have said,) had stirred, and several of them had bitten their fingers in agony, and otherwise injured themselves. They were all dead when the investigation was made. The utmost excitement prevailed on the subject among the population.

One Month Later from Utah.

WE have received the deseret News to the 29th of August, from the files of which we take the following extracts:

THE CROPS.

From the North we hear good reports as to the yield of wheat, considering the damage done by the grasshoppers; who, in their depredations, seem to have been not altogether impartial—some fields have been entirely stripped, while others, immediately adjoining, have not been touched.

In Utah county, especially at Provo and vicinity, we understand that through an abundance of water for irrigation, and the blessing of the Lord, the crops generally will be heavy.

Corn looks well, and the prospects are good for a fair yield throughout the Territory, and in some sections it will be the principal grain. In many fields in the neighborhood of this city, we have noticed indications of serious injury to the crops from a destructive worm, and it will be well for farmers to examine their corn, and if possible, prevent further loss, for assuredly we shall need all that can be raised.

Potatoes are doing finely, and with plenty of corn and potatoes there will be no danger of starvation.

Oats from all we can learn, will not be an average yield. Many fields were cut for fodder while yet green, to save to the grasshoppers the task of devouring them.

Of the late re-sowing, that which has been well irrigated looks promising; but where water is not in abundance, which is the case in various portions of this county, the yield will be small; but in most instances good fodder will be raised, which is, the present season, no small item.

Melons are plenty in market, though very late, on account of the early and repeated failures, and subsequent re-sowings at a late period. While the weather continues warm we may enjoy them; but late melons, in cold weather, by those who have regard for health, should not be eaten.

ARRIVAL OF THE SURVEYOR-GENERAL.

The Surveyor-general for Utah, David H. Burr, arrived in Salt Lake on the 27th July. He left Fort Leavenworth on the 2d of June, and camped with Capts. Haight's and Miller's companies on the Blue, 45 miles beyond Fort Kearney, all well. Mr. Burr reports having seen but few Indians on the route, and had no trouble with them.

HEALTH OF SALT LAKE.

The health of the city is generally good, though among children there is considerable sickness and some mortality. Inflammation in the eyes has been, and still continues to be, quite prevalent.

THE DESERET ALPHABET.

Punches, matrices, and moulds are being prepared by Br. Sabins, for casting type of the new alphabet, and we are in hopes of seeing, ere long, a font of handsome letter cast, and primary books in the new style, printed for the use of our schools.

SALT.

Large quantities of this article are now being deposited in the tithing storehouse. This salt is obtained from large lakes, which during high water form a part of Great Salt Lake, but the waters having receded, the salt remains upon the surface of the ground to the depth of from three to six inches, in inexhaustible quantities, and this at the distance of two or three miles from the Lake. It is very clean and white, but somewhat coarse.

FIRES IN THE MOUNTAINS.

The fires in the mountains still continue, notwithstanding the rain, and in consequence our view is much diminished in extent by the masses of smoke which cover the mountains, and sometimes fill the valley.

THE TEMPLE.

The massive foundation of this building was finished July 23, and the workmen are progressing rapidly with the stone wall of the basement story.

The plastering and finishing of the Temple Block wall is progressing finely—the north line being completed, and nearly one half of the eastern.

A perspective drawing of this splendid structure may be seen in a frame at the Governor's Office. The work of cutting the stone for the walls is going forward vigorously.

SHADE TREES.

Shade Trees, we are glad to notice, are becoming very numerous throughout our city, and flourish exceedingly. The fall, which is at hand, is a good time to set out trees of all descriptions, and let not the shade trees on our sidewalks be forgotten.

NEW SCHOOL.

Professor Orson Pratt, sen., has generously proffered his services gratuitously to the citizens of this city and vicinity, to instruct a school in the higher branches of science, namely, Philosophy, Astronomy, Chemistry, Electricity, Algebra, Surveying, Geometry, Trigonometry, Mechanics, Differential and Integral calculus, together with the use of various instruments—the students to furnish room, books, &c.

ASTRONOMICAL DISCOVERY OF THE LAW OF PLANETARY MOTION.

Prof. Orson Pratt, by whom the Law of Planetary Rotation was discovered on the eleventh day of November, 1854, will lecture before the "Universal Scientific Society," at the Social Hall on Saturday evening, the 4th of August, at eight o'clock.

Subject—Law of Planetary Rotation. Admission free.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Br. Thomas Tanner, foreman in the Public Works blacksmith shop, accidently fell over an obstruction on the side walk, Wednesday evening July 31st, by which he was seriously injured internally. He lingered in much pain, and died on Friday morning the 2nd inst. Br. Tanner was full of integrity to the cause and to his brethren, and has simply left his body to rest awaiting a resurrection with the Saints.

ARRIVED.

Elder P. P. Pratt arrived in this city, by the northern route, on Saturday, 18th inst., after an absence of fifteen months; he has preached and published the fullness of the Gospel throughout California with considerable success.

He was accompanied by Elder James Hawkins, who has been absent from this city, on a mission to the Sandwich Islands, about 6 years. Elders Thomas Morris, R. Mowery, and Joseph Peck, who returned from his mission to the Islands on account of ill health, and others.

The party met Col. Steptoe's command on the western slope of the Sierra Nevada. Judge Hyde was examining the country to ascertain its facilities preparatory to the location of the shire town of Carson County. The Indians on the road were friendly. Feed and water plentiful, with the exception of the forty-five miles drive.

They learned that Dr. Garland Hurt, U. S. Indian Agent, was having a general council with the Mary's river Indians at Haw's Ranch.

Our readers may expect letters to appear in the columns of our paper from Elders Pratt, Hawkins, and others of the returned missionaries.

Elder P. P. Pratt addressed the saints in the Tabernacle on the 19th inst.

PROVO CITY.

Tuesday, 24, at daybreak, the citizens of Provo were awakened by the firing of cannon, which continued till sunrise, at which time the gun (a six pounder brought from Nauvoo) burst, killing William Nixon, who applied the match—throwing pieces of the gun 25 rods, tearing the gun carriage to pieces, and breaking the tire, throwing one piece of it 30 rods.

This circumstance threw a deep gloom over the whole city, carrying mourning not only into the house of his father, Stephen Nixon, but into Mr. Collins' military school, of which he was a student; the 24 young men of whom he was to form one during the procession of the day; but throughout the entire community, a deep pang of grief was visible upon every countenance. He was one of the most exemplary young men in Provo.

NEW KIND OF SUGAR.

The following is a letter from Elder L. N. Scovil to Br. Joseph Cain:

"PROVO CITY, July 31, 1855.

"Last week a sweet substance was discovered on the leaves of the trees. A few began to gather it by stripping off the leaves and soaking them in water; in this way Br. A. Daniels made 11 lbs of sugar in one day; it looks and tastes like maple sugar. Many scores of men, women, and children are now engaged in gathering it.

"Br. Aaron Daniels has just brought in three specimens which he sends to your care, and which you will please to deliver as follows, viz: one cake to Prest. B. Young, one to Br. Geo. A. Smith, and the other to Br. A. Carrington. Br. Daniels says he made 20 lbs yesterday, and he thinks it is getting better every day.

"When it was first discovered some said that it was honey dew, others said it proceeded from the Cotton wood leaves, but it is found on all kinds of leaves and on the rocks. My children have gathered and brought in a quantity of it, which they had taken from the leaf, as it is deposited, many of the leaves have scales of this sweet substance as thick as window glass, and some a great deal thicker.

"Br. Daniels tells me that his process is to cut the twigs from the trees and after soaking in water strain and boil, similar to making maple sugar. I have tasted some excellent metheglin made from the same substance."

The cakes of sugar above mentioned came safe to hand, the grain and color very closely resembling maple sugar when it is run into cups or moulds. The color and slightly bitter taste were doubtless due to the leaves, and probably arose from their being soaked rather too long.

The following named Elders, elected to go on Missions, are requested to report themselves to Elder Orson Pratt at the stand in the Bowery, in Great Salt Lake City, by half past 9 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, the 12th of August. Those who cannot then report themselves will do so as soon thereafter as they can consistently. GEO. A. SMITH, Church Recorder.

Battle with the Sioux.

Details of the Action—Number of Killed and Wounded—Establishment of a New Post—Memoranda of the Troops Engaged.

CAMP OF THE BLUE WATER, Sept. 5, 1855.

To the Editor of the Missouri Democrat:

AGREEABLY to my promise to keep you advised of whatever may be worthy of special note, in the progress of the Sioux expedition, I have now to inform you that Gen. Harney's command, which left Fort Leavenworth about a month since, arrived at Ash Hollow on the evening of the 2d inst., at which point the General ascertained that a band of forty or fifty Brule lodges were encamped on Blue Water Creek (a fine tributary of the North Platte,) about six miles from Ash Hollow.

The General at once determined to attack the camp early on the morning of the 3d, and in order to be more sure of his game, he dispatched the portion of his mounted force at 3 o'clock A. M. to gain a position in the rear of the Indians—a movement which had to be made in the dark, of course, and over an exceedingly rugged country. It was, however, eminently successful, being effected without rousing the suspicions even of the Brules.

General Harney left his camp between four and five o'clock A. M., with the infantry portion of his command, merely leaving a sufficient force to guard the train, which remained at Ash Hollow, during the operations. He moved directly upon the first Indian village, (for it afterwards turned out that there were two,) but before he could reach it the lodges were all struck, and their occupants in rapid retreat up the valley of the Blue Water. This, however, was just what was expected and desired, for if the cavalry gained the position assigned it, the Indians would be brought to a stand, and be compelled to fight. They finally halted and took up a position on the bluffs, which skirted the bank of the stream, within a few hundred yards of our cavalry, which had concealed themselves so adroitly, that the General himself very much doubted whether they had succeeded in gaining the place assigned them. It was for this reason that in a parley which here ensued between General Harney and the Brule Chief, "Little Thunder," the General's principal object was to amuse the Indian until he became satisfied of the presence of the cavalry. At last it became pretty obvious from the commotion among the Indians that something had been observed by them that made them uneasy, so the General at once cut short the parley and opened the ball to the music of the Minnie rifle; from the skirmishers of the 6th infantry. The bluffs were scaled by these in an incredible short time, and cleared off the Indians, who had scarcely left their strong hold, before they found themselves intercepted by the cavalry, and placed between two fires.

The affair had by this time become exceedingly lively. The Indians plunged down the bluffs with their light, sure-footed ponies, and darted off through the only avenue not closed against them, being pursued in most gallant style by the mounted troops, who followed four or five miles, sabering and shooting a large number of them on the way.

It is quite impossible owing to the extent and nature of the country covered by the two parties, to ascertain precisely the loss of the Indians, in killed and wounded; but from observations subsequently made on the ground of principal combat, the number killed cannot fall short of sixty or seventy. About fifty women and children were captured, and some sixty ponies and mules taken. As for lodges, buffalo meat, robes and camp furniture of various descriptions, the end has not been seen yet, although a number of wagons have been employed in bringing this booty into camp.

I have purposely avoided anticipating the official reports, by mentioning any names but that of the commander of the expedition. The troops engaged were companies "E" and "K" 2d Dragoons, Light company "E" 10th infantry. These were all mounted, and served as cavalry. Companies "A" "C" "H" "I" and "K" 6th infantry, composed the infantry portion of the attacking force. The entire loss sustained by the command, was four men killed, three dangerously wounded, one slightly, and one missing, (supposed to have been killed or captured.)

It is probable that a temporary post will be established by the General at Ash Hollow, after which he will advance into the Sioux country. Yours in haste. SPECTATOR.

The following is a list of the killed, wounded, and missing, in the action of the Bluewater, on the 3d of September, 1855:

RECENT English journals mention that a young preacher of the Methodist church is creating as much excitement as Irving and Whitfield did in their day. His name is Spurgen, and he can scarcely have reached his 22d or 23d year, I should think. His eloquence is extraordinary; it overwhelms you with its force and brilliancy; and his voice has the characteristics which Whitfield's is said to have possessed—a ringing tone, and capable of being heard by an assemblage of ten thousand persons.

One Week Later from Europe.

HALIFAX, Oct. 9, 1855.

THE royal mail steamship Canada, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool on the 29th ult., arrived here at 7:20 this evening. The C. sailed at 9 o'clock P. M. for Boston, where she will be due at about 8 o'clock on Thursday morning.

The Canada reports, Oct. 3, lat. 50, 38, N. long. 26, 53 W. passed steamship Africa bound East. Sept. 29, off Point Lynas, passed ships Lucy Thompson and Columbia, bound into Liverpool.

The steamship Hermann arrived out at Southampton on the 24th September.

Active operations have been resumed in the Crimea.

The Grand Duke Constantine arrived at Nicolaeff on the 20th, and it was said the Czar himself would shortly visit that place to superintend the winter Crimean campaign.

The Russian treasury has received large sums of money through Berlin.

A fearful tempest had occurred at Sebastopol, with very heavy rains.

On the 17th of September, the Turkish troops at Constantinople, intended for Asia, were sent to Eupatoria.

THE WAR.

Prince Gortschakoff telegraphs, under date the 23d, September, that the Allies had landed 20,000 men at Eupatoria, and had 30,000 on the Russian flank.

On the 22d, the Allies attacked the Russian infantry, and the latter retreated to the heights over Rusta.

Another despatch from Gortschakoff, dated the 26th, states that on the previous day 33,000 of the Allies had debouched from Eupatoria, and occupied the neighboring villages on the left flank.

Gortschakoff reported on the 17th that the Allies had attempted nothing up to that date on the north side, but were concentrating their forces between Balaklava and the Tchernays, and constantly reconnoitering the left wing of the Russians from the Baidir valley.

The loss of the Russians is estimated at eighteen thousand men.

Dispatches from Sebastopol, of the 16th, announce that the Russians were fortifying themselves in the north part, and were constructing new batteries; and that the French were advancing cavalry and a column of infantry towards Backshi-serai by the Baidir road. Sebastopol is to be razed and the basins filled up.

Letters from the camp mention that the allies were actively preparing for a campaign.

The correspondent of the Paris Patrie, under date of Sept. 26, says:

Ever since their retreat the Russians have continued to fire shells at us, and it would be a mistake to suppose that our armies in Sebastopol are beyond the range of the enemy's batteries on the northern shore and on the plateau. The balls from Fort Constantine reach beyond Strelitzka Bay, and they can very easily throw their projectiles into the town. As to the batteries of the other forts, some of the guns in them are so powerful that they can carry shot right over the town and do execution in the advanced siege works; but although the Russian fire does not cease, it is not very active. The artillery and engineers in Sebastopol are everywhere at work. Fort St Nicholas, which was left almost intact, has been fortified, and its cannon already replies to the enemy. Any attempt of the Russians to return to the place is wholly out of the question.

A letter from Berlin, dated the 23d, says:

Various circumstances at St. Petersburg seem to indicate that Prince Gortschakoff will soon evacuate the forts to the north of Sebastopol, those forts being only strategic points; but great preparations are making by the Russians for a winter campaign.

From three to four hundred deserters, most of them Poles, had arrived at the allied camp. They stated that the demoralization of the Russian army was most complete, and that such was the confusion, from the first moment of the attack, that the soldiers, exhausted with fatigue, remained for twenty-four hours without provisions.

The Anglo-Turkish contingent would go to Trebizond, and be placed under Omer Pasha. It was also announced that considerable bodies of French troops had been sent to Eupatoria.

English war material is constantly passing through Prussia for the army.

The Cossacks had taken twenty-five prisoners while foraging at Kertsch.

THE WAR IN ASIA.—Vienna despatches say that Kars was greatly straitened for provisions, and that the garrison was eating horse flesh.

Advices from Trebizood, dated 6th Sept., announce that the Russians had abandoned Erzeroum and were at Malagulemia.

THE BALTIC.—Dantzic, Friday Sept. 28, 1855. The steamer Bull Dog has arrived here with mails from the fleet. All the high pressure block ships had left for England. The weather here continues unsettled.

The Times Paris correspondent writes on the 27th, that the Baltic fleet will winter at Kiel.

GREECE.—The effect of the fall of Sebastopol. Letters from Athens state that the news of the fall of Sebastopol had produced the greatest consternation among the partisans of Russia, who were always boasting of the impossibility of the allies succeeding. The ministers waited on the French and English ambassadors to offer their warmest congratulations.

NAPLES.—A circular had been given to the police authorities throughout the kingdom of Naples, saying that although Mazza has retired from office, the policy of the government will be the same, and no change is to take place in the conduct of the police towards politically suspected persons. The Minister of War, Prince Ischetelle, who opposed the arbitrary proceedings of Mazza, had also been dismissed.

AUSTRIA.—The Austrian government has caused the publication of the following announcement in its acknowledged official organ, the Austrian Correspondence:

The new state of things may give occasion to a diplomatic contest or a sanguinary strife between Russia and the Western Powers, but it will in no way affect the mediatory attitude of Austria.

DENMARK.—The Folkshing, now in session at Copenhagen, has definitely approved, by a vote of 64 to 44, of all the proposed constitutional changes.

Later from Buenos Ayres—Port-au-Prince.

By the arrival of the barque Clara Windsor, Capt. Button, from Port-au-Prince we have received advices to September 14.

Provisions are in abundance and dull. Coffee and logwood very scarce and high.

The fever prevailed to an alarming extent, and all vessels that had remained in port any length of time lost from two to six men each. The brig Gen. Taylor lost all hands, except one boy.

After the captain died, the first mate took command, and he subsequently died, and when the C. W. left, the mate of the Spitfire had taken command of her, and was waiting for men.

The captain of brig Julia E. Arey, of Bangor, died, and the first officer had taken command.

The captain of the British barque Banner, of Bristol, his mate and four men died. The mate of the C. W. took charge of her to navigate her home.

A French bark lost two entire crews and two captains, and has sailed in charge of a third captain, and all the foreign vessels lost most all of their crews.

The C. W. lost Mary Brown, stewardess, of Glasgow (aged 18 years); John Brown, seaman, of Rotterdam; John Jackson, seaman, of Norway. Stopped at Inagua and Gonaives to procure men.

Progress of the Yellow Fever.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 4.—At Norfolk, on Monday, there were eleven, and on Tuesday seven deaths. On Wednesday only one was reported.

At Portsmouth on Monday there were nine deaths, and on Tuesday three. Wednesday none were reported.

Most of the deaths were among the inmates of the Almshouse and negroes.

A few absentees had returned, and were down with the fever.

Dr. Henry Seldon and R. Dalrymple are amongst the dead.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 6.—At Norfolk, on Thursday, there were five deaths and eight new cases of yellow fever, and on Friday one death and three new cases.

At Portsmouth, on Thursday, the number of deaths was eight, and the number of new cases five. On Friday there was but one death.

Nearly all the new cases and deaths are those of returned citizens.

The Rev. Mr. Jackson died on Thursday. Dr. Hungerford, of Baltimore, is very ill.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 3.—The yellow fever is raging here with great violence, and nearly all the inhabitants remaining in the place were ill.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 3.—The deaths from yellow fever at Vicksburg, Miss., were 36.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 3.—The yellow fever is on the increase in this city. The number of interments during Sunday and Monday amounted to 13.

Yellow fever continues to prevail in many of the interior towns of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. THE Memphis News learns by a private note from the Postmaster at Helena, Ark., that a rencontre occurred in that place on Saturday week between Mr. K Underwood, editor of the Shield, and Mr. J. M. Cleveland, editor of the Star, in which the former was mortally and the latter dangerously wounded. The difficulty grew out of a newspaper controversy. The combatants used pistols and knives.

THE Indiana Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian church has suspended from the ministry one of its clergymen for "unchristian conduct," for assisting slaves to escape to free territory by the underground railroad. The minister had boasted of the number of slaves he had aided to escape in this way.

Corrected to Oct. 12.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations, n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

JOHN TAYLOR.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

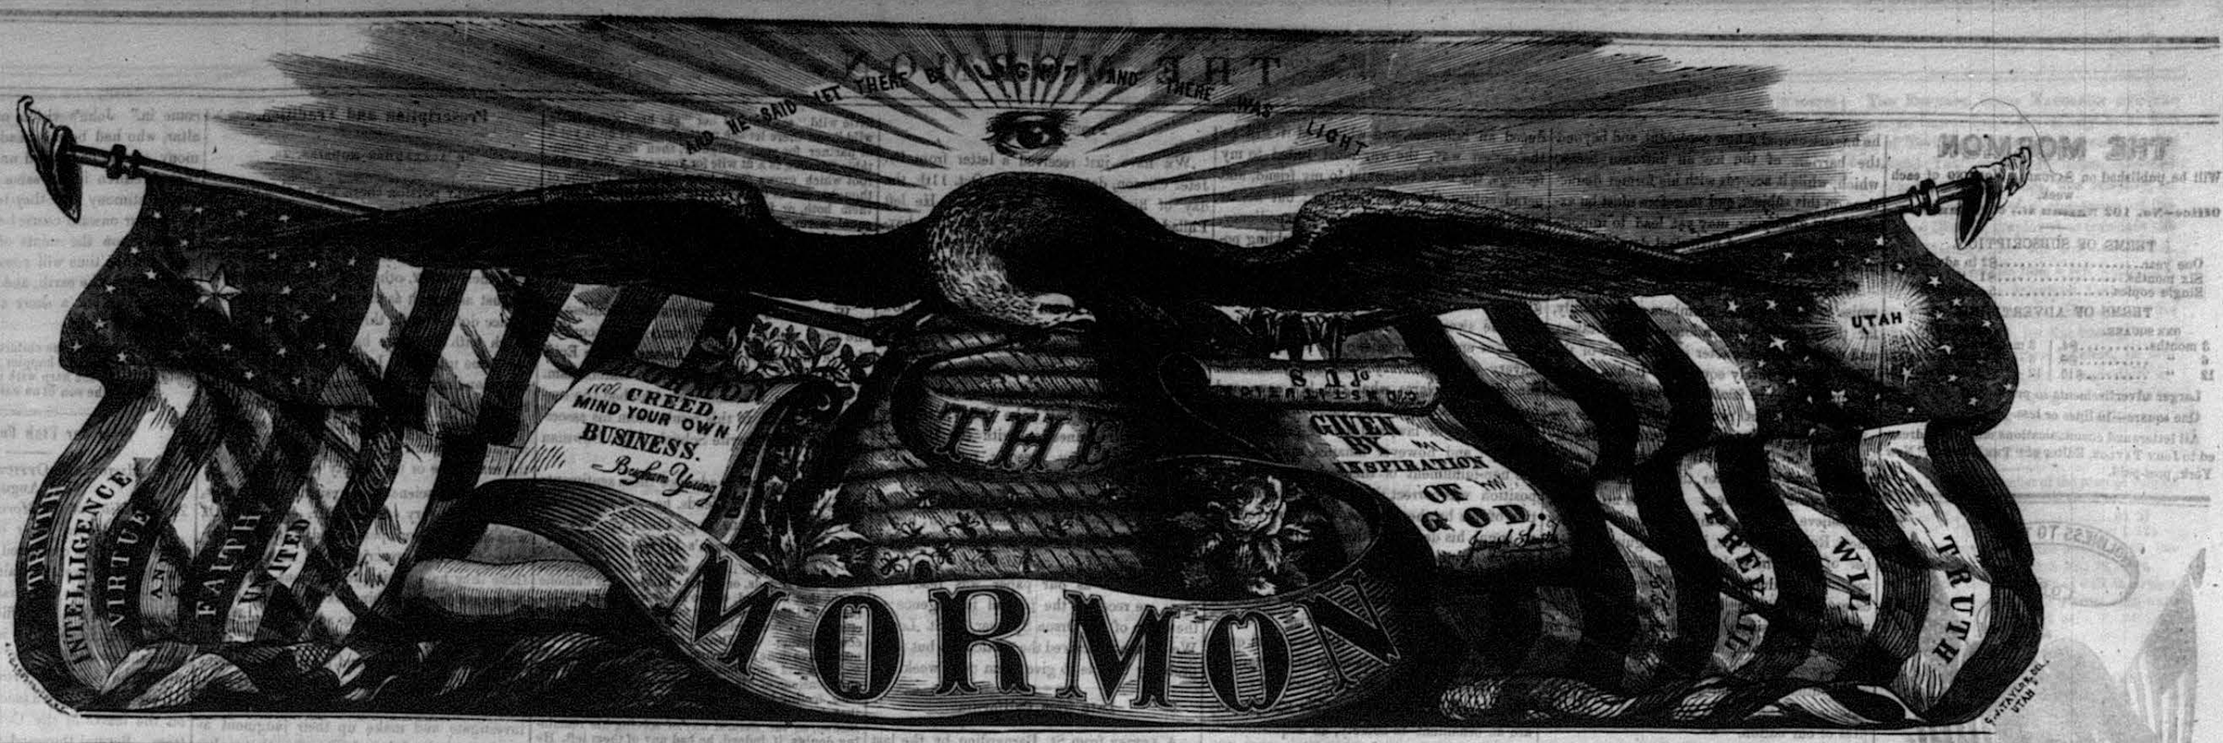
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

"Make us Gods to go before Us."

BY HENRY, KEMPTVILLE.

"Now make us gods to go before us,"
Cried Israel's discontented host,
"For this Moses, who ruled o'er us,
Much we fear that he is lost!"
Then Aaron said, "go fetch your rings,
Your golden bracelets bright and fair;
Those gaudy and pride-provoking things
You Israelitish women wear."

And lo! the glittering mass, when brought,
Was in a fiery furnance cast;
From whence by priestly cunning wrought,
A molton calf came forth at last!
While Israel bowed the lowly knee,
And lifted loud the voice of prayer,
With shouts implored their deity
To guide them with his guardian care!

Still, to this day, that folly seems,
Transcendant in our Christian clime!
Men worship, even in their dreams,
A golden calf, nor think it crime!
The prebend, priest, and prophet, all
The high and low of each degree:
Bound 'neath the trembling tempter's thrall,
Adore a golden deity!

The Arctic Expedition.

The Arrival of the Release and Arctic, and Safe Return of Dr. Kane.

The Hartstein Expediton, consisting of the screw steamer Arctic and sailing vessel Release, wich left this port four months ago in search of Dr. Kane and his party, returned to New York yesterday afternoon, Oct. 11th, and anchored off the Battery. It is gratifying to add that the expedition was successful in its mission: Dr. Kane and his surviving companions were brought safely home by Capt. Hartstein.

The Kane Expedition left New York, in the brig Advance, on the 31st of May, 1853, under the command of Dr. Kane, U. S. N., in search of Sir John Franklin. The names of the gallant officers and crew of the Advance were as follows:

Dr. Elisha K. Kane, Passed Assistant Surgeon of the United States Navy, in command, having been detailed by the Department for this special service.
J. Wall Wilson, sailing master, U. S. Navy.
Henry Brooks, first officer, do.
James McGarry, second officer, do.
Amos Bonsall, third officer, do.
Dr. J. J. Hayes, surgeon, do.
Christian Ohlsen, carpenter.
August Sontag, astronomer.
Henry Goodfellow, assistant astronomer.
Wm. Morton, steward.
Peter Shepard, cook.
George Stephenson, seaman.
Jefferson T. Parker, do.
George J. Whittel, do.
William E. Godfrey, do.
George Riley, do.
C. Blake, do.

The only public letter received from the expedition during its absence came to the office of the New York Herald, and was dated in July of 1853.

The Hartstein Expedition, in search of Dr. Kane, left New York on the 4th of June, 1855, under the command of Lieut. H. J. Hartstein, U. S. N. This expedition consisted of the propeller Arctic and bark Release. The names of the officers and crew who so nobly volunteered their services on board these vessels, were as follows:

ON THE RELEASE.

MONDAY, June 4, 1855.

Commander of the Expedition—Lieut. H. J. Hartstein, of South Carolina.
First Lieut. and Acting Master—Wm. S. Lovill, District of Columbia.
Second Lieut.—Joseph B. Fyffe, Ohio.
Boatswain—V. R. Hall, New York.
Captain's Clerk—Charles Lever, New York.
And thirteen seamen.

ON THE ARCTIC.

Lieut. Commanding—C. C. Simons, of Virginia.
First Lieut. and Acting Master—Watson Smith, New Jersey.
Chief Engineer—Harmon Newell, Pensylvannia.
Assistant Engineer—Wm. Johnston, New York.
Boatswain—Samuel Whiting, Michigan.
Carpenter—Wm. Richardson.
Purser's Steward—John Vandyke.
And sixteen seamen.

New York was thrown into a state of considerable excitement in the afternoon, by the safe return of Captain Hartstein, Dr. Kane, and their gallant comrades. The whole town, indeed, were delighted.

The Kane Expedition.

Highly Interesting Account of the Expedition, as Related by Dr. Kane to Mr. Henry Grinnell.

As soon as the vessels came to anchor off the Battery, Dr. Kane hurried ashore, and proceeded at once to the Astor House, where he was warmly welcomed by a host of friends and aquaintances. Every one crowded to see him, and for a few minutes he was so completely surrounded and beset by eager inquirers that it was with the greatest difficulty he could make his escape. When he at last succeeded in gaining the street, he, in company with a friend, got into a carriage and drove up to the residence of Mr. Henry Grinnell, in Bond street. His arrival had been expected by Mr. Grinnell, who received him with such a welcome as only comes from the very depths of the heart.

"I have no Advance with me," said Dr. Kane, alluding to the loss of his vessel, which he was obliged to abandon in the ice.

"Never mind that," replied Mr. Grinnell; "so long as you are safe, that is all we care about. Come into the parlor," he added, "and let us hear the whole story."

And Dr. Kane proceeded at once to relate the story of his second voyage to the Arctic regions, the perils and dangers to which he was exposed, his wonderful adventures, and still more wonderful escape. We give it as nearly in his own words as possible, stating, however, at his request that his official account will be published, as early as practible, and that any errors or inaccuracies will be corrected in it. He was obliged, he said, to abandon the Advance in latitude 78.45, after having penetrated as far as 82.30, which was further than any other navigator had gone, with the exception of Captain Parry, who reached the latitude of 83.15. While here he saw the Polynya or open sea, stretching away off to the north farther than the eye could reach. This point he had reached after travelling eighty or ninety miles over the ice in sledges; but as an immense zone of it intervened between him and his vessel, it was impossible for him to prosecute his investigation farther northward. For two winters the Advance was completely hemmed in; and as it became evident to him, from the condition of his men, that they could not survive another winter, he determined to leave her and make the best of his way to the nearest settlement. He discovered about eighty new capes and twenty bays, and found land up so far as he was enabled to penetrate. The extreme northern boundary of this he named Grinnell's Land, in honor of Mr. Henry Grinnell. The hardships they endured were of a fearful character, and at one time six out of their party of nineteen were so low that it was thought they could not survive. Of these three died, and the rest were saved, after the most unremitting care and attention. One of these was Mr. Alston, the carpenter, who died, while crossing over the ice, of lockjaw, superinduced by the intense cold. The other two were frostbitten. The lockjaw, Dr. Kane said, was very prevalent.

The party, after making their way over thirteen hundred miles of ice, arrived at Leviely or Godhaven, and had taken passage in a Danish brig named the Maria, when the Release made her appearance. Their joy at meeting their countrymen here can better be imagined than described.

They lost no time, it is needless to state, in taking their departure, and after a favorable voyage arrived within sight of our shores, where they were hailed by the steamship Union about sixty miles east of Sandy Hook.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT BY DR. KANE.

The expedition succeeded in crossing Melville Bay and reaching the headlands of Smith Sound as early as the 6th of August, 1853. Finding the ice to the north completely impenetrable, they were forced to attempt a temporary passage along the coast, where the rapid tides—running at the rate of four knots an hour, with a rise and fall of sixteen feet—had worn a temporary opening. Previous to taking this step, which involved great responsibility, and which was, in fact, equivalent to sacrificing the vessel, a Francis metallic boat, with a canoe of provisions, was concealed as a means of retreat.

The penetration of the pack ice was attended by many obstacles. The vessel grounded with every tide, and but for her extreme strength would not have been able to sustain the shocks of the ice. She was twice on her beam ends, and once on fire from the upsetting of the stoves. Some idea of this navigation may be formed, from the fact of her losing her jibboom, best bower anchor and bulwarks, besides about 600 fathoms of warping line. They were cheered, however, by a small daily progress; and by the 10th of September, 1853, had succeeded in gaining the northern face of Greenland—at a point never reached before. Here the young ice froze around the vessel, and compelled them to seek a winter asylum.

The winter gave them a degree of cold much below any previous registration on record. Whiskey froze in November, and for four months in the year mercury was solid daily. The mean animal temperature was five degrees below zero, summer and winter included. This, without a doubt, was the greatest cold ever experienced by man, as the seat of their winter quarters was nearest the pole.

The scurvy was readily controlled, but the most novel feature of this winter was a tetanus, or lockjaw, which defied all treatment. It carried away fifty-seven of their best sledge dogs, and was altogether a frightful scourge.

The operations of search commenced as early as March. The first parties, under the personal charge of Dr. Kane, crossing the ice at temperatures of minus 57 below zero. The loss of their dogs obliged them, as an only alternative, to adopt this early travel. Many of the party were frost bitten and underwent amputation of the toes. It was by means of these efforts that the expedition succeeded in bringing back their important results. The parties were in the field as late as the 10th of July, only ceasing from labor when the winter darkness made it impossible to travel.

Greenland has been followed and surveyed by Dr. Kane towards the Atlantic, with a coast line fronting due North, until a stupendous glacier absolutely checked their progress. This mass of ice rose in a lofty precipice, 500 feet high, abutting into the sea. It undoubtedly is the only barrier between Greenland and the Atlantic—it is an effectual barrier to all future explorations.

This glacier, in spite of the difficulty of falling bergs, was followed out to sea by means of sledges, the party rafting themselves across open water spaces on masses of ice. In this way they succeeded in traveling eighty miles along its base, and traced it into a new Northern land. This glacier is, we believe, the largest ever discovered by any previous navigator.

2 This new land thus cemented to Greenland by protruding ice, was named "Washington." The large bay which intervenes between it and Greenland bears, we believe, the name of Mr. Peabody, of Baltimore, one of the projectors of the expedition. This icy connection of the old and new worlds seems to us a feature of peculiar interest.

3. The range of the sledge journeys may be understood from the fact that the entire circuit of Smith's Sound has been effected, and its shores completely charted.

4. But the real discovery of the expedition is the open Polar sea. The channel leading to these waters was entirely free from ice, and this mysterious feature was rendered more remarkable by the existence of a belt of solid ice extending one hundred and twenty-five miles to the southward. This sea verifies the views of Dr. Kane, as expressed to the Geographical Society, before his departure. The lashing of the surf against this frozen beach of ice was impressive beyond description. Several gentlemen with whom we have conversed, speak of this as one of the most remarkable sights which they observed during the expedition. An area of three thousand square miles has been seen entirely free from ice, and was named after the Hon. J. P. Kennedy, late Secretary of the Navy, under whose auspices the expedition was undertaken.

The land to the north and west of this channel has been charted as high as 82.30. This is the nearest land to the Pole yet known. It bears the name of Mr. Henry Grinnell, the founder of the enterprise.

THE WINTER OF 1854—55.

The extreme severity of the previous season made it evident that the brig could not be liberated before the winter set in. She was fast impounded in the centre of a large field of ice. The provisions, although abundant, were not calculated to resist scurvy, and the fuel, owing to the emergency of the previous winter, was deficient in quantity. Under these circumstances Dr. Kane, with a party of volunteers—on an attempt to reach the mouth of Lancaster Sound, in hopes of meeting the English expedition, and thus giving relief to his associates—passed in an open boat over the track of Baffin's travel, riding out a heavy gale. They found an uninterrupted barrier of ice, extending in one great horseshoe from Jones to Murchison's Sound, and were forced after various escapes to return to the brig.

During the winter which ensued they adopted the habits of the Esquimaux, living upon raw walrus meat and surrounding themselves by walls of moss. In spite of these precautions the scurvy advanced with steady progress, but by the aid of a single team of dogs Dr. Kane succeeded in effecting a communication with a settlement of Esquimaux seventy miles to the southward, and by organizing a hunt relieved the party. At one time every man of the expedition except Dr. Kane and Mr. Bonsel were confined to their bunks with scurvy; but by a providential interposition the party escaped without a death.

ESCAPE TO THE SOUTH.

The great belt of ice made it clear that no relief expeditions from the South could reach the party in time to prevent the imprisonment of a third winter, which, with their deficiencies of fuel, would have proved most disastrous, if not fatal. Under these circumstances, Dr. Kane wisely determined to abandon his brig, and attempt to escape to the South by a combination of boats and sledges. In accordance with this view they left the brig on the 17th May, the temperature at that time being five degrees below zero. They crossed a belt of ice eighty-one miles in diameter, dragging the boats behind them, and carrying four of their sick comrades by means of a dog sledge. After an actual travel of 361 miles, they reached Cape Alexander and embarked in open water. Their guns supplied them with animal food, no provisions being carried in the boat, excepting breadstuffs and tallow.

From Cape Alexander they travelled to the Southward, sometimes over ice, sometimes through water, shooting duck and seal and collecting enough eggs to keep the party in good condition. At Cape York they burned up their spare boats and sledges for fuel and left the coast, striking out into the open sea of Melville Bay, steering for the North Danish settlements of Greenland. Here they were providentially landed on the sixth of August, in vigorous health, after their travel of 1,300 miles and 81 days of constant exposure. From Upernivik, the largest of these settlements, they took passage in a Danish trading vessel for England.

By great good fortune they touched at Disco, where they were met by Captain Hartstein's expedition. This searching expedition having found the ice of Smith Sound still unbroken, but having communicated with the Esquimaux, had heard of the departure of Dr. Kane, and retraced their steps.

The expedition has to mourn the loss of three of its comrades, two of whom perished by lockjaw, and one from abscess following a frozen extremity. They may be said to have fallen in the direct discharge of their duty. Their names are acting carpenter Christian Ohlsen, Jefferson Baker and Peter Shubert, volunteers.

Additional Particulars by Dr. Hayes and Messrs. Bonsal and Sontag, of the Expedition under Dr. Kane.

After describing their visit to Greenland, their purchase of furs and Esquemaux dogs, their various explorations in search of Franklin, the mercury 40 deg. below zero, and the cold and darkness increasing still, "we lost the sun entirely in the middle of October."

In speaking of their return they state:

We were now certainly in a dreary situation. The sun we knew would not return till the 24th of February, till which time we had total darkness. We had coal fires all this time, and on board ship gained a comfortable temperature. Nothing of moment now occurred till March set in again, excepting all our dogs died but three or four, from a spasm peculiar to the climate. The loss of our dogs was severely felt, for upon these faithful animals we were to depend to draw our sledges. In March we again had twelve hours daylight, and in this month we started out another exploring party to the north, but from the heavy, rough ice, they were not able to proceed over forty miles from the vessel, when the party returned again to the vessel. This was March, 1854. On this expedition some of the party were frost bitten, and two so severely that they afterwards died. One was named Peter Shubert, the cook, and the other Baker. Two others of the party had their toes cut off. I was in this expedition, and when thirty miles from the vessel, myself and two others—the only ones of the party who could walk—returned on foot across the ice to the vessel to report the condition of the party to Dr. Kane. Dr. Kane, with a strong party, immediately set out for the relief of the sufferers, but did not succeed in giving succor till after the party had gone through suffering the most perilous and intense.

The next exploring party from the ship was in April, and headed by Dr. Kane in person. It consisted of two sledges—one drawn by dogs and the other by men. This party was out only eight days when Dr. Kane was taken ill with fever, and found it necessary to return to the vessel. In May another exploring party was formed under the command of Dr. Hayes, who succeeded in crossing to the westerly side of Smith Channel, a distance of eighty miles from the ship. This party suffered greatly from snow blindness. The party running short of provisions here was obliged to return to the ship, which they reached after an absence of twelve days, and having in this time travelled three hundred and fifty miles. With the dogs, the explorer can travel fifty miles a day. Dr. Hayes, on his return from this expedition, travelled at this speed, his dog team being fed on nothing more than an old boot for breakfast, and part of a pair of Esquimaux pants for dinner.

Directly after the return of Dr. Hayes, during the month of June, another exploring party was fitted out under command of Bonsel and McGeary. The object of all these parties was to ascertain some traces of Sir John Franklin if possible. This party took a northeastern direction to the western shore of Baffin's Bay. A branch party from this, accompanied by an Esquimaux driver, continued the search along the eastern coast, finding Smith Sound terminating in a large bay. At the bottom of this bay was the glazier of the shore already mentioned. From this point, a new channel was discovered, extending due north. The party travelled up this channel along the coast until they were brought up by open water. This open space was entirely free from ice, and abounding in animal life, such as fowl, fish, walrus and seal. A northerly gale lasting two days, brought no ice down, proving that a large open sea was beyond; but whether this was the great Polar Sea or not is questionable. It is the opinion of Dr. Kane that this was the open Polar Sea, that is never frozen over. This party made a chart of the coast as far north as latitude 82 30—the most northern point of land yet discovered. In July this party returned, and this closed the operations of the year 1854.

FROM THE PRIVATE JOURNAL OF AN OFFICER OF THE RELEASE.

From the 24th of June to the 4th of July, saw a great number of whales, also saw all kinds of Northern fowl; these Greenland ducks rise in clouds; two of the officers, on a gunning expedition of six hours, secured twelve hundred pounds, which was the amount brought on board, but only about one-third of the amount killed.

July 2.—This day the sun descended to within its disc of the horizon and then rose again.

July 5.—Made Kronprins Island; Disco Island in sight; crew all well and in good spirits; no sickness yet nor discouragement; anchored in Leavely harbor, Disco Island; the Royal Danish inspector, Mr. Olric, came on board and offered the hospitality of old North Greenland to all on board; Leavely is a town of about 150 inhabitants, composed of about one dozen Danes, and the rest half breed Esquimos; stayed here five days and had a ball every night, Sunday included; all enjoyed themselves; the girls very pretty; the inhabitants an industrious, honest people, and very hospitable; two of the daughters of the august house of Broberg, Misses Sophia and Maria, visited the ship one evening, and where entertained with a supper and dancing and other amusements; as strange as it may appear, these girls dance with a skill and grace that a Broadway belle might envy; imagine the novel sight of a lot of belles dressed in seal skin breeches; the young men are good performers upon the violin, and dancing and balls are the main amusements; everything was novel to the uninitiated.

The Efforts Made to Discover a North-west Passage.

The attempt to discover a north-west passage was made by a Portuguese named Cortereal, about A. D. 1500. It was attempted by the English in 1553; and the project was greatly encouraged by Queen Elizabeth in 1585, in which year a company was associated in London, and was called the "Fellowship for the Discovery of the North-west Passage." The American Arctic Expeditions and Atmospheric Phenomena.

BY E. MERIAM.

It is now exactly four months since the American Arctic Expedition, under the command of Lieut Hartstein, sailed from Sandy Hook for the Polar Seas, in search and for the rescue of Dr. Kane. The last account I have seen of the last exploring vessels is that of their being spoken on the 6th, two days after sailing, in lat. 40.20, lon. 69.33, when the propeller Arctic was in tow of the sail vessel Release, in order to economize the fuel.

Dr. Kane sailed from New York on the 31st of May, 1853, and has therefore been absent two years four months and four days.

In the first year of his stay in the Artic Zone the cold was intense. Sir Edward Belcher, commander of the English Expedition, who passed two years in the polar regions—1851, '52, '53 and '54—in a letter to me of June 21, 1855, says the winter of 1853—'54 was intensely cold—maximum 59.25, and mean 54.34 below zero for one hundred and two consecutive hours. In another letter, dated September 12, he says the lowest temperature he recorded was 63.5 below zero, and ninety-five and five-tenths below the freezing point of Fahrenheit. Dr. Rae wintered in 1853–'54 at Repulse Bay. He says "the winter was very severe." At my place of observation, on Brooklyn Heights, the winter was mild.

On comparing these memoranda with our ice record the very extraordinary fact appears that the more intense the Arctic cold the greater the flow of the polar ice.

Our ice journal presents the following facts connected with the ice drifts 1853–'54:

But one vessel arrived at the port of New York in the year 1854 which reported meeting with ice in crossing the Atlantic prior to December in that year, and this one met ice in the month of May. In December, 1853, the great ice drift commenced and continued, till the month of October, 1854. The following are the number of vessels reported in each month, viz.: December, 3; January, none; February, 4; March, 43; April, 98; May, 74; June, 67; July, 37; August, 9; September, 6, and October, 2—total, three hundred and forty vessels. The whole number reported in the twelve years preceeding was altogether four hundred and fifty-four being but 114 more in twelve years than for the single drift of 1853 and 1854.

Sudden and great changes in the temperature of the atmosphere in winter fractures large bodies of ice. I recollect the cold Friday of January 19, 1819. I was then in camp in a northern wilderness. The temperature of Thursday, the 18th, was 40 degrees above zero, and rain fell in many places north of 41 degrees of latitude. In the evening of that day a sudden and most extraordinary change took place; the cold became intense, and the trees of the forest during the whole night cracked and split with the frost. The detonations were incessant, like the discharge of successive volleys of musketry and about midnight a tremendous explosion was heard. It proved to be the cracking of the ice of a lake a few miles distant; the rent was several miles in length and near six inches wide. Mercury, on the morning of the 19th, became solid, and in some places the spirit thermometers indicated a temperature of 50 degrees below zero. This great and extraordinary change was no doubt immediately connected with an earthquake.

It is such changes, with the earthquakes, with which they are connected, that may be presumed to have produced the great drift of Arctic ice in 1853 and 1854.

While Lieut. De Haven was in the Arctic seas he made hourly thermometrical observations for me. On referring to his journal, the original of which I now have, I find that the lowest temperature observed by him was, after the sun had reappeared above the horizon, 22d of February, 1851, fifty-two degrees below zero. That day and the day preceding the temperature on Brooklyn Heights rose to 51 and 52 degrees above zero, the warmest days of that month. The coldest day in December, 1850, in the polar seas, was the first day of the month, temperature 34 degrees below zero; the same day and the warmest in that month, the temperature was 54 degrees above zero. Thus it is seen that, by our observations on Brooklyn Heights, made and recorded every sixty minutes, we are enabled to determine by the temperature here the temperature on the polar seas for the same time. Lieut. De Haven, on the same pages of the records of temperature, also made memoranda of the drift of the vessels then riding homeward on the ice, and by both it appeared that, although the cold was sufficient to congeal quick-silver, the ice-drift continued notwithstanding the cold. During the polar night of 1850 and 1851, which lasted about two thousand hours, the temperature at three different periods, in November, December and January, rose above zero, and each of these was immediately connected with and preceded an earthquake between the pole and the equator.

Comparing the Arctic temperature of the winter of 1850 and 1851, as experienced by Lieut. De Haven, with that of 1853–'54, as experienced by Capt. Sir Edward Belcher, we find a very great difference. The minimums of 1853–'54 are eleven and five-tenths degrees more than that of 1850–'51; and beyond all this the cold terms in 1853–'54 were long, while those of 1850–'51 were of short duration.

The winter of 1854–'55 was severe at our place of observation on Brooklyn Heights. The temperature here on the 6th of February, 1855, fell to 6 degrees below zero—the lowest temperature recorded here in a period of sixty-seven consecutive years, which is the number covered by the records of my office. In Vermont the temperature fell to 45 degrees below zero. This low temperature belongs to a cold term of three hundred and sixty (360) consecutive hours, commencing, on the 29th of January and ending on the 13th of February. This cold term had within it heavy thunder-storms in the Gulf Stream on the 1st of February, during, which a vessel was struck by lightning; severe thunder-storms on the 5th, in latitude 33.10 north, longitude 76, during which two vessels were struck by lightning; on the 6th a ship, in latitude 36 north, longitude 63 west, was struck by lightning and destroyed; on the 8th, in latitude 31.40 north, longitude 73.10 west, a lightning storm was active; and the same day a thunder storm visited Columbia, S. C. The earthquakes kept company with the lightning during this extraordinary cold term as will be seen by the following extracts from our journal:—On the 1st of February shocks of earthquake were felt at Vera Cruz, and also at the city of Mexico and other places in that district of country; 2d. Earthquake felt at Clarksville, Wylesburg, Prince Edward, Halifax, and several other places in Virginia; the earthquakes were again felt in Vera Cruz and in Mexico city, throwing down some old walls and splitting the aqueducts in many places; 3d. Several shocks of marine earthquake at Genoa, doing much damage among the shipping; 6th. Earthquakes felt at Kinderhook and Sangerties, N. Y., accompanied by a heavy rumbling noise resembling distant thunder—the ground opened three inches; also, at Springfield, Mass., during which the walls of the file shop of the United States armory were cracked; 8th. Shocks of earthquake in Nova Scotia and in several towns of the State of Maine; 10th. At San Salvador the earthquakes continue; 12th. Terrible earthquake in the New Zealand Islands, in the Southern hemisphere.—[N. Y. Herald Oct. 12th.

The First Printed Book.

A PARAGRAPH has lately been going the rounds of the newspapers about early printed books, wherein it is stated that the first which bears a date is of the year 1455, thus making it just four centuries since the invention of printing. Neither of these assertions are correct, as it is certain that books were printed from five to seven years earlier, and that the earliest printed date to a book is that of 1447. These specimens are of exceeding rarity. We do not propose entering into a history of printing, but as we constantly see accounts of old bibles and other books printed a hundred years later than the period above named, we shall state a few facts on this interesting subject.

There is even now much doubt as to the precise year when moveable metal types were invented and first used; it is sufficient, however, to say that it was between the years 1440 and 1450. Some single printed sheets, containing the Pope's indulgences, bearing date of 1450 and 1455 are known, and an almanac of 1457. But the first printed book known is the celebrated Mazarin Bible in two folio volumes. It was so called from the discovery of a copy in the library of Cardinal Mazarine at Paris, about the middle of the last century; since which time seventeen other copies have been found in various parts of Europe; of these, nine were in public and nine in private libraries. It has no date, but at the end of each volume, of the copy in the Royal Library at Paris, is an inscription in red ink. That in the second volume is as follows:

"This book, illuminated and bound by Henry Cremer, vicar of the Collegiate Church of St. Stephen, at Mentz, was completed on the feast of the assumption of the blessed virgin Mary, A. D. 1456. Thanks be to God. Hallelujah."

Some think the work was finished in 1450 or 1452, while others fix it at 1455, as the binding and illumination of this particular copy would, in all probability, soon follow its publication. But in the infancy of the art, it is probable that it was from five to seven years in printing; hence, the inference would be that it was commenced before the year 1450, an opinion in which most investigators agree.

Until within a few years, no copy of this rare book was known in the United States, and there seemed little probability that there would be, as the copies in the private libraries of Europe were held beyond price, and except in the breaking up of some old family and estate, would an opportunity be offered to procure one. Such an opportunity, however, was presented about seven years since, when one of the great private libraries was to be brought to the hammer in London, and news was spread far and wide that a copy of the Mazarin Bible was among its rarities. The book collectors of Europe were on the qui vive. Crowned heads, princes, nobles and wealthy collectors, were alike anxious to secure the gem; but a princely collector of the Fifth avenue in New York bore off the palm, and secured the inestimable volumes for 525 guineas (about $2,600.)

These magnificent volumes, which we have had the privilege of examining, are soon described. They are two folios, about the size the folios of our day, and together include 1,274 pages. The paper upon which they are printed is hard, tough and of superior quality. Its color is a delicate cream-colored tint. Its typography is a gothic or old English letter, not quite as uniform as the printing of the present time, yet possessing a clearness and sharpness of outline that renders it difficult to decide whether the types are cut in brass or cast in moulds. The ink is, even now, as black as it is possible to make it. The register is very exact, and in all respects, the beauty, the perfection and magnificence of these volumes quite surpass every production of the press for three hundred years after. There are no ornaments illuminations or engravings in this copy, and the binding, which is modern, is a plain blue morocco.

It is a very striking circumstance, observes a distinguished historian, that the high-minded inventors of this great art tried, at the very outset, so bold a flight as the printing an entire Bible, and executed it with such astonishing success. It was Minerva leaping on earth in her divine strength and radiant armour, ready at the moment of her nativity to subdue and destroy her enemies. We may see in imagination this venerable and splendid volume leading up the crowded myriads of its followers, and imploring as it were, a blessing on the new art, by dedicating its first fruits to the service of Heaven.

Of the interesting events connected with the first appearance of the printed Bible we will not speak, for volumes have been written upon it, while the poet, the painter, the architect and the sculptor, have alike exercised their genius in erecting monuments to perpetuate the memory of the inventors of printing. Up to the time when the printed Bible appeared, manuscript copies being held at enormous prices, could only be possessed by kings and wealthy nobles. The sudden multiplication of copies so beautifully executed, and so similar in appearance, naturally led the then superstitious people to attribute them to some demoniacal influence, and Faust, the printer, was openly charged with being leagued with the devil.

The first book known to be extant which has the name of the place where it was printed, and that of the printers, together with the year when it was executed, is known as the Mentz Psalter, printed in 1457. Faust and Schoeffer were the printers. Only six copies of this are known. The first Bible with a date was also published by Faust & Schoeffer in 1462, in 2 vols. folio. They were soon after multiplied, chiefly in Latin and German; yet all these editions are exceedingly rare. The gentleman to whom we have alluded in New York has copies of almost all the early editions of the Bible, which he has procured with great exertions and at an enormous cost. There is also a very fine collection owned by a private gentleman in Cambridge. Of books printed before the year 1500, there are at least one hundred different works in the library of a distinguished collector in Providence. These are chiefly editions of the classics printed by Aldus, and a number of rare books on America; among the latter, the four several editions of the letter of Columbus to Ferdinand and Isabella, printed in the year 1493. In the same collection is the magnificent Complutentian Polyglott Bible, in 6 volumes folio, printed by order of Ferdinand and Isabella, under the superintendence of Cardinal Ximenes. This bears the date of 1515 to 1520, and is one of the finest specimens of printing we have ever seen. We have on our own table several books printed between 1484 and 1497, but they possess no particular interest except for their age. One volume, however, has a heavy iron staple and chain through its oaken cover, with which it was chained to the table or alcove where it was kept.—[Providence Journal.

Cattle Disease—Murrain.

IT is stated, on the authority of a farmer of Pulaski county, Missouri, that a mixture of salt, sulphur and madder, is a preventive and remedy for the cattle disease which has done so much mischief in Missouri. He says he has used it last year and this with entire success. With two gallons of salt he mixes up of sulphur and copperas in powder, the contents of say an ordinary glass tumbler, and of madder twice that quantity. It is a dry mixture, and when prepared is scattered among the troughs of the animals. Cattle show no repugnance to it, but lick it up as they do their ordinary relish of salt. He has found it very effectual.

The disease called the "Texas fever" has prevailed only on the routes taken by droves from the Cherokee country and Texas. There is no mistaking its symptoms. The disease, in most cases, terminates fatally in from six to thirty-six hours. The ravages committed by it in the country exposed to it, have been very extensive, as thousands of cattle have fallen by it. St. Clair and other counties of Missouri have held meetings and resovled to deny cattle from the South a passage through their limits.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 20, 1855.

Dr. Kane and the Arctic Expedition.

On the first page of this issue will be found some of the leading incidents relative to the late Arctic expedition, under the command of Dr. Kane, as well as the Hartstein expedition, sent out in search of that intrepid gentleman and his command. The account, although not official, does not materially differ from the official statement, since published, and will be found to contain many items of thrilling interest pertaining to those dreary regions; and although our intrepid voyageur has been unsuccessful in the object of his philanthropic search—the discovery of Sir John Franklin—yet has he manifested a zeal and daring courage, not to say almost reckless and heroic bravery, honorable alike to himself as a man, and to the American nation of which he is the representative.

No wonder, then, that such intense excitement should be manifested by the citizens of this great metropolis on the announcement of the safe arrival of Dr. Kane and his companions, as well as the return of the Release and Arctic under the command of Lieut. H. J. Hartstein; with our whole hearts, therefore, not only on his own account, but also on account of his anxious family, we bid him welcome again to Columbia's shores.

In another column will be found a short sketch of the life and services of Dr. Kane, which, brief as it is, it represents in striking colors, though in simple narrative, the indomitable perseverance, untiring energy, and magnanimous spirit of the man.

At one time you find him projecting a visit into the interior of China, at another penetrating into India; at one time scaling mountains, at another dangling by a 200 feet bamboo rope, among the scoria and debris of a crater. Anon, like another Cook, exposing his life, in his researches, among savages, where others fell. He visits Egypt, ascends the Nile, penetrates into Nubia, and after communing with the shades, and examining the records of Cleopatra, Sesostris, and the Pharaos, visits Greece and confers with the genius and records of their once renowned kings, philosophers, heroes and statesmen. He then goes to Africa, visits the slave marts of Whydah, and grapples with that fell destroyer, the African fever.

After his literary and scientific explorations, he is anxious to be enrolled among his country's heroes; and with a mind superior to his body, weak, tottering and feeble, sues for, and will not rest until he obtains a commission to Mexico. There, unwilling to brook delay in the absence of a proper guard, he enlists a guerilla and his band into his service, makes him fight when he would run, and with this very questionable escort conquers his enemy. Then, when the cowardly assassin would destroy the vanquished, he unites with his conquered opponent to fight the guerilla, whom he conquers, and thus magnanimously becomes the deliverer of his foe, and afterwards his honorable and admired guest. Side by side, lay the two wounded friends, though national enemies, the vanquished and the victor, under the hospitable roof of the former. It may be proper here to remark, with that feeling of delicacy so peculiar to the gentleman, that Dr. Kane, on his return to the United States, had a magnificent sword, heavily mounted in gold and of exquisite workmanship, made, which he forwarded to his host, Major-General Antonio Gaonci, but which the then authorities of Mexico, under Santa Anna, prevented from being delivered, and which was consequently returned.

In perusing the narrative we are at a loss which to admire the most—his heroism, patriotism and bravery, or the high-toned gentlemanly bearing of the genius and scholar; any eulogium from us however would be superfluous, as he has written his name on his country's escutcheon in living indelible characters; and he will henceforth be known and admired among her scholars, travellers, philanthropists, and heroes—and not only here but throughout the world he will be classed with Cook, Parry, Bhering, Franklin, Wilkes, and other distinguished travellers and explorers. Nor is his late expedition devoid of scientific interest; he has discovered a new continent, and beyond the barriers of the ice an unfrozen ocean, which, while it accords with his former deductions on this subject, and therefore must be exceedingly gratifying, may yet lead to important philosophical and historical developments that will make the ears of the nations tingle.

While upon this subject it may not be amiss to refer to other members of the family, for there seems to be a force, energy, talent, and decision of character in the whole of the Kane family, rarely equalled. It has been a common usage in families having several sons to make different professional selections for them; thus, one would be selected for the army, one for the medical profession, one for the bar, and another for the church—the latter the weakest intellect. There is no parson, we believe, in this family. One of the brothers, Robert P. Kane, is a distinguished member of the Philadelphia bar, and has successfully conducted several very important cases with great legal ability. He has travelled extensively, has collected and laid up judicial lore among other nations; he is well read, possesses brilliant talents, is courteous and gentlemanly, and bids fair to rank high among, and give brilliancy to the legal satellites of our nation.

Col. Thomas L. Kane, we have every reason to know, is a man of literary as well as legal attainments. Like his other brothers, he has been an extensive traveller; hence his intelligence is practical, rather than theoretical. Although naturally weak in body, he possesses a giant mind, a firm, inflexible will, and an energy of character which laughs at difficulties and surmounts all obstacles. We well remember meeting with him in the far-off western wilds; although feeble and infirm, pursuing with unflinching determination the object of his researches, as though he had a herculean frame and iron nerves. These, together with a courteous, gentlemanly bearing, and an honest, ingenuous, undeviating friendship, cause him to be loved and respected by all who are favored with his friendship.

At the time of our exodus from Nauvoo, while encamped at Council Bluffs, in the fall of 1846, he visited our camp, and owing to sickness, was detained some time in our midst, which gave him ample opportunity of becoming acquainted with our customs and habits, as well as political and religious views, the cause of our migration, and our future calculations: these he faithfully recorded, and at a time when public opinion was roused to a state of effervescence through the falsehoods and misrepresentations of disappointed demagogues, a narrow, superstitious, religious bigotry, and a corrupt venal press, singly and alone he met the hydra-headed monster, and delivered his famous "Lecture on the Mormons" before the Pennsylvania Historical Society, which was afterwards published. He boldly maintained their innocence, honesty and patriotism, in the face of a calumniating world; and as a honest man, dared to tell the things that he knew, however unpalatable to a corrupt priesthood, a vascillating press, and popular feeling. This book was well written, and gave a plain, unvarnished statement of many of our wrongs, our persecutions, faith, hope, diligence, political and religious feelings, and was read extensively throughout the United States as well as Europe. Nor has the Colonel ever shaken in his purpose, but has been ready on all occasions to speak the "Truth for the Mormons," independent of consequences, whenever circumstances called it forth. The city of Kanesville, Council Bluffs, was named after him; but on our departure, another power arose, "who knew not Joseph," and changed the name to Bluff City. The latter may be more euphonious to the present inhabitants; it is still known by its former name by the Mormons, who associate with it the cherished memory of Col. Kane. And however the Colonel may have risked his popularity in the defence of the character of the Mormons in disdaining to pander to public prejudices; boldly and unflinchingly declaring things that he knew, he lives in the memories and hearts of thousands of honest men, who, in the midst of the pestiferous breath of slander, the maddening influence of persecution, and the withering blast of a cold-hearted world, have felt his warm, genial breath of friendship, which none can appreciate more than they, and discover in him a friend, philanthropist, a patriot, and an honest man.

Nor are we less the admirer of Judge Kane; possessed of the first forensic talent of the country, as a jurist his name stands prominent on his country's record; intelligent, courteous and mild, he has maintained unsullied for years his high and honorable position; and with a mind devoted to his profession, and an intellect commensurate to every exigency, in the midst of sectional strifes and political jars, he has maintained the dignity of his profession, and preserved unsullied the just and conservative influence of that branch of our national institutions, the judiciary; and while our legislative and executive functions have sometimes been threatened with disrupture and annihilation by the fierce passions of conflicting parties, in his hand the ermine has maintained its purity by the unflinching administration of law, and withstood all the rude shocks of party strife and sectional predilections; and in no single act of his life has he raised himself more in the estimation of unbiased men than in his late proceedings in relation to Passmore Williamson. A zealous, but misguided man, as we are informed on friendly relations with Judge Kane, commits an overt act; is instrumental in officiously interfering with the property of another, contrary to law; the case is brought before Judge Kane for adjudication; naturally speaking, he has every incentive to acquit the prisoner. The slaves were gone, and could not probably be returned; Mr. Williamson was a respectable man, and his friend, and however misguided, was believed to be honest; a strong public feeling said liberate him. All these things might weigh heavily on his mind, and might reasonably have produced an influence, and whispered it will be the easiest way, the way most suited to my feelings, the most congenial to my friend, and peradventure the most popular; but no, he met friendship, popularity and expediency, not as a cringing sycophant or a truckling politician, but as a United States Judge, with the inflexible records of the law which the legislature had made for him, and of which he was the sworn exponent; he knows neither friend or enemy, expediency or inexpediency, slavery or anti-slavery: but firmly and unflinchingly declares what the law says, and orders its execution. The question was mainly a question of law, and not of pro or anti-slavery; and however fanatics may rave at the non-fulfillment of their schemes, that his position was correct is evidenced by the action of his brother Judges, who have refused to annul his decision: thus proving that no narrow prejudices nor unworthy influences could operate to swerve him from the path of rectitude, and that knowing his duty he dared perform it. In the above we wish to be understood that we speak of this as a legal question, and give our views altogether irrespective of north or south, pro or anti-slavery.

To conclude, we think that the Kane family are an ornament to society, an acquisition to science, and an honor to the nation; that they are the true nobility of our republican institutions; and that if we had more such spirits, and less of fanaticism, our nation would more speedily arrive at that exalted position among the nations, for which she is so eminently adapted by Providence.

Alleged Injustice to the Mormons.

UNDER the above heading the Chicago Express has quite a lengthy article, commencing as follows:

"A late number of THE MORMON devotes a long article to a severe criticism upon the comments of the Press throughout the country in relation to the threatened famine among the Mormons in Salt Lake Valley, in consequence of the general destruction of their crops by the grasshoppers."

He then quotes a paragraph from an article, not of ours, but one copied from, and credited to, the Woman's Advocate, published in Philadelphia. It will be found in the thirty-first number of our issue, entitled "Distress among the Mormons." Its tenor was a rebuke upon the Press, generally, for the indifference, or, rather, exultation over the threatened famine in Utah on account of the ravages of the grasshoppers at one time. He then goes on to deny the charges, and deals a few blows very heroically. Unfortunately for him he has unwittingly locked horns with a female editor, and the victim he has so badly gored (as he thinks, no doubt,) is, we should judge from the spirit of her paper, a good-hearted, high-minded, matter-of-fact lady. We can imagine his chagrin and wounded pride of gallantry when he discovers his mistake; for we cannot believe he would thus hazard his reputation as a ladies' man only by mistake.

After dealing with the Mormons in rather a summary and vindictive manner, he says:

"But even with this conviction on the part of the people in general, no class of the Mormons would be suffered to starve if they were accessible to public charity. Unfortunately for them they are so far separated by barren plains and mountain barriers from other communities that it is impossible to render them any substantial assistance. We are glad to believe, however, that THE MORMON has magnified the actual danger of famine in the Salt Lake Valley in order to make its charges against the 'Gentile' editors more telling. The latest accounts from there, as published in THE MORMON itself, were of quite a hopeful character. There was a probability, they said, that the poorer portion of the Saints would have rather pinching times through the winter, but no fears were felt of actual starvation."

We have not made our telling charges yet; neither have we prayed for sympathy from our "Gentile" editorial friends; but we nevertheless feel grateful to the editor of the Express for the sympathy he has exhibited—we will take the will for the deed. This we prefer, as we have experienced the effects of the deeds of many of our Illinois friends in days by-gone.

The New York Herald and Mormonism.

THE above paper, in noticing "One of the peculiar institutions of New York," in the shape of a Free Love Association, a la mode de Paris, is pleased very graciously to call it Mormonism in the Metropolis. We find it quite a common practice for that gentleman to heap all the filthy corrupt doings of monogamists upon the Mormons. There is scarce a mean act performed, from the fashionable procuresses to the nymphs du pave, from the recherche saloons and houses of assignation in the Avenues and Broadway down to the Five Points, but what Mr. Bennet is pleased to designate Mormonism. Now we wish to inform that gentleman that we have no affiliation with, and utterly repudiate, the mean, corrupt, degrading practices of monogamists as exhibited in New York and elsewhere, and that we feel ourselves disgraced with their foetid touch; and we would respectfully inform Mr. Bennet, that it would at least be more in accordance with probity and the character of a gentleman, to call things by their proper names. If the system of monogamy is such a fruitful source of lascivious corruption and degradation, why not call it by its proper cognomen—monogamy. Mr. Bennett, the Mormons have neither houses of assignation, nymphs du pave, Five Points, Randall's Island, free love associations, pimps, procuresses, outcast women, nor fatherless children. The Abrahamic, Polygamic, or Patriarchal institutions, the offspring of heaven, are as much superior to the unnatural practices of monogamists as the character of Abraham is superior to that of James Gordon Bennet.

Dr. Bernhisel.

WE are much gratified to announce the arrival in this city of our old friend the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, delegate to Congress from Utah, whom we have had the pleasure of greeting this morning just previous to going to press. The doctor is in good health and spirits, and brings a favorable report from Utah. Particulars next week.

From St. Louis.

WE have just received a letter from Br. Jeter Clinton, dated St. Louis, Oct. 13th, the day of his arrival in that place. He left Philadelphia on the eve of the 8th inst., having received two telegraphic dispatches of the extreme illness of Br. Orson Spencer, who desired the doctor's attendance. We regret to say the doctor found Br. Spencer quite low and emaciated from continued illness, but hopes he may recover.

We sympathize deeply with Br. Spencer in his protracted illness away from his family and friends in the Salt Lake Valley, and hope and pray in connection with the Brethren here, that he may speedily recover. Br. Spencer has naturally rather a feeble constitution, and the exposure up in the Indian country was probably too much for him; hence his present debility; but we hope to hear by the next mail of his convalescence.

P. S.—Just as our paper was ready for press, we received the painful intelligence of the death of Br. Orson Spencer, at St. Louis. We have not received the particulars but shall probably be able to give them next week.

Late from California.

A LETTER from St. Barnardino by the last Steamer informs us that the health of that place is good, and that things are rolling ahead as usual; Br. Charles C. Rich, is at the ranche at present, while Br. Amasa Lyman and about fifty others are out in the upper country to raise means to make the last payment on the ranche. The electioneering contest this year is quite animated in that section of country.

The Salt Lake mail had just arrived bringing no news of particular interest.

From Mexico.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New Orleans Delta, writing from the "Camp of the Liberating Army of the North, two miles from Matamoras, under date of Sept. 24th," says:

An express from Governor Vidauri arrived in our camp last night, with orders not to enter into any agreement whatever with the military stationed in Matamoras, but to notify them that they shall be treated as public enemies, unless they immediately lay down their arms. They have accordingly been notified that, in case they come out of that place they will immediately be attacked by our forces, who feel confident of success, though we have not a single piece of artillery. The nature of the ground will not give the enemy's artillery much room to play, and our riflemen would certainly have the advantage, as the eight hundred men that could be brought into the field, are more than a match for fifteen hundred of their dispirited troops.

Infanticide.

JOURNALISTS are ready to condemn the primitive law of "plurality of wives" because at present it is popular to do so, and at the same time record the workings and results of monogamy as natural consequences or results for which there is no responsibility. Let such things as we are about to relate transpire in a community of polygamists, and how readily would their system have to father it, especially if they were Mormons, and we should not blame the accusers; for we believe that such things are a stench in the nostrils of the Almighty, and sooner or later will meet their just reward.

One cotemporary says:

"But few are aware of the extent of child murder in this city. The number of still-born is truly frightful, even if we take the City Inspector's report as to what that number is. But not more than one-half of the cases of this character find their way into that report. What is the cause of so much child murder in this city? We have practised abortionists by scores, males and females, who obtain a living by murder. Also, the mother, in hundreds of instances, terminates the life of her offspring."

From the Times we extract as follows:

"Take the case of a fallen woman; no matter how she fell, by her strong affection, by her evil education, by the choice between that state and starvation, by trusting to promises of marriage, or, frequent, perhaps, as any, by the grossness of a corrupt husband; let her fall by any of these, and her fate is almost always the same. Man and woman treat her with the same cruelty. She is to both an outlaw, to the woman an object of loathing and abhorrence which eloquence cannot conquer, nor prayer soften, nor reason convince. The moment that her sin is discovered, she becomes the wehr-wolf of female society, for whom mercy were an error, forgiveness and restoration impossible things. Some sisters banish her for her sins, some for her breach of that eleventh commandment, so powerful in society, 'Thou shalt not be found out.'

"Men are divided. A few are practically, more are theoretically disposed to be gentle with the poor soul, not to destroy her utterly, but, if it were possible, to restore her. Others have only for her fierce anger and pitiless stern rebuke, and loud, outspoken, abhorrent condemnation, which may result from extreme holiness, and which may not. But, unfortunately, there is another class of men, who see in these poor fallen ones only the servants of their unhallowed passions, who gloat over the record of every new sin committed, who rejoice over every fresh exile of society that comes to recruit the ranks of unfortunate women. And these are precisely the men into whose association the fiat of the world has consigned these women. Nor is this class a small one; they are found in the drawing-room and the ball-room, at the watering places and in the hotels. We have seen them, keen-scented, merciless, fearless, unsparingly cruel, hunting some lone woman as jackals hunt an antelope over the sands.

"See, then, what the woman's case is, and wonder what it is that has taught the world that when two people commit the same sin, one shall be received into favor again and the other remorselessly driven to destruction. Why the favored one should be the strong, the irresponsible, the cooler, calmer of the two; and the one to be rejected and accused, the more loving, more frail, more trustful, the utterly defenceless one, the only brave one; for the man may escape discovery through a lifetime, but the maternity betrays woman.

"And if those words, "unwedded maternity," lie the fearful sources of abortion and other child murders. The unmarried mother sees before her such an endless perspective of horrors that she can forget the offspring even of her own body. She knows, that once discovered, she can see the face of innocent or undiscovered woman no more, that she must go forth with the father of her child until he tires of her, must be passed off then to another, must result in the brothel, and so sink lower and lower, day by day, until the curtains of the hospital bed shall be drawn, and her tainted, unlovely body be carried to its nameless grave in the Potter's Field. She knows, too, that while she is on this fast descent, he is waltzing with the pure, pressing the hands of the respectable, taking wine with her former equal at the table of wealth. And so she flies, sometimes to suicide, sometimes to this monstrous infanticide.

"A woman sins no more than the partner of her guilt—in most cases infinitely less. Let the virtuous world keep a bolt or two for him, out of the abundant lightnings wherewith it blasts her. Expel him from the society of good women; drive him to the companionship suited to his infamy; or if you persist in saying only of him, "he has been a little wild," say only of her "she has been a little wild," and there let the matter end. If he is yet a fit partner for your daughter, then she, by immutable fairness, is a fit wife for your son. Get at this root which grows from long cherished routine of thought, and as the two have sinned alike, punish them both, or forgive them both; have for both equal mercy, equal good nature, equal condemnation; above all, equal justice."

Geo. H. Doane's Conversion to Catholicism.

We noticed quite an interest manifest in the press of late, with reference to the conversion of the son of Bishop Doane, of the Episcopal Church, in New Jersey, to Catholicism.

Mr. Doane, it seems, early imbibed the sentiment that led to this result, from his associations in the Puseyite School of Dr. Newman and others.

When he came to advance those sentiments to his Episcopalian friends, he was repudiated and turned over to Pope Pius IX. We extract from the Freeman's Journal as follows:

"For Mr. Doane it was now to choose between family and friends, or Christ; between the Catholic truths that he loved, or the Episcopal congregation that loved these not. The conviction and the conclusion was peremptory, and left no room for reconsideration. Mr. Doane, instead of doing as too many have done before him—wasting his time with fooleries and unmeaning dodges of his conscience and evasions of his reason—proceeded to act as a man, feeling his allegiance to truth and the duty that he owed to God. He visited the Catholic Bishop, as the natural way of solving his remaining doubts, if, indeed, he had any of them left. He approached the fire, and the chill of the night air left him. He came to the light, and then he did not make believe that he was blind, or grope to lose what he had grasped.

"At the request of friends, he still waited for a time—not in perplexity, or excitement, or hesitation—but cheerfully, calmly, patiently, praying to God, and rejoicing at having found where the truth was. At the end of seven weeks, he again visited Bishop Bayley and was received into the fold of the Catholic church.

"We look upon Mr. Doane's conversion as the first fruits of an abundant harvest from the second generation of Puseylite Episcopalians. From those that, from being Protestants—Episcopalians or others—were attracted by the sacramental system of Christianity set forth so strongly by the Oxford men, and who had become what was called Puseyites, we have seen a multitude of the brightest and the best hastening on to the Catholic church as the only home of the true Christian doctrine.

We are now, perhaps, about to see another movement, consisting of those who have been educated from infancy in this delusive system of a false Catholicity. The doctrines paraded with disgusting hollowness by the fathers may be received readily by the sincere hearts of the children, and when they grow to men's estate experience and reason will form a sieve in which they will be thoroughly cribbled and the wheat be separated from the chaff. The grace of God will gather the wheat into his own garner, and the chaff will be scattered, in the meantime, to the four winds of Heaven.

Mr. Doane is the fourth Protestant Episcopal clergyman in the United States that has become a Catholic within six months.

Henry A. Wise,

To the Boston Abolitionist Committee.

HIS Hon. Mr. Wise, has had an invitation from the Boston Abolitionists, to lecture as one among a number of the distinguished personages, who are to lecture in the Tremont Temple, in Boston, the coming winter, on the subject of Slavery The following is his answer in the negative in terms that cannot be misunderstood:

ONLY, NEAR ONANCOCK,
Accomac County, Va., Oct. 5, 1855.

GENTLEMEN: On my return home, after an absence of some days, I found yours of the 19th ult., "respectfully inviting me to deliver one of the lectures of the course on Slavery, at Tremont Temple, in the City of Boston, on Thursday evening, January 10, 1856; or, if that time will not suit my engagements, you request that I will mention at once what Thursday evening, between the middle of December and the middle of March next, will best accommodate me."

Now, gentlemen, I desire to pay you due respect, yet you compel me to be very plain with you, and to say that your request, in every sense, is insulting and offensive to me. What subject of slavery have you "initiated" lectures upon? I cannot conceal it from myself that you have undertaken, in Boston, to discuss and to decide whether my property, in Virginia, ought to remain mine or not, and whether it shall be allowed the protection of laws, federal and State, wherever it may be carried or may escape in the United States; or whether it shall be destroyed by a higher law than constitutions and statutes!"

Who are you, to assume thus such a jurisdiction over a subject so delicate and already fixed in its relations by a solemn compact between the States, and by States which are sovereign? I will not obey your summons nor recognize your jurisdiction. You have no authority and no justification for thus calling me to account at the bar of your tribunal, and for thus arraigning an institution established by laws which do not reach you, and which you cannot reach, by calling on me to defend it.

You send me a card, to indicate the character of the lecturers. It reads:

"Admit the bearer and lady to the Independent Lectures on Slavery. Lecture Committee, S. G. Howe, T. Gilbert, George F. Williams, Henry T. Parker, W. Washburn, B. B. Mussey, W. B. Spooner, Jas. W. Stone."

It is indorsed:

"Lectures at the Tremont Temple, Boston, 1854-5. November 23, Hon. Charles Sumner, Rev. John Pierrpont, poem. December 7, Hon. Salmon P. Chase of Ohio. December 14, Hon. Anson Burlingame. December 21, Wendell Phillips, Esq. December 28, Cassius M. Clay, Esq. of Kentucky. January 4, Hon. Horace Greely. January 11, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. January 18, Hon. John P. Hale. January 25, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Esq. February 8, Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks, Jr. February 15, Hon. Lewis D. Campbell of Ohio. February 22, Hon. Samuel Houston of Texas. March 1, Hon. David Wilmot of Pennsylvania. March 8, Hon. Charles W. Upham. All Honorable and Squires, except those who are Reverends! The card does verily indicate their characters by simply naming them. And your letter, gentlemen, is franked by "C. Sumner, U. S. S." With these characteristics, I am at no loss to understand you and your purposes.

You say, "during the next season a larger number of gentlemen from the South will be invited," &c., &c. I regret it, if any others can be found in the slaveholding States to accept your invitation. You plead the example of Gen. Houston. It is the last I would follow. I have no doubt that you accorded very respectful attention to him last Winter, and were very grateful for his services in your cause.

You offer "one hundred and fifty dollars to be paid to the lecturer, he bearing his own expenses." Let me tell you that Tremont Temple cannot hold wealth enough to purchase one word of discussion from me, there, whether mine, here, shall be mine or not; but I am ready to volunteer, without money and without price, to suppress any insurrection and repel any invasion which threatens or endangers the State Rights of Virginia, or my individual rights under the laws and constitutions of my country or the sacred Union, which binds Slave States and Free together in one bond of National confederacy, and in separate bonds of Independent Sovereignties!

In short, gentlemen, I will not deliver one of the lectures of the course on slavery, at the Tremont Temple, in Boston, on Thursday evening, January 10th, 1856; and there will be no Thursday evening between the middle of December and the middle of March next, or between that and doomsday, which will best accommodate me, for that purpose.

I give you an immediate answer, and, at my earliest convenience, indicate to you that "the particular phase of the subject" that I will present is, deliberately: TO FIGHT IF WE MUST.

Your, obd't servant, HENRY A. WISE.

To Samuel G. Howe, Physician and Superintendent of the Blind Institution; John M. Clark, High Sheriff; Samuel May, Merchant; Philo Sanford, Ex-Treasurer State; Nath'l. B. Shurtleff, Physician and Antiquarian; Joseph Story, President Common Council; Thomas Russel, Judge; Jas. W. Stone, Physician.

Prescription and Tradition.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

A GOODLY portion there are in this diversified world of ours who set themselves up as judges of other man's consciences. They condemn, and would execute in many instances, if in their power, others of their fellows who are just as honest as themselves, but who perchance do not look through the same eyes—weigh with the same balances—or act from the same motives. In politics they set their stakes and mark their bounds; and every one that will not subscribe to, and figure within their darling circle, are in their estimation unworthy the name of brother, and fit only for the madhouse or the society of fools.

In medical science all physicians are quacks, except their very excellent Mr. ——, M.D., who is perfection personified. In other sciences the same proscription is manifest. In these they have their predilections and prejudices that draw and bind like a cart rope; but in nothing do they go to such extremities as in matters of religion. They mould their creeds as of cast-iron, and bind their opinions in accordance thereto, not with a cart-rope, but with a chain cable. It is not because they investigate and make up their judgment as the final result of their deliberation that makes them thus tenacious of the principles they hold, and condemn every thing differing with them; but it is by that more questionable qualification—tradition. I believe I am safe in saying that not one out of fifty, and I might say ninety-nine out of a hundred of the old school of orthodoxy, or what is commonly called Christianity, that suffer themselves to think for themselves. Their fathers have inherited those good old principles from their fathers, back into the dark ages; and as their fathers have done so do they. This system will apply generally to the Gentile nations, who are at this time about in the same position in respect to these traditions that the Jews were when the Saviour commenced the dispensation of the gospel on the earth in the meridian of time. They (the Jews) were desperately averse to such innovation, as Jesus and his apostles made upon the traditions that they had inherited from their fathers whom they reverenced, and whom they admitted for granted must be right. They called these innovators wine-bibbers, gluttons, stirrers-up of sedition, and mischief-makers—that caused ruptures in families by baptising here and there one of a family or neighborhood into their strange system of things. It was no doubt humiliating in the extreme for the learned, and men of standing in that day, to part with a father, mother, brother or sister who joined this strange sect that was everywhere spoken against—"the filth and offscouring of all things." They gnashed their teeth in rage on those men that were the cause of all this; and what aggravated them still more, was that these imposters, as they supposed, did all these things under the garb of sanctity. This must have been horrid in their eyes, when we contemplate their piety and strict adherence to the letter of the law of their fathers, the prophets. Their righteousness forbad that they should tolerate such innovations upon their piety, such gross wickedness and absurdities. Hence, they slew them by every invention of torture that their imagination could suggest. And their leader they hung between two thieves, as though it was not enough for them to take his life, but to insure his rank among the scoundrels of his time. Oh, false tradition! what hast thou not done? You have stoned the prophets, martyred the saints, and crucified the Son of God. Yes! this you have done through the medium of the Jews in the earlier history of the world; and would to God we could stop here—could close the scene of blood that has marked your path through the subsequent history of your progress!

But no! Your pavillion rested not alone in the midst of that peculiar people, but the Gentiles in their day have afforded a soil no less congenial to your requirements than that of their illustrious predecessors. Those affirmed that if they had lived in the days of their fathers they would not have stoned the prophets and those that were sent unto them. These say in the nineteenth century that if they had lived in the days of those, they would not have persecuted the saints of God, whose only fault was that they preached an innovation—a religion differing with that furnished by tradition. No, say the Gentile nations, we could not have had the heart to have done as those wicked Jews have done. We believe that that Jesus whom they slew and hung upon a tree is the Son of God—the Saviour of mankind; that the gospel and plan of salvation taught by him and his apostles are the principles of eternal truth. We are willing to show our faith by our works, and build chapels to their honor. We have our St. Peter's, St. Paul's, and St. Bartholomew Chapels, and we, with uplifted hands in holy horror, repudiate the deeds of those wicked persecutors and exterminators of such good and holy men.

Oh! ye stiffnecked Gentiles! ye blind guides, fill ye up the cup of your iniquity, as the prophets have said you should! Garnish the sepulchres of the apostles of the first century, and slay those of the nineteenth that are sent unto you with the same message that they bore to the Jews whom you condemn. If you should fail to do it, you would not fulfill the words of those you admit to be prophets. The Kingdom of God must be established in the last days; and if you did not raise your hand against it, the scriptures could not be fulfilled in you; and your kingdoms and crowns be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing floor before its mighty progress. If you did not do as those Jews have done, you could not "fall through the same unbelief." Without your fall salvation could not go to them as it came to you, through their fall: and their deliverers cannot come out of Zion until "the fullness of your iniquity be come in." John's vision of those under the altar, who had been beheaded for their testimony, cannot be fulfilled until you have slain their brethren in the same cause and for the same testimony that they bore. Then speed ye in your onward course! spit out your anathemas upon the saints of God while you may, for the time will come when the saints will inherit the earth, and you cannot do it. Japheth can but a short time longer occupy the tents of Shem.

"For again shall the children of Judah sing
To the lay of a happier time,
And strike the harp with a golden string
'Neath the sun of an eastern clime."

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. City,
August 31, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR,—Since my letter of the 31st of July, the weather has continued remarkably dry; a few slight showers of rain served to comfort the crops a little. Corn has grown very rapidly, wherever it could get sufficient moisture. The peach crop in this city is suffering severely from the drouth, as also the gardens generally. The people of Provo, have made considerable sugar from a saccharine deposit found on the leaves of the Cottonwood and other trees. Several thousand pounds of good sugar have been made from these deposits; about a week since, a smart shower of rain put a stop to the business by washing the sweets from the leaves.

Part of the Nauvoo Brass Band have taken a tour through the Northern counties, and they have given concerts in most of the settlements, much to the gratification and amusement of the people. The Editor of the News has been confined to his room for a month past with inflamation of the eyes, which have been very painful; this inflamation of the eye has been quite prevalent in this city and throughout the Territory.

The weather continues very hot in the middle of the day, but the nights have been more cool than last month; the thermometer frequently stands at 96° in the office, in the middle of the day. Fires have done considerable damage to timber and grass in the mountains; the country has been burned over for 400 miles north of the California road, destroying grass and timber, and will bring a scarcity of food to the digger Indians, who live principally on grass seeds during the winter.

Dr. Bernhisel has just visited Fillmore City, and is much pleased with the State House, which is progressing, and will no doubt be completed in time for the meeting of the Legislative Assembly on the 2d Monday of December next. Only one wing (60 feet by 40) of this building is in course of erection, at present.

At Provo and Springville, where water is plenty, there is a good prospect for a late corn crop. At Box Elder, in the north of Weber county the people have been recently visited with myriads of grasshoppers, destroying their corn and late wheat.

Elder Thomas Tanner, foreman of the blacksmith shop, in the Public Works, died on the 2nd of August; he has been many years in the service of the church, and was a skilful mechanic, and much respected.

Dr. Hurt, U. S. Indian Agent, has just held a general Council with the Indians on Mary's River, (or Humboldt.) He concluded a treaty with them, which, if confirmed on the part of the U. S., and adhered to by emigrants, will give security to travellers in that region. He made them many presents.

Elder Parley P. Pratt arrived in this city from California, accompanied by Elder James Hawkins, and other returned Missionaries, on Saturday the 18th inst.

For the last month there has been considerable complaint among the people from diarrhœa, and there have been some few cases of Cholera Morbus. These diseases, I presume, are natural to a volcanic region. Bishop Edward Hunter has been confined to his room for two weeks, from an attack of this kind, and I have had to quit business for one week for the same reason.

Messrs. Gilbert & Gerrish, have opened a mercantile house in South Temple Street; their third train has arrived, and it is apparently a heavy concern.

Livingston & Co., have also received 46 wagons.

On the 27th inst., the California Mail arrived here bringing a letter from Elder J. L. Heywood, who is at San Francisco, with his health much improved. Also a letter from Elder Jno. Steele, of the Los Vegas Mission, stating that the crops there are very promising. They can find but very little good timber, however, within 40 miles of the settlement. Yours truly, GEO. A. SMITH.

Salt Lake Correspondence.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
April 30th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Times and Transcript.

A wandering disposition induced me last summer to cross the plains and Rocky Mountains, and pass the winter in this City of the "Saints." Presuming that a letter from the "valleys of the mountains" will be acceptable, I have concluded to detail some of the observations I have made during a winter's sojourn among those "peculiar" people with whom I have had the rare privilege of associating on terms of cordiality.

There is so much prejudice existing in the world against them, I can scarcely expect to remove it from the minds of any, but I consider it due to them to assert, that as a community, they are the most peaceable, law-abiding and moral people to be found anywhere.

Government officers, both civil and military, who arrived here last autumn, were kindly received and hospitably entertained as long as they confined themselves to their proper spheres; but some pursued a course very objectionable to the authorities of the Church, which had a tendency to produce an estrangement which led to ill-feeling; most of them had left, and are now en route for California, taking with them several females, whose loss, 'tis said, will not however be felt.

The past has been a very open winter, and the spring, so far, highly favorable to vegetation, and should no late frost occur, crops, including fruit, will be abundant, unless cut off by grasshoppers, which have already made their appearance extensively.

Col. Steptoe left yesterday by the northern route, to overtake his command, and it is understood that since he has been promoted on the army list, he will decline the Governorship of Utah. His high-toned character and gentlemanly bearing make him a general favorite, and he carries with him the respect and best wishes of the leading men of this city.

RADNOR.

Sketch of the Life and Services of Dr. Kane.

WE consider this a particularly appropriate time to give a brief sketch of the life of Dr. Kane, now that he is before the world in a more conspicuous position than he has ever occupied before. He was born in Philadelphia, on the 3d of February, 1822, so that he is at present about thirty-three years old. In 1843 he graduated, after a seven years' course of studies, at the Pennsylvania Medical University, and soon after he entered the United States navy as assistant surgeon. While acting in this capacity he was appointed as physician in the first embassy to China from this country. His naturally adventurous disposition led him to project a visit to the interior, but the difficulties were so numerous that he could not accomplish his purpose as fully as he desired. He, however, succeeded in travelling over a large section of the country; and before his return he visited the Philippines, Ceylon and other islands in that region, and even succeeded in penetrating into the interior of India, his travels through which were full of adventures and perils; but perils to a man of Dr. Kane's temperament appear only to have the effect of making them more attractive. While in India, he descended the crater of the Tael of Lerzon, suspended by a bamboo rope from a projecting crag which hovered above the interior scoria and debris, over two hundred feet. This act of daring nearly cost him his life, for the natives regarded it as a sacrilegious act, which could only be effaced by the death of the suspicious offender. Dr. Kane, however, eluded their pious vengeance, and afterwards went to the Sandwich Islands with the celebrated Baron Loe, of Prussia, where he was attacked by a whole tribe of the savage inhabitants of those islands. Against these he successfully defended himself; but the hardships he and his companion subsequently underwent were more than the latter could endure, and he sunk under them. Dr. Kane alone passed over to Egypt, ascended the Nile as far as the confines of Nubia, and remained during a whole season among the ruins of ancient Egypt, in antiquarian research. Leaving Egypt, he visited Greece next, which he traversed on foot, returning to the United States in 1846. When he arrived his love of advanture would not allow him to remain inactive, and he applied, almost immediately after his return, to the government for a commission to Mexico. Failing to obtain this, he accepted an appointment on board of a United States vessel, bound to the African coast. Arriving there, he could not resist the temptation to see the slave marts of Whydah, but was met in his journey by that terrible enemy of the white man, the African fever. He was brought home in a state of extreme ill health and emaciation; but although almost unable to move, he made his way to Washington, from Philadelphia, against the earnest entreaties of his family, presented himself with shaven head and tottering limbs to President Polk, and demanded what had before been refused him, a commission to Mexico. The President could not deny his request, and entrusted him with important despatches for the Commander-in-Chief, General Scott. He was given as an escort through Mexico the notorious company of Colonel Dominguez, who started with him from Vera Cruz. As they were approaching Nopaluca, near Puebla, they were informed by a Mexican that a large body of Mexicans soldiers were on their way to intercept them, and at that time were but a short distance off. Dominguez refused to proceed any further, and was about retreating, when Dr. Kane commanded him to remain with him, threatening the vengeance of his government if his company should leave him. Having succeeded in preventing him from turning his back on the enemy, he finally induced him to attack them. Placing himself at the head of his escort, Dr. Kane took advantage of a rising ground to sweep down upon the Mexicans, who were then thrown into confusion by the intrepidity of his charge. Rallying, however, they made a stout resistance, and it was not until after a severe skirmish that they were defeated, and the principal part of them taken prisoners. These consisted of a number of distinguished officers in the Mexican army, who were on their way to join their commander. Among them was General Torrejon, who led the cavalry at Buena Vista, and Major General Antonia Gaona and his son. The latter was dangerously wounded by Dr. Kane, who, in a personal encounter, ran him through the body with his sword. When the skirmish was over, the Dr. finding that his antagonist was seriously injured, had recourse to his surgical skill to save his life, and the result proved that it was of no ordinary character. With no other instrument than the bent prong of a fork and a piece of packthread, he tied up an artery from which the life of the young soldier was fast ebbing, and placed him in a condition that he could be conveyed safely to Puebla. No sooner, however, had he concluded this humane act, than he was informed by young Gaona that he overheard Dominguez say he would take the life of his father, because he had, at one time, put him in prison. Dr. Kane instantly interfered, placed himself between his escort and his prisoners, and threatened to shoot the first man who attempted the life of Major Gaona. Dominguez became infuriated, ordered his men to charge; but the first man of the company, named Pallaseoz, fell before the fire of Dr. Kane, who plied his revolver with fatal effect upon all who came within its reach. With a severe lance wound in his thigh, he managed to keep them at bay, and saved his prisoners from their fury until he arrived in Puebla, where they were placed under the charge of Col. Childs. Dr. Kane, whose wounds were very serious, was detained here for many days, during which he was attended and nursed with the most tender care by the family of Major Gaona, who is now among the most ardent friends and admirers of our noble and gifted countryman. There is one thing in this romantic adventure which we should not omit to mention. Dr. Kane thought, and still thinks, more of the surgical skill which he displayed at that skirmish than of his capturing the prisoners, or defending them from the treachery of his escort.—[N. Y. Herald.

Two Week's Later From California.

ARRIVAL OF THE NORTHERN LIGHT.

THE Steamship Northern Light, Captain E. L. Tinklepaugh, arrived on Saturday evening, 13th inst., from San Juan, with California dates to Sept. 20, with 436 passengers, and $461,528 on freight.

The Know Nothings have carried the State in the recent election. They have a majority of one or three in the Senate and about twenty in the Assembly.

The new administration goes into office on New Year's day. Nearly all the mining counties, particularly those in the north, went for Johnson. San Francisco and the southern coast counties of Santa Barbara, Los Angeles, San Diego, and San Bernardino, went for Bigler.

On the morning of the 14th inst. the Nicaragua steamship Uncle Sam arrived from San Juan del Sud, with the appalling report that out of 650 passengers 120 had died of cholera, and there were 20 cases of persons still sick, who were taken to the hospital, and of whom 7 have since died. The passengers assert that instead of 120 there were more than 200 deaths on board.

A fire occurred in Marysville on the 9th inst. The loss was $7,900.

A conflagration took place in Weaverville, Trinity county, on the 7th inst., and the consequences were the destruction of fifty houses and a loss of $200,000.

There was a great conflagration in the town of Grass Valley on the 14th inst. Three hundred buildings were destroyed, and the loss was estimated at $350,000.

THE CHOLERA ON BOARD THE UNCLE SAM.

The San Francisco-Transcript says: On the 14th September, the Nicaragua steamer Uncle Sam arrived at the wharf at the foot of Jackson street. Soon after her arrival, rumors were circulated that the cholera had raged on board of the boat to a fearful extent. We have endeavored to gather authentic particulars in regard to the matter. Thus far our efforts have not been as successful as we could wish. The captain reports at the Custom House, the death of 103 adults, 8 children and 9 seamen—making 120 in all. We can find no passenger who does not insist that at least 200 perished, and some appear confident that the number was much larger. The law requires the captain to report the number dying on his vessel, but those dying in port are not included in the number, and this may, in a measure, account for the discrepancy.

After arriving at the wharf, twenty-four patients were taken to the State Marine Hospital, of whom it is thought not more than one-third will survive. Many of the passengers set the number of the deceased as high as 250, but this is, no doubt, an exageration.

Among the incidents on board, we hear of one case of apparent hardship: A young lady by the name of Mrs. Honora White, whose husband resides at San Jose, was taken sick of fever a few days before the steamer arrived at this port. She died two hours before the arrival of the steamer at the wharf. Against all the remonstrances of her friends, the remains of the unfortunate lady were taken from her state-room and plunged into the sea.

Much of the sickness on board is attributed to the imprudence of the passengers, many of whom crossed the Isthmus on foot, and indulged freely in eating and drinking on the Pacific side.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The dates from Honolulu are to August 25th, An extraordinary session of the Aavanian Legislature opened on July 30th. The session lasted thirteen days, and it appropriated $447,939 73 the necessary expenses of the several departments of the Government, and for special Public works, and payment of certain claims. The appropriation under the head of the Civil List amounted to $30,915. The first item of this was "For His Majesty's Privy Purse, including expenses of Royal State and salary of Physicians, $16,000." The Queen Dowager is allowed $1,000. The "incidental expenses" of the Privy Council is set down at $50.

It is proposed to erect a monument to the late King.

The volcanoes are again very active, and the sights presented by the eruptions are described as unusually grand.

The Polynesian publishes the official letter of intimation by Kamehameha IV. to Queen Victoria, of the death of his royal predecessor, and his accession to the throne; and also the reply of Her Britanic Majesty, in which the Queen offers her "sincere congratulations" on the subject, and assures His Hawaiian Majesty of the "lively interest" taken by Victoria in the welfare and independence of his dominions. The monarchs mutually conclude their epistles by singning themselves "Your Good Friend."

APOLOGY.—King Bomba has apologized to the English Government for recent atrocities committed by the Neapolitan police.

Powder Mill Explosion—Seven Persons Killed and Wounded.

PORTLAND, Me., Oct. 12, 1855.

THE powder mill at Gorham took fire this morning at ten o'clock, and blew up, killing seven men and wounding several others. The fire took in the press mill, which was blown to atoms. The mill was formerly owned by Oliver Whipple of Lowell, Massachusetts, whose brother and son are among the killed. The present owners are G. G. Newhall & Co. of Boston. The names of the killed, as far as ascertained, are Franklin Hawkes of Windham, George Whipple, James Whipple, Samuel Phinney and John Sweet. The mill has been very actively employed for some time, running, night and day.

The Suspected Murder at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 12, 1855.

THE colored man, Randolph, arrested on suspicion of the murder of his wife, was carried to prison this morning to look upon her mutilated remains. He showed some emotion, but soon recovered himself. THE steamship Orizaba has arrived at this port with dates from the City of Mexico to the 5th inst.

General Alvarez had been elected President by the College at Cuernavaca, but the military power will deny him entrance into the capital, and hard fighting is anticipated.

Vega had withdrawn from civil power, having refused to obey the orders of Alvarez to arrest the fugitive Ministers of Santa Anna, and arm the National Guard. His predecessor in office had again assumed his duties.

The rumors that were current to the effect that the American minister had furnished money and arms to Alvarez and signed a protectorate have been denied by both Gen. Alvarez and Mr. Gadsden.

Dr. Kane, accompanied by the secretary of the navy, paid his respects to the President to-day. He has made an important correction in his official report of the expedition, which should read that a surface of three thousand miles, instead of three hundred square miles of open sea, free from ice, &c., had been discovered.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 15, 1855.

THE steamship Philadelphia, from Havana on the 12th inst., arrived here to day, bringing the California mails of the 20th ult., which had reached that city from Aspinwall.

Horrible Double Murder at Cumberland, Md.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 16, 1855.

Dr. Hadell, of Cumberland, and his clerk, named Graff, were both murdered on Sunday last, near that place, by a German. They were enticed out to attend a sick woman, and their bodies were found this morning horribly mutilated. The murderer has been arrested, and the clothing, watch and pocketbooks of the victims were found in his possession. The Doctor was formerly Commissioner of Health in this city.

The head of Dr. Hadell was found buried at some distance from his body. It seems that after the murder of the Doctor, the murderer enticed his student, Graff, away, and then murdered him, so as to be able to rob the office, which he did on Sunday night, The murderer is a German pedlar, who broke jail recently at West Alexander.

Graff has a mother in New York. Hadell leaves a wife and two children, now on a visit to Baltimore.

The Case of Passmore Williamson.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17, 1855.

APPLICATION has been made by the counsel of Passmore Williamson for permission to file an affidavit made by him. Judge Kane decided that the proper mode of procedure was to take a rule to show cause why such a paper should not be filed. The counsel refused to do this and no further action was had.

Later from Texas.

Capt. Callahan of the Texas Rangers had had a battle with a party of 2,700 Mexicans and Indians. Four Texans and forty of the enemy were killed, when the latter retreated. Capt. Callahan has called on Texas for assistance to exterminate the Indians, who threaten to kill every white man they encounter. Capt. C. was expecting another attack.

Negro National Convention—Funny Proceedings.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17, 1855.

DURING the session of the National Colored Convention to-day, resolutions were offered expressing admiration at the conduct of Passmore Williamson and sympathy for his injured family, and appointing a Committee of Five to wait upon Mr. Williamson and present him with a copy of the resolutions. Frederick Douglass made a speech, objecting to the resolutions and instancing the colored men who rescued Col. Wheeler's slaves as more entitled to thanks. He denounced Col. Wheeler as a villain and scoundrel. The resolutions were adopted, as well as others honoring the conduct of the men who assisted in the escape.

During the afternoon session a resolution was submitted imposing an assessment of one dollar on each delegate. Many members objected and a scene of confusion ensued. Julius Cæsar Morrell intimated that certain persons had been living luxuriously upon contributions thus made. For himself, he never had one cent, although engaged for nineteen years in the cause. He was sorry he could not say as much for some others. Fred Douglass believing himself alluded to, made a short retort and said the opposition to the assessment was mean and disgraceful. The resolution was adopted. Most of the session was occupied in discussing a proposition to form industrial Unions.

A NANTUCKET whaling vessel has discovered a new island in the South Pacific Ocean. It is situated about two hundred and fifty miles South of Desolation Island, and the ship which encountered it took from it, in less than a week's time, four hundred barrels of sea elephant oil. Two othter ships are said to be now in course of preparation to return thither, for the purpose of profiting by this valuable discovery.

THREE monster shells have been landed at Woolwich, bearing each the following dimensions: diameter, 3 feet 9 inches; weight 1 ton 6 cwt. They are the first of a number of that species which had been ordered for the purpose of being despatched to Sebastopol for the reduction of that fortress. An experimental gun has likewise been founded at Liverpool, for projecting these enormous missiles, weighing no less than 20 tons.

WASHING PREPARATION.—Of all the preparations I have used, and they have been numerous, I give the preference to the following: Put one pound of saltpetre into a gallon of water and keep it in a corked jug; two table-spoonsful for a pint of soap—soak, wash and boil as usual. This bleaches the clothes beautifully without injuring the fabric. It is particularly valuable for removing grass stains from the knees of the little boy's pantaloons.

One Week Later from Europe.

THE Steamer Atlantic arrived at this port on the 18th inst., bringing one week later news as follows:

ENGLAND.

The Bank of England has raised the rate of interest another 1 1-2 per cent, and it now stands at 5 1-2 per cent. There has been a good deal of commercial uneasiness in consequence, particularly as the stock of bullion has been decreasing at an alarming rate for several weeks past, the Bank of France buying up all the specie it can. Several of the Journals are crying out for a repeal of Sir Robert Peel's Bank act. The stock of gold and bullion in the Bank of England on the 4th was £12,368,255.

Deslisle, Janvrin & Deslisle, merchants and bankers of London, have failed. Large advances in Canada, and disappointment in receiving remittances have led to the suspension. Liabilities, £400,000.

The Committee of Mexican landholders in London issued the following Circular on October 3d: "The Committee have received advices from Mr. Whitehead, of Mexico, down to the 5th ult. The new government had, it appears, re-appointed Colonel Facio Mexican Financial Agent here. The packet brings for the dividend fund $22,500 from Tampico, and $24,000 from Vera Cruz, addressed to the Mexican Financial Agent."

In the British army Generals Combermere, Earl of Shafford, and Viscount Hardinge, have been made Field Marshals.

FRANCE.

The Empress of France was in very poor health. The Emperor was about to visit Boulogne in company with Abdel-Kadir.

La Presse says that corn has at length reached its maximum price, and that the highest quotations have brought offers of supply from all quarters. Large arrivals of foreign flour were shortly expected. The very day on which the articles about flour appeared in the Moniteur, a house at Havre sent a large order to New York.

AUSTRIA.

The project for the organization of a new bank at Vienna has been submitted. The State will give the bank a mortgage on State domains of 175,000,000 of florins, with right to receive the revenues and to alienate the domains.

SPAIN.

A bill was read in the Spanish Cortes on the 3d inst., fixing the contingent of the army for 1856 at 70,000 men. The Cortes approved a bill admitting political refugees into Spain. No further bulletins have been issued respecting the Queen's health, which was so much improved that her Majesty has determined to return forthwith to Madrid. The troops and National Guards are to form on the occasion. It is stated that the Duke de la Victoria returned from the Escurial, completely satisfied with the conference which he had with the Queen, and that all difficulties in that quarter are now at an end.

PORTUGAL.

The young King of Portugal is rendering himself popular with the troops and people generally, by visiting barracks, hospitals, &c., when least expected, and not sparing his censures of unsatisfactory rations or other irregularities.

DENMARK.

The new Constitution of Denmark was promulgated on October 4. Prince Ferdinand, the Kings uncle, having refused his signature, had been dismissed from the chief command of Zealand and the Islands Adjacent.

TURKEY.

Accounts have been received from Constantinople to the 24th of September. 13,000 men of the Aglo-Turkish contingent have left for Varna, where they will take up their winter quarters. Omar Pasha is concentrating 50,000 men near Chefkatil, a fort on the frontier of Asia, which the Turks took from the Russians at the commencement of the war.

RUSSIA.

A letter from St. Petersburg states that the evening before the Emperor's departure for the South a grand council was held, at which it was decided to carry on the war with the utmost energy.

The Emperor went from Moscow to Nicolaicoff, the great Russian naval depot on the Euxine, where, on the 23d ult., accompanied by the Grand Dukes Constantine, Nicholas and Michael, he made an inspection of the troops, fortifications and dockyards. The fortifications, it is stated, are to be greatly strengthened and extended.

Bp telegraph we learn that the Czar has left Nicolaicoff for the Crimea; his object in proceeding thither being doubtless to inspire his forces by his presence, and turn the tide in favor of Russia.

Various Russian and Prussian accounts state that the war is to be carried on with the greatest determination, and that the Crimea is to be defended to the last extremety.

General Mouravieff, who is now in Asia, will, it is intimated, take the place of Prince Gortschakoff, who is to become Minister of War.

Moscow advices state that 193,000 men have been added to the military force of Russia.

THE WAR.

The Times correspondent, writing on the 21st, is not at all sanguine that the Russians will be forced to abandon their position on the approach of winter.

Prince Gortschakoff, on the 23d ult., reported that 26,000 men had been landed at Eupatoria, and that on the 26th this force was increased to 32,000 men. She has since reported that "imposing masses," of the allied troops continue to threaten the left wing of the Russian army, from the valley of Baidar, whilst a force amounting to between 30,000 and 40,000 men threatens the right wing of the Russians from Eupatoria.

The correspondent of the Daily News takes a different view. He says:

"The belief gains ground that the Russians are preparing to evacuate the north side of the harbor of Sebastopol. The extensive earthworks which have been lately constructed, and others in course of construction, are regarded as simply intended to cover the retreat, and protect the rear guard of the Russian army. Carts have come in empty from the Mackenzie heights, and have gone away laden, it is supposed with provisions.

"These arrangements are supposed to indicate an intention to retire. It is still understood that a combined movement is to take place against the enemy's position on the Mackenzie heights. A direct attack from Bakshi-Serai is spoken of, the approach from the South being made by a route which is kept secret, and which will have the effect of avoiding the enemy's fortified entrenchments."

In an order which Prince Gortschakoff has addressed to his soldiers the Prince admits a loss of from 500 to 1,000 men per day during the last thirty days of the siege. To continue to defend the south side, he says, would have been to expose the troops to be uselesly murdered. He concludes by saying:

"It is not Sebastopol we have left in the enemy's hands, but burning ruins that we have set fire to ourselves. Sebastopol enchained us to its walls—with its fall we acquire freedom of action and a new war commences."

Preparations were making by the British and French engineers, by the sinking of immense mines, to destroy the splendid docks, arsenals, and shipbuilding yards of Sebastopol and thus uproot the place as a naval stronghold. Though there is no official information on the subject—the allied generals, for obvious reasons, being silent as to their future operations—there are various premonitions of a vigorous campaign in the open field.

It is uncertain and will remain, so for some little time, which of these threatened attacks is the real, but there is quite enough in Prince Gortschakoff's despatches to show that he considers himself seariously threatened in front and on both flanks. Another significent fact is that the English transport corps are in full activity; that the field batteries of the artillery are in marching order; that large numbers of the French cavalry have embarked for Eupatoria; and by the telegraphic accounts from Vienna, it is stated, that the allied fleets had left Sebastopol on some secret expedition.

Marshal Pelissier reports, on the 1st inst., that a brilliant contest of cavalry was fought on the 20th ult., at Koughil, five leagues northeast of Eupatoria, in which the Russian cavalry, commanded by General Korf, were defeated by the French cavalry, under General Allonville. Six guns, twelve ammunition wagons and a campaign forge, with all the appurtenances and 160 prisoners, of whom two were officers, were captured, besides 250 horses of the Russian Hulans. Fifty of the Russians were killed; among them was Colonel Androwsky. Of the French, six were killed and twenty-seven wounded.

The allies are reported to have established 120 mortars at Sebastopol, with which it was expected they would soon render the north side untenable.

IT is stated that the parents of Baron St. Andre, late French Consul at Philadelphia, who was killed in the Burlington disaster, have commenced a suit for damages against the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company, in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Charles Le Boutallier, one of the injured by the same accident, has also commenced a suit in the same court.

THE EMPEROR LOUIS NAPOLEON AND THE SCOTTISH LANGUAGE.—Mr. Henry Scott Riddell, of Teviothead, the well-known author of "Scotland Yet," and many other esteemed and popular national songs, was recently, on the recommendation of a clergyman of the Established Church, employed to translate the Gospel of Matthew into the Lowland Scotch. Mr. Riddell finished his task a few weeks ago, and he has now been informed that his employer is no other than the Emperor of the French. The Emperor, he has been given to understand, takes a curious interest, in language, and it would appear is especially interested in the older language of Caladonia, the country of the progenitors of the Empress.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins,' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destrayed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais dès visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire á l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les écès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood, and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

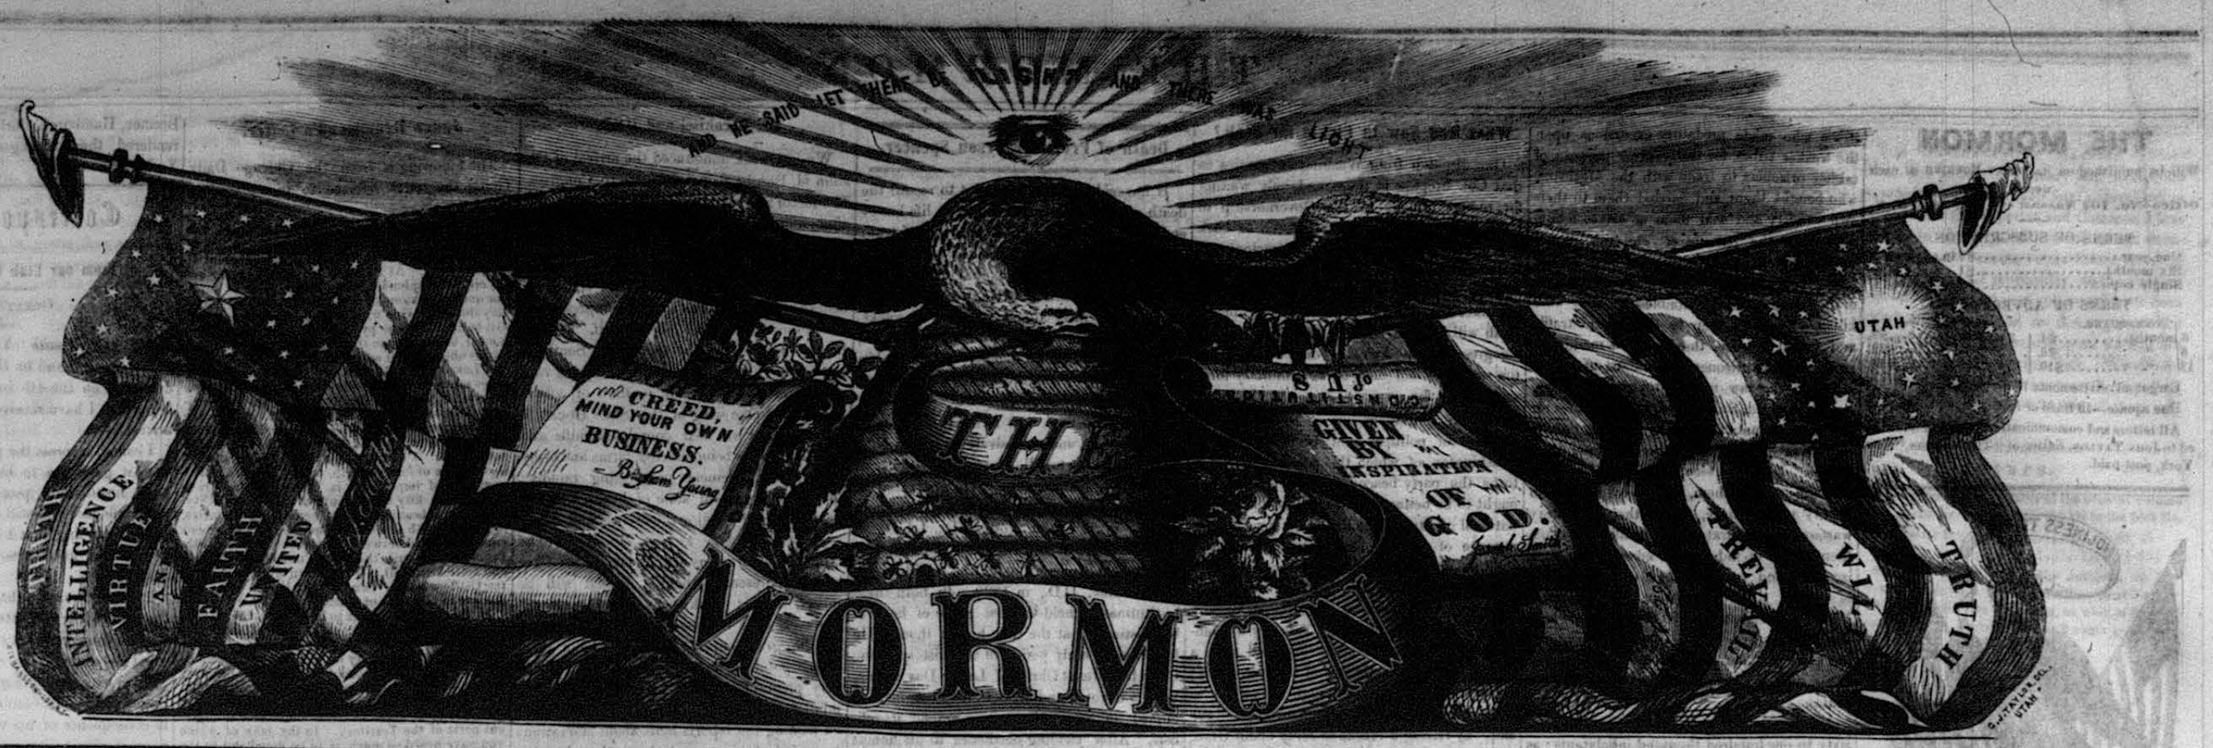
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Where Shall We Seek Salvation?

BY EMILY HILL.

Where shall we seek salvation? Oh! whither shall we go,
The principles of righteousness and saving truth to know?
For full and free salvation, oh! whither shall we fly,
If we leave the ancient Gospel, and its power and truth deny?

Where shall we seek salvation? oft the question will arise,
When censur'd by the pious world, professing to be wise;
When wrathful eyes are eloquent with scorn tongues cannot speak,
And they caution us with earnest zeal a purer faith to seek.

Then, rejoicing with full confidence in what as truth we know,
We solicit for a surer and a better way to go,
But none, oh none can tell us of so good and firm a track
As the one reveal'd to Joseph—e'en the Gospel given back;

Which saveth us in every way, and cleanseth from all sin
The honest and the pure in heart that are adopted in
By water and by covenant, the spirit and the blood;
And through our faithfulness we'll reign as Kings and Priests to God.

High heaven's eternal Priesthood, in rich majesty and might,
Do hold on earth the keys of power, of knowledge, truth, and light,
And by their counsels we are led, and through them we have power
To overcome and to rejoice in every trying hour.

This, this is sure salvation, that, experienc'd every day,
Perfects the Saints in righteousness, and leads us in the way
Of wisdom and felicity, and tends to purify
And fit us for salvation, e'en celestial, pure, and high.

THE LAW OF PLANETARY ROTATION,

DISCOVERED BY PROFESSOR ORSON PRATT.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir:—Permit me to announce to the world, through your valuable paper, an astronomical discovery, made by me on the eleventh day of November, 1854. I allude to a law governing planetary rotation. Telescopic observation reveals to us the fact that many of the bodies of the solar system, not only have a progressive velocity in their orbits, but a rotative motion upon their axis. Heretofore, the only means known to astronomers, by which to determine the exact period of a planet's rotation, has been a careful observation of the movements of spots upon its surface. For instance, spots are discerned on the eastern limb of a planet's disc, which, instead of remaining stationary, gradually move across the disc in a westerly direction, disappear for a few hours at the western limb, and again re-appear in their former position on the eastern limb. These spots are believed to be portions of the surface of a planet darker than the adjacent parts, and carried around by a rotation of the planet on its own axis from west to east.

By such observation, the period of the rotation of the planet Mars has been determined to be 24h. 37m. 23s. mean solar time; Jupiter's period, 9h. 54m. 12s.; and Saturn's period, 10h. 29m. 17s. Mercury and Venus are situated so near the sun that it is extremely difficult to distinctly discern spots upon their surfaces. It is believed, however, by some astronomers that their observations are sufficiently exact to assign to Mercury a rotative period of about 24h. 5m., and to Venus a period of 23h. 21m. 21s. It is still maintained by some eminent observers that there is a small degree of uncertainty remaining as to the rotative periods of Mercury and Venus. Uranus is supposed by some observers to rotate on its axis in 9h. 30m.; but this planet is so far distant from us that it is generally believed that the present powers of the telescope are incapable of revealing any spots upon its surface sufficiently distinct to determine whether it has a rotation or not. Whether the asteroids and the planet Neptune rotate, the astronomical instruments of the present day are utterly inadequate to determine.

Do all the planets of the solar system rotate? Observation has, as yet, been entirely unable to answer this question. It is supposed from analogy that rotation is as extended in its operations as the progressive motions of planets in their orbits—that every planet turns upon its axis, producing the agreeable alternations of light and darkness, day and night. But how to demonstrate this analogical supposition—how to ascertain the periods of rotation of such planets as are beyond the reach of observation, has been a problem unsolved by the astronomical world.

Many eminent and distinguished astronomers have eagerly sought after some law, connecting the rotative periods of the planets with some known data of the solar system, such as their distances from the sun—their orbitual velocities—their masses, &c.; but all their laborious researches to develope such law have not been crowned with success—the law of planetary rotation has eluded their grasp.

Firmly believing, from my early youth, that the diurnal periods of the planets were the results of some hidden law, I have endeavored, at different times, to discover the same, so as to determine the periods of rotation by calculation instead of observation. After many fruitless researches in regard to the original causes of planetary motion, I was led by the indications of certain hypotheses to seek for the law of rotation connected with the masses and diameters of the planets, or, in other words with their densities. These investigations resulted in the development of the following beautiful law:

The Cube Roots of the Densities of the Planets are as the Square Roots of their Periods of Rotation;

Or, which amounts to the same thing—The Squares of the Cube Roots of the Densities of the Planets are as their Periods of Rotation.

But as the densities of globes are proportional to their masses or quantities of matter, divided by their volumes or by the cubes of their diameters, it follows that the rotation of the planets, considered as spheres, is proportional to their masses and diameters. The law, therefore, may be expressed in terms of the masses and diameters, as follows:

The Squares of the Cube Roots of the Masses of the Planets, divided by the Squares of their Diameters, are as their Periods of Rotation.

To illustrate the correctness of this law, I will give the following examples:

Example 1. Given the mass of the earth equal to 1; its equatorial diameter, 7925.5 miles; its period of rotation, 23h. 56m. 4.090475s. mean solar time, which is equal to one absolute sidereal day: also the mass of the planet Mercury equal to 0.0627694; and its diameter 3140 miles; it is required to find the period of Mercury's rotation.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(0.0627694)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(3140)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 24h.5m.$$

Example 2. Given the mass of Venus equal to 0.9043346; its diameter 7800 miles; and the mass, diameter, and rotative period of the earth, as in the first example. Required the period of the rotation of Venus.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(0.9043346)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7800)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 23h.21m.21s$$

Example 3. Given the mass of Mars equal to 0.145337; its diameter, 4108.26 miles; and the mass, diameter, and rotation of the earth, as in the first example. Required the period of the rotation of Mars.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(0.145337)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(4108.26)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 24h.37m.23s$$

Example 4. Given the mass of Jupiter equal to 371.7547; its diameter, 88592.7 miles; those of the earth as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Jupiter.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(371.7547)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(88592.7)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 9h.54m.12s.$$

Example 5. Given the mass of Saturn and its rings equal to 289.0281; its diameter, 79160 miles; those of the earth as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Saturn.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(289.0281)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(79160)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 10h.29m.17s$$

Example 6. Given the mass of Uranus equal to 20.625488; its diameter, 34500 miles; those of the earth as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Uranus.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(20.625488)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(34500)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 9h.30m.$$

Example 7. Given the mass of Neptune equal to 26.87671; its diameter, 41500 miles; those of the earth as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Neptune.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(26.87671)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(41500)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 7h.49m.57s.$$

Example 8. Given the mass of Neptune equal to 26.87671; its diameter, 37500 miles; those of the earth remaining as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Neptune.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(7925.5)^{\frac{2}{3}}} : \frac{(26.87671)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(37500)^{\frac{2}{3}}} :: 23h.56m.4.090475s. : 9h.35m.32s$$

If in any of these examples the mass be divided by the cube of the diameter, the quotient will be the density of the planet. And if the density of the earth be taken as unity or 1, the densities of the other planets, deduced from the data given in the foregoing examples, will be as in the second column of the following table:

Names of Planets.	Densities (the earth's being 1).	Masses (the earth's being 1).	Diameters in miles.	Diameters (the earth's being 1).	Periods of rotation in mean solar days (the earth's being 1).
Mercury	1.00934	0.0627694	3140	0.2961826	1.00622
Venus	0.962395429	0.9043346	7800	0.984165	0.975824
Earth	1.0000000	1.0000000	7925.5	1.0000000	1.000000
Mars	1.04346	0.145337	4108.26	0.51836	1.02877
Jupiter	0.26016	371.7547	88592.7	11.17818	0.41277
Saturn & rings	0.29007	289.0281	79160	9.988013	0.43320
Uranus	0.25000	20.625488	34500	4.3550178	0.39602
Neptune	0.1872026	26.87671	41500	5.2362627	0.327346
Neptune	0.253715	26.87671	37500	4.7315627	0.400771

If in the examples, given above, the densities in the second column of the table be substituted for the masses and diameters, and the absolute sidereal period of the earth's rotation be considered as unity or 1, the calculations will be greatly shortened, for then the squares of the cube roots of the densities would be equal to the periods of rotation, expressed in absolute sidereal days, as in the last column of the above table.

Example. If the density of Mars be 1.04346, what will be its period of rotation?

$(1.04346)^{\frac{2}{3}} = 1.02877$ sidereal days, which is the answer.

The ratio of one mean solar day to one absolute sidereal day is as 1.00273791 to 1. Therefore, by dividing the sidereal days in the last column of the table by this ratio, the quotient will be solar days, which may be easily reduced to hours, minutes, and seconds, mean solar time.

To express the law of planetary rotation in general algebraical formula, applicable to the periods of the rotation of all the primary planets, let M, D, P, represent respectively the mass, diameter, and rotative period of the earth; and let m, d, p, represent the mass, diameter, and rotative period of any planet, then we will have—

$$\frac{P.D.m^{\frac{2}{3}}}{d.M^{\frac{2}{3}}} = p;$$ or in terms of the densities and periods, thus—

$$\frac{(\text{Planet's den.}).P^{\frac{2}{3}}}{(\text{Earth's den.})} = p;$$ or, if the earth's rotative period and density be each taken as unity or 1, then,

$(\text{Planet's density}) = \text{rotative period}^{\frac{2}{3}}$.

As the rotative periods depend upon the masses and diameters of the planets, any errors entering into these elements by the imperfections of observation will necessarily affect the calculated periods of rotation in a proportionate degree. This will be more manifest by referring to the 7th and 8th examples in regard to the mass and diameter of Neptune. The mass which I have adopted in these two examples is that calculated by Professor Struve, from his own observations of the satellite attending the primary. The diameter, 41500 miles, is that given by Sir John Herschel in his "Outlines of Astronomy." The assumed diameter, 37500 miles, in conjunction with the same mass, gives a difference of 1h. 45m. 35s. in the calculated periods of rotation. Many astronomers have adopted 35000 miles for the diameter.

The diameter of Neptune is probably not yet known within several thousand miles, for an error of observation of three-tenths of a second of an arc, would at that great distance produce an error of over 4000 miles in the calculated diameter of the planet. The same statement is equally applicable to the determination of the mass. An error of observation on the dimensions of the orbit of Neptune's satellite, though it might be only a small fraction of a second of an arc, yet it would produce a great difference in the calculated mass. We can, therefore, in our calculations, only approximate the true periods of rotation in proportion as observation approximates the true ratio of the masses and diameters of the planets.

There is a great difference in the observations of astronomers from which the mass and diameter of Saturn are computed. Some have adopted 67,000 miles as the diameter; others, 73,000; and others again, 79160. Some have adopted the mass much less than we have assigned in the foregoing table. If we take the diameter at 67000 miles, and the mass at 175,245657, the ratio and the period of rotation will remain the same as in the table.

The renowned French mathematician—Le Verrier, to whose calculations the world are indebted for the discovery of Neptune, has revised the tables containing the elements of the planet Mercury, and has computed its mass much less than formerly received; hence, I have adopted Mercury's mass less than stated in the old tables.

It will be seen by the formula which I have given, that if the rotation is known by observation, the ratio of the mass and diameter can be calculated; and that if any two of the elements are known, the third can be calculated.

The periods of the rotations of the ultra-zodiacal planets or asteroids cannot be calculated until observation shall determine their masses and diameters.

Whether the law of planetary rotation can be extended to the rotative periods of the satellites, attending the four exterior planets of the solar system, is not known. It is supposed by some, from observation, that the periods of the rotation of the satellites are equal to their periods of revolution around their primaries; but this needs confirmation by further observation of greater perfection and accuracy than what the present powers of the telescope seem capable of affording.

From the masses and diameters of the four satellites of Jupiter, as given in Herschel's "Outlines of Astronomy," I find by the application of the law of rotation, the following relative or proportional periods. (Assuming the period of the rotation of the 1st satellite, nearest to the plant, to be equal to unity or 1.)

Jupiter's satellites.	Proportional periods of rotation, as calculated.
1st.	1,000000000
2d.	1,788478493
3d.	1,635488852
4th.	1,375555069

If it be true, that the rotative periods of these satellites are equal to the periods of their revolutions around their primaries, then the law does not apparently hold good for these secondary systems, unless the diameters and masses are affected with considerable errors; for instance, if the apparent angular diameter of the 2d satellite be reduced the one-twentieth of a second of an arc, it would reduce the real diameter 116 miles, which would give a calculated period of rotation, such as should exist in order to correspond precisely with the ratio of the periods of revolution in their orbits. In the cases of the 3d and 4th satellites, there would have to be a greater correction in order to make the rotative and orbitual periods of the same length. A mistake of a small fraction of a second of an arc, might easily be made in the apparent angular diameters. Likewise, as the masses are deduced from observations of the minute perturbations which the satellites exercise upon each other, it is evident that a minute error in such observations, would give a much greater error in the calculated masses. Therefore, masses and diameters might be assumed, within the limits of unavoidable errors, which would give calculated periods of rotation for the four satellites of the same length as their orbitual periods.

This remarkable law, connecting the periods of rotation with the masses and diameters of the planets, appears to point to some more original law of a higher order of generalization. Such was the case in regard to Kepler's law, connecting the orbitual periods of the heavenly bodies with their distances from their respective centres of motion. Newton demonstrated Kepler's law to be a necessary result of the more general law of universal gravitation.

Providence may raise up a Newton in our day who shall disclose to us the reason why, the cube roots of the densities of the planets are as the square roots of their periods of rotation.

I intend in some future communication, to present a hypothesis which will, if I am not mistaken, account for this curious law obtaining in the solar system.

With the most sincere desire for the development and diffusion of useful knowledge, I subscribe myself your most humble servant.

Horrors of the Hospital of Sebastopol.

Of all the pictures of the horrors of war which have ever been presented to the world, the hospital of Sebastopol presents the most horrible, heart-rending, and revolting. It cannot be described, and the immagination of a Fuseli could not conceive anything at all like unto it. How the poor human body can be mutilated and yet hold its soul within, when every limb is shattered, and every vein and artery is pouring out the life stream, one might study here at every step, and at the same time wonder how little will kill! The building used as an hospital is one of the noble piles inside the dock-yard wall, and is situate in the centre of the row at right angles to the line of the Redan. The whole row was peculiarly exposed to the action of shot and shell, bounding over the Redan, and to the missiles directed at the Barrack Battery, and it bears in sides, roofs, windows, and doors, frequent and destructive proofs of the severity of the cannonade. Entering one of these doors, I beheld such a sight as few men, thank God, have ever witnessed! In a long low room, supported by square pillars, arched at the top, and dimly lighted through shattered and unglazed window frames, lay the wounded Russians, who had been abandoned to our mercies by their general. The wounded, did I say? No, but the dead, the rotten and festering corpses of the soldiers who were left to die in their extreme agony, unattended, uncared for, packed as close as they could be stowed, some on the floor, others on wretched trestles and bedsteads, or palets of straw, sopped and saturated with blood. Which oozed and trickled through upon the floor, mingled with the droppings of corruption. With the roar of exploding fortresses in their ears, with shells and shot forcing through the roof and sides of the rooms in which they lay, with the crackling and hissing of fire around them, those poor fellows, who had served their loving friend and master the Czar, but too well, were consigned to their terrible fate. Many might have been saved by ordinary care. Many lay, yet alive, with maggots crawling about in their wounds Many nearly mad by the scenes around them, or seeking escape from it, in their extremest agony, had rolled away under the beds, and glared out on the heart-stricken spectators, oh! with such looks. Many with legs and arms broken, and twisted, the jagged splinters sticking through the raw flesh, implored aid, water water, food, or pity, or deprived of speech by the approach of death, or by dreadful injuries on the head or trunk, pointed to the lethal spot. Many seemed bent alone on making their peace with Heaven. The attitudes of some were so hideously fantastic as to appal and root one to the ground by a sort of dreadful fascination. Could that bloody mass of clothing and white bones ever have been a human being, or that burnt black mass of flesh have ever had a human soul? It was fearful to think what the answer must be. The bodies of numbers of men were swollen and bloated to an incredible degree, and the features distended to a gigantic size, with eyes protruding from the sockets, and the blackened tongue lolling out of the mouth, compressed tightly by the teeth which had set upon it in the death rattle, made one shudder and reel round.

In the midst of one of these "chambers of horror"—for there many of them—were found some dead and some living English soldiers, and among them poor Capt. Vaughan, of the 90th, who has since succumbed to his wounds. I confess it was impossible for me to stand at the sight, which horrified our most experienced surgeons—the deadly clammy stench, the smell of the gangrened wounds of corrupt blood, of rotting flesh, were intolerable and odious beyond endurence. But what must the wounded felt who were obliged to endure all this, and who passed away without a hand to give them a cup of water, or a voice to say one kindly word to them. Most of these men were wounded on Saturday—many perhaps, on the Friday before—indeed, it is impossible to say how long they might have been there. In the hurry of their retreat, the Muscovites seem to have carried in dead men to get them out of the way and to have put them upon the pallets in horrid mockery. So that this retreat was secured, the enemy cared but little for their wounded. On Monday only, did they receive those whom we sent out to them during a brief armistice for the purpose, which was, I believe, sought by ourselves, as our overcrowded hospitals could not contain, and our overworked surgeons could not attend to any more.

Improvement in Telegraphs.

From the introduction of the Marine Telegraph to the astonished world as a means for the intercommunication of thought between the most distant points, we have been prepared to believe that the genius of invention was almost unlimited. It was therefore without much surprise that we heard of, and afterwards saw in operation, a beautiful instrument, the wonderful prosperities of which are the invention of Mr. David E. Hughes, a citizen of Kentucky. In a conversation with this unassuming and intelligent individual we have learned that he devoted four years almost exclusively to the study of the Electric Telegraph, and that he now thinks he has brought his improvements in it to such perfection as to be worthy of the attention of the world; and from what we have seen and been told of the modus operandi of his machinery, we are disposed to think so too. Even were we capable, we do not feel that we have a right to enter into any minute description of this telegraphic printing instrument; but we may state that it seems to possess great advantages over all the present modes of telegraphing. Some of these are, that it prints with the most astonishing rapidity; that it communicates and receives intelligence at the same moment, that its peculiarity of construction is such as to cut off, when desirable, from all intermediate stations the knowledge of a message sent from one distant point to another, so that any person in Washington, for example, wishing to convey a secret to his friend in Boston or New Orleans, may do so with as much privacy as if he were whispering it into his ear. He has only to give notice to that friend to attend at a specific hour at the Telegraphic Office and such is the simplicity of working the instrument that the one may transmit and the other receive the message with the co-operation of an agent, though neither may know anything of the principles of telegraphing. It is only necessary that they should know how to spell and read. Another great beauty of the invention is that it may be readily attached to any of the telegraphic modes of correspondence now in use; and the principles upon which the powers of natural and electro magneta are brought into requisition are such as to admit of the transmission of messages in any condition of the atmosphere. At the present moment, and so long as the siege of Sebastopol may last, we should think that the Government of France and England would be willing to pay almost any price for the means of secret correspondence with their respective generals. Indeed to every government of Europe occasions may occur when an immediate and secret order to a foreign minister might lead to important diplomatic results. In the United States, where the Government has few or no secrets, the machinery of Mr. Hughes will nevertheless be found of incalculable use in commercial correspondence and we doubt not that as soon as its merits shall have been satisfactorily tested, it will receive all the encouragement which its ingenious inventor can anticipate. We understand that a model of the machine is now on its way to Europe.—[National Intelligencer.

At a late term of the County Court in Perry County, Ind., there were twenty-two applications for divorce, seventeen of which were granted. The Louisville Times says that, in the same county last year, there were 160 marriage licenses issued, and some sixty-five applications to the Circuit Court for divorce.

Primitive Christian's Beards.

A friend who has taken the advantage of the absence of his other and better half to grow his whiskers—to let all the hair indigenous to the face of the sterner sex grow without let or hindrance—has asked us to hunt up something to enable him to sustain his beard when his wife returns to her home. We are an admirer of a neat, well-trimmed beard and then we have never seen in the pictures in the Bible and prayer and hymn books any of the male primitive Christians with close shaven faces.

In Gibbon's well known XVth chapter it is recorded that the Christian fathers, while Rome was a heathen city, were very minute and circumstantial in their censures of luxuries, and among the various articles which excited their indignation, false hair, garments of any color except white, instruments of music, vases of gold and silver, downy pillows, white bread, foreign wines public salutations, warm baths, and the practice of shaving the beard, which according to Tertullian, "is a lie against their own faces, and an impious attempt to improve the works of the Creator," were enumerated. When Christianity, says Gibbon, was introduced among the rich and polite, the observation of these singular laws was left, as at present, to the few who are ambitious of superior sanctity.

We do not place our friend or ourself, in the last catalogue; we are only anxious to show that the shaving of the face was not permitted by the primitive Christians, that shaving the beard is a practice which crept in among the Christians with the many other errors of the Roman Catholics.—[St. Joseph Gazette.

Anecdote.

Anecdotes of animals are always amusing; and moreover if observed accurately and told without embellishment, may some day serve to solve a great problem in philosophy—the distinction, namely, between the spirit of a beast that goeth downward to the earth—a problem that the great Bishop Butler could not solve, and left a blemish in his argument, but a monument to his candor. The subject of the one I am going to tell happened many years ago, when I was an urchin of eight or ten, but I remember it well.

One fine summer morning it was my province to aid in driving a flock of sheep to the brook to be washed, preparatory to shearing. The man who had charge of them led the procession with the salt dish in his hand, in which he ostentatiously rattled some lumps of salt, and from time to time made pretence of throwing a handful on the ground, to draw the flock onward from place to place, while I followed to drive up the loiterers.

The old patriarch of the troop, a fine old buck, led the van of the quadrupeds, and carefully examined every spot where the false motion of throwing salt was made, till he was fully satisfied in his mind that no salt was deposited. He then paused, shook his head with his ample horns, and waiting till the shepherd was about a rod in advance, charged upon him from the rear with his whole momentum, fairly raising him off his feet. I saw, and from the first comprehended the manœuvre, but there was so much fun in it, it was impossible to give the alarm; and when the man turned to "blow me up" for my tacit complicity, I was rolling on the green sward in a convulsion of laughter so contagious he was forced to join in it, and let me off without a rebuke.

Will it do to attribute to so simple an animal as a sheep, so high a moral sentiment as indignation at deceit? Perhaps not; but we may at least make the "pratical inference," that those having charge of flocks cannot securely lead them along with mere occasional handfuls of—wind.—[Church Journal.

Brazil.

A letter from Brazil says that the commerce between that Empire and the United States, which last year reached nearly four millions of dollars, will hardly amount to one half of that sum during the present year. It also says that the Amazon Navigation Company are making but very slow progress in its colonization schemes, only two hundred immigrants having arrived out of the forty-two thousand which they engaged to bring into the country within five years from this time last year.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, OCT. 27, 1855.

From Utah.—All Sorts of Opinions.

We are frequently amused in reading the multifarious opinions that are put in circulation by various parties, in relation to the Mormons; sometimes they are represented as an industrious, honest, energetic people; at other times, as lazy vagabonds and thieves; by one they are represented as immoral and lascivious; by another, as a virtuous, moral people; some represent them in a state of misery and deep degradation; others, as being happy and highly civilized; one statement makes them disaffected with, and enemies to, the Government of the United States; whilst another has them loyal and patriotic; at one time we are kind and courteous to strangers; at another, the very essence of discourtesy and vulgarity; by one we are formidable, conspiring, and dangerous; by another, puny, insignificant, and harmless. We are, in fact, honest and dishonest, chaste and lascivious, grovelling and high-minded, traitors and patriots, and pass through every phase and grade of the nomenclature of good and bad, virtue and vice, according to the mood of the writers, the wrathercock of public opinion, or the interests of book writers and publishers, or "committed" editors, and political demagogues. Happily, we are very indifferent to the opinions of the public; quite as much so as they can be about ours; were it otherwise we should be precisely in the position of the fabled "Old Man and his Ass," and perhaps should arrive at the same conclusion. As it is, without any very great pretensions, further than a little share of common sense, we pursue the even tenor of our course irrespective of other people's views; we "mind our own business," and let the world wag. We would here remark, however, that we are not insensible to acts of kindness, and know how to appreciate and to reciprocate true friendship, as well as any other people.

The above remarks are induced from reading a letter to the Chicago Daily Times, sent by Hon. W. W. Drummond, one of the United States Associate Judges of Utah, which will be found in another column. Mr. Drummond has been there, and consequently seen and knows for himself; he gives a tolerably fair report. Others, who have not been there, but who write under the aforenamed influences, very often give a bad one; we suppose on the same ground that they write many other things—that they don't know what they are writing about.

As we remarked above, Mr. Drummond's account is tolerably correct; but as he has only been a short time in that country, he is not well posted in affairs, and his remarks will admit of a little criticism.

The Judge states that "there are no buffaloes west of the Rocky Mountains." There might not have been when he was there. We have hunted buffaloes on Little Sandy, which is on the west side; and in the winter of 1853 there were great numbers there. He states that "the institution of negro slavery exists." There are southern gentlemen there, who have taken their slaves with them, and who are protected like all other men in their rights; but slavery does not exist as an institution; we presume it will require the special act of the people to decide that matter. It is the genius both of our religion and politics to know no North, no South, no East, no West, no foreign born, no native; southern and northern men are alike protected; we know no man's politics or religion; but throw the protecting ægis of the Constitution around all. We are again told that "Indian slavery exists." With all deference to the opinion of the Judge, this is not true in fact. It is true that Indians are bought and held in servitude, under certain restrictions; but the buying has a reference more to the feelings and prejudices of the Indians than to any matter of fact of their slavery or servitude, which is prescribed by law, and is more in the shape of an apprenticeship than slavery. A little explanation here may be necessary. It was customary on, and since, our arrival there, for the Mexicans to make excursions into the country and purchase boys and girls, and sometimes men and women, for a small amount; these were generally such as were taken prisoners by hostile bands or tribes who made predatory excursions upon the weaker tribes, for the express purpose of taking prisoners to trade with the Mexicans, who bought them and carried them to their own country and sold them as slaves again. Sometimes the parents of children would trade them off, and frequently, after having taken their prisoners, if provisions were scarce, or they were otherwise troublesome, they were killed. To put a stop to this horrid traffic and brutal murder, the Mormons made purchases of those prisoners the Indians offered for sale, and the law makes provision that they shall be well fed, and clothed, and stipulates for a certain amount of schooling; and that at the expiration of their apprenticeship they shall be free. It will be seen, then, that it was not to make slaves of them, but to save them from slavery and butchery, to stop their predatory warfare, to ameliorate their condition, to teach them habits of industry, to educate and civilize them, and to make them useful members of society, that this system was instituted. With the exception of the buying, which could not be avoided, the system is essentially the same as the apprenticing of orphans, negroes, and others, so prevalent in the northern States.

Mr. Drummond states that there are from sixty to one hundred thousand inhabitants: as there is so much emigration pouring in both east and west, it is difficult for us to determine; we think it is a little overrated. But with the editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, who quotes this letter, we think there is quite enough to "entitle us to admission into the Union as a State." The letter, however, upon the whole, is tolerably correct, and those little mistakes are such as any one might make from a superficial observation of things as they exist there.

The following is the act referred to in relation to this affair, and was passed in consequence of several children having been bought by the citizens from the Indians to save them from butchery.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, That whenever any white person within any organized county of this Territory, shall have any Indian prisoner, child or woman, in his possession, whether by purchase or otherwise; such person shall immediately go, together with such Indian prisoner, child, or woman, before the Select men or Probate Judge of the county. If in the opinion of the Select men or Probate Judge the person having such Indian prisoner, child, or woman, is a suitable person, and properly qualified to raise or retain and educate said Indian prisoner, child, or woman; it shall be his or their duty to bind out the same by indenture for the term of not exceeding twenty years, at the discretion of the Judge or Select men.

SEC. 2. The Probate Judge or Select men shall cause to be written in the indenture; the name, and age; place where born, name of parents if known; tribe to which said Indian person belonged; name of the person having him in possession; name of Indian from whom said person was obtained; date of the indenture, a copy of which shall be filed in the Probate Clerk's office.

SEC. 3. The Select men in their respective counties are hereby authorized to obtain such Indian prisoners, children, or women, and bind them to some useful avocation.

SEC. 4. The master to whom the indenture is made, is hereby required to send said apprentice to school, if there be a school in the district, or vicinity, for the term of three months in each year; and at a time when said Indian child shall be between the ages of seven years and sixteen. The master shall clothe his apprentice in a comfortable and becoming manner, according to his, said masters, condition in life.

The Discovery of Planetary Rotation.

By Prof. Orson Pratt, of Utah.

On the first page will be found a long communication from Professor Orson Pratt, on the above subject. We do not profess a critical acquaintance with the science of astronomy, and consequently are not prepared to descant upon the extent of the utility of the discovery of our old friend, the Professor; but if, as Bro. Pratt states—and we have the most implicit confidence in his statements and calculus—he has arrived at a criterion whereby to demonstrate, by calculation, "a law governing planetary rotation"—a principle only imperfectly ascertained before by a careful observation of the spots on a planet's disc—we think he has achieved a triumph for that science of which he is so much the admirer; the which, while it will greatly facilitate the researches of astronomers in the movements of the planetary system, will at the same time amply repay him for his years of study and investigation, and present him before the scientific world as one of its prominent lights. Years ago we have frequently felt annoyed when in his company, and desiring social conversation, to see him fill slate after slate with trigonometrical and algebraic calculations. We now begin to see the results, and that, while we were on the earth, he was soaring in the heavens and watching the movements of the planetary system. Mr. Pratt has literally waded through and made himself master of all the known movements of the celestial bodies, their densities, magnitudes, distances, periods of revolutions, abberations, eclipses, causes of their various phenomena, and all the acquired information on this subject; and stepping out on the other side, is launching forth through the immensity of space in search of fresh laws and new discoveries. In his scientific flight he has discovered the law of planetary rotation, which we hail as one of the bright scintellations of his profound genius, and congratulate him upon his success in scientific research, and we esteem it the more as coming from a personal friend and a Mormon. The light does not always come from the east; from the tops of the mountains it bursts forth in the west, and there is more where that came from. Mormonism has long taken the lead in religion—it will soon be in the van in both science and politics.

Elder G. P. Waugh.

Brother G. P. Waugh is now with us in New York, in good health. He is recently from Canada, in which place he has been laboring in the ministry for some time. He goes out in the packet ship Yorkshire (which is to sail on the 26th inst.) to Liverpool, to labor in Europe, under the direction of President F. D. Richards. He goes with our good feelings toward him, and desires for his success and prosperity.

What Red Now in Pickle for Utah?

One dispatch from Washington assures us that Col. Steptoe is there, and only waiting for re-appointment to the Governorship of Utah, and a "strong military force to back him up," &c. Another knowing, veracious correspondent of one of our distinguished, disinterested political city papers, says, "the appointment of a Governor for the Territory of Utah will be deferred until the assembling of Congress, and the knowing ones at Washington say there will have to be a military force sent there," &c.

We are extremely curious to learn what question of political subtlely is now up at Washington, of which this precious morsel is to be the party beacon fire. We know we ought to be better posted in those interesting national questions, but have to lament our ignorance of such diplomatic intricacies, and shall have to leave it for the "knowing ones" at Washington and New York to solve. We used to be so green as to suppose, for any heavy expenditure from the Treasury of General Government, there was expected to be a degree of corresponding good to the country; but we live and learn, though we've yet to learn what good can accrue, even to "our side," by raising a breeze so early about Utah, and to bring out Col. Steptoe just at this crisis, too. The Colonel did not answer the expectation when he went to Utah; it was expected, then, he would certainly kick up a row with the Mormons, and we should have a glorious chance of saving our country; but he's too fastidiously honorable for our purpose; there must be a more pliant tool than the Colonel. Don't get any of the old school, stiff, gentlemanly military characters, but some of the more modern, complaisant, suple gentlemen of the Bennett school, that would not blush at being caught among the sqaws, or be ashamed to display their valor by an assault upon female virtue, and if resistance should follow, then raise the hue and cry of insurrection, rebellion, and treason among the Mormons! But then that expedition to Utah never cost the Government less than three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and what was the result? Nothing but disgrace to our national arms and a somewhat questionable effect upon those that make such appropriations. What then would be the result of getting up another enormous appropriation of the people's money, (say about a million,) to send out another expedition to Utah? Could not so large a sum be disposed of in some more plausible way for the advancement of certain political parties? This Mormon capital is rather a precarious investment; we never knew it to pay well yet. Perhaps some of the "knowing ones" at Washington may have some later plan of operation; but don't depend too much upon popular favor in any great outlay in Mormonism; it won't go down; it's getting stale; the people are getting tired of hearing about Mormon monstrosities. So we think it would be decidedly better, for party purposes, to keep hands off, particularly if it costs three or four hundred thousand dollars every time.

Every body knows they are going on smoothly enough now in Utah, and troubling no one; and it will require more wind than any party have to spare, either in Washington or New York, to blow up a breeze about Utah, while so many more important questions agitate the Union; so we recommend "our party" to fish with other than the Bennett hook—it's not fortunate only for "gudgeons." The Herald is better adapted to serve at the top of the spire than in the forum or pulpit, particularly if we expect to hear the gospel. But seriously: for what purpose is this periodic hue and cry of "Mormon difficulty" raised? There is no difficulty now existing among the inhabitants of Utah, nor the least occasion to fear any in the future, unless it is raised by reckless, unprincipled demagogues for party purposes, without the least shadow of reason or good sense, and that done at the most extravagant expenditure from the public coffers of the nation. The great distance of that Territory requires an immense outlay of means for transportation of even a small detachment of military; and to send a force sufficient to be of any avail in a Territory of upwards of 60,000 inhabitants, at an outlay almost equal to that of the Mexican war, without the least shadow of a reason, except a crusade against a mere matter of faith, would be repulsive in the extreme to the mind of every freeman, and raise a financial question that would damn any party that should attempt to handle such tools. If it is thought to be necessary to send another Governor to Utah, let a gentleman be sent who will consider the rights and privileges belonging to freemen, and he will be cordially received and firmly sustained by the people of that Territory; but to send a fool there, with a detachment of soldiers at his heels to enforce his edicts, right or wrong, would raise feelings in the breasts of men there who were born and bred under the broad folds of the stars and stripes, that could as illy brook such outrages as did our fathers, when England sent her minions to her western provinces to grind down her distant subjects by the iron heel of royal despotism. But we do not believe there is so much folly to be found in a government like the American republic; we believe that the people of the United States will demand better evidence of a disposition on the part of the people of Utah to resist legitimate authority or oppose good men or measures than has ever yet been shown to the public, or manifested at home or abroad; and we do not believe there are fools enough in Washington or New York to attempt so absurd a political speculation as sending soldiery, at so great expense, without cause, to the peaceable valleys of Utah. It is only an expedient by a few "penny a-liners," who are out of business, to raise a little capital for a social cup with their more fortunate guill wheeling comrades.

☞ Business calling us to St. Louis, we shall make a visit to that part of the country, and return probably in the course of two weeks.

Death of Professor Orson Spencer.

It has seldom fallen to our lot to record the death of a friend whose conduct in life has so endeared his memory to the lovers of truth and humanity, and whose decease has given us such painful reflection, as that of him whose name heads this article. He died at St. Louis on the 15th inst., after a number of weeks' illness, commencing with the chills and fever, resulting in a general debility, from which a naturally feeble constitution was unable to recover.

Brother Spencer was formerly a citizen of Massachusetts, and extensively known in New England and the middle States as a preacher of the Baptist denomination. He graduated at the Union College, New York, under the presidency of Eliphalet Nott, D.D., L.L.D., in 1824, and also at the Hamilton Literary and Theological College, under the presidency of N. Kendrick, D.D., in 1829. In both these institutions he held the first grade of honorable distinction at the time he left them. He has from an early period of the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, been a devoted and efficient member, and occupied an honorable position among its officers. After yielding obedience to his honest convictions, which with him were stronger than worldly honor or filthy lucre, and becoming a member of the Mormon Church contrary to the strong solicitations of his numerous friends, he was interrogated by Mr. Crowel, editor of the Christian Watchman, a former companion, with regard to the principles he had more recently espoused, who wished to know his reasons for joining the Mormons, who were so unpopular and "everywhere spoken against." This interrogation gave rise to the series of communications called "Spencer's Letters." This work is published in book form, and is ably written; his reasonings are bold, vigorous, and forcible; and his arguments clear, cogent, and demonstrative. It has had an extensive circulation both in this country and in Europe, and is considered among the best productions of the Church.

In the city of Nauvoo he held and magnified satisfactorily the office of alderman. At the time of our exodus from Nauvoo he and his family were found among the outcast fugitives flying for refuge among the savages from the fierce diabolic wrath of civilized christians. Mrs. Spencer, an able, accomplished and refined lady, sunk beneath her accumulated privations consequent upon her removal, a victim of persecution and a martyr of the cross. Thus was our departed friend left to pursue his solitary course with the charge of six children under the age of thirteen. He felt her loss severely, and well he might; we knew her well. She was a true christian, a kind and affectionate mother, and a faithful wife; she lived a christian, and died a heroine.

In Utah Territory, at the organization of the Deseret University, he was appointed its Chancellor, which office he still held at his death. He was also called to, and occupied an honorable position in the legislative council of that Territory.

Ecclesiastically, he has passed up through the various grades of office in the church, to the office of High Priest, all of which he has magnified with propriety and assiduity. He was on one occasion called to the responsible charge of the superintendence of the affairs of the church in Europe, and edited at the same time, with much ability and highly satisfactorily, the Millennial Star. He returned from England and went through to the Valley in 1849.

In 1852 he again performed a mission to Europe for the church, visiting in his tour the kingdom of Prussia, and again returning to the Valley in 1853.

In 1854 he was again called upon to perform a mission to the States, since which, most of his time has been occupied in Cincinnati, Ohio; and the files of the Mormon and Luminary will show that he has not been idle. His ability as a writer is seldom equaled, his productions on any subject that he engaged in, being of that argumentative, cogent and lucid character that forbade successful attack.

His own suffering, and that of his family, their fullest import.

In regard to his moral character, we have heard it spoken of in the highest terms, but have yet to hear, from saint or sinner, an accusation against him as a man, father, brother, husband, or friend. He lived and died an honest, upright servant of the Most High, and will ever be remembered among the saints of God as one of the bright and shining lights of that constellation that shall illuminate the earth to its remotest corner, with an effulgence of truth unsurpassed and unequaled in any former dispensation of the world's history.

After the death of his first wife he married a lady in England, with whom, and all of his family and friends, we deeply sympathize. We view this sad event with some degree of consolation, while we contemplate the resurrection of the just, over whom the second death shall have no power, and the shortness of the time before he, with those who have gone before, shall reign with Christ upon the earth.

We have written the above mostly from memory, but believe it to be substantially correct.

Mormon Immigration.

We take pleasure in announcing the arrival of Elder Laker and a small company of Saints from Liverpool on their way to the Valley. They left England on the 10th of September in the Empire State, and landed at the Battery on the 18th of October. Also the arrival on the 22d of October of the Jeremiah Thompson, 22 days from Liverpool, with Elder Traveller and family from London, all in good health. Each company speak in the highest terms of officers and men on board the two ships, and the convenience and accommodation afforded at Castle Garden.

Dr. Bernhisel and Utah.

We last week announced the arrival of Dr. John M. Bernhisel, our delegate to Congress. The doctor is in very good health and spirits, and after rollicking and rusticating in the mountains the last season, he comes to us with new vigor and life; we are glad he has returned, for as we expressed ourselves last spring we believe no one is more capable of representing the interests of Utah than himself. During his sojourn in Utah he visited the Southern settlements, and expresses himself as being very much gratified with the position of affairs generally. One wing of the State House, in Fillmore City was near completed, mills and machinery were being erected, farms and every kind of improvement progressing rapidly; there was a general state of health and the people seemed to enjoy themselves well. They were all as merry as the Mormons. The crops he informs us are about as we have before represented them. Wheat will be rather, scarce; buckwheat had been sown, however, after the destruction of the wheat by the grasshoppers; corn will be a good crop; potatoes, and other vegetables, will be very plentiful, especially if it should not be injured by early frosts. The doctor smiled on hearing the reports here about starvation; he said that was news to him, they had not dreamt of it there.

He brought us a sample of the honey or manna sugar which was gathered from the leaves of the trees in the valleys, and also a beautiful apple which we appreciate the more as the pipps were planted by Mrs. Taylor in Salt Lake Valley, and for which the doctor and the sender, will please accept our thanks. He returns from the valley, not exactly as the spies from the promised land for he has been there before; but like them, bringing the fruits with him; like them he also reports a good land, a land flowing with milk and honey—sugar; but says that the people are not giants or Anakims, but a matter of fact, unostentatious, every day kind of people, and that so far from being barbarians, they are actually civilizing the Indians.

We have seen two samples of the honey sugar, one a little lighter colored than the other; it very much resembles maple sugar, but if anything is rather softer. The following letter, for which we are indebted to the Doctor, will be found interesting on this subject:

PROVO CITY, Aug. 11th, 1855.

HON. J. M. BERNHISEL—Sir; according to agreement I send you a small cake of the sugar made from the syrup, or honey; and as you requested, will give you a few particulars concerning the manner in which I discovered it. As I passed along to, and from my cornfield (which is situated about one mile from town,) I discovered a white substance, on the cottonwood trees, which upon examining I found to be a sweet substance somewhat resembling the honey dew in the States, but in far greater abundance, and possessing other properties, some of the cakes being as thick as a knife blade or window glass. I thought from the quantity there was on the trees that sugar might be made of it, and signified the same to a number of my neighbors; but they all ridiculed the idea, so I thought I would try and see what I could do with it: I took home two bushels and washed the twigs and then strained and boiled down the water, which made one and a quarter pounds of sugar. Since that time most of the town have been at work; some families have made as high as one hundred pounds of sugar. It makes excellent molasses, and as good vinegar as I ever saw. I averaged about eighteen pounds per day with two three gallon kettles.

I remain yours, respectfully,
AARON DANIELS.

Col. Steptoe.

The New York Herald states that it is rumored that Col. Steptoe is in Washington; that he has had the offer of the Governorship of Utah presented by President Pierce, and that he says he will accept providing he can have a company of men to protect him. The first may be probable, the last we don't believe. The Colonel has been there and well knows that if protection is necessary it will require more than one or two companies to protect him. The Colonel is much respected there and should he be appointed will need no guard. None but scoundrels need protection in Utah, and to them their guard is of no avail. Mr. Bennett is again recommending his system of debauchery and seduction. We are not aware how he and his corps succeed here; but we should really be amused to see them make an excursion and try an experiment there; he would find that his "christian" doctrines would put him outside the city along with whoremongers, "dogs, and sorcerers."

From Fort Kearney.

Mr. R. B. Toler has arrived at Kickapoo city from Fort Kearney, and reports to the Pioneer that all was well at Kearney. There were a good many reports at Fort Kearney about Indians, but none were visible. Mr. Toler says:

At Thirty-two Mile Creek, eight miles beyond the Little Blue, met a large war party of Cheyennes, who appeared very hostile. They stopped the train and offered the waggoners the privilege of fighting with them or a division of their provisions. The train being short of ammunition, accepted the first offer and divided their provisions, and then made a compact to meet the same party six weeks from that date, on the Blue, and give them as much fight as they wished. The waggoners are at this time preparing to go back and give them a round.

On the 27th of September met 800 troops on Little Blue, going to reinforce General Harney.

There has been a large gathering of Sioux warriors on White river, some 5000 or more—and they have sent General Harney word that if he will come up there they will fight him. The General accepted the invitation, and the last news heard from him he was marching towards the place appointed.

Mr. Toler says there is a beautiful prospect for a general Indian war.

Judge Drummond's Letter.

The following is from the Chicago Daily Times, the letter referred to in a preceding article:

"By the virtue of law I am assigned to this the judicial district. My head quarters are at Fillmore City, in Millard county, the seat of Government of this Territory. At Fillmore City there is now being erected a splendid State House, built of superior quality of stone of a reddish cast, and no doubt very durable. One wing is nearly completed, and will be in readiness by the second Monday in December, at which time the Legislature meets. This city is one hundred and sixty miles south of Great Salt Lake City, and about two hundred and fifteen miles south of the line dividing Utah and Oregon Territories, and is centrally located in the Territory. Great Salt Lake is the largest city in the Territory, and contains fifteen thousand inhabitants. In it are a number of fine stone hotels, schoolhouses, &c. A large majority of the population of the city are of foreign birth, mostly English. The next city of importance is Provo, on the Provo river, about fifty miles south of Salt Lake City. Provo is a beautiful place, containing factories, mills, &c., with three thousand inhabitants, about equally divided between native and foreign birth. From Provo south there are a number of villages and settlements all the way down until you reach the California line. Much of the land is quite productive in all kinds of grain.

In the county of Iron is to be found an inexhaustible quantity of stone coal, as well as extensive quantities of iron ore. Forges and furnaces are in operation in the county of Iron for the manufacture of iron, which is soon destined, in the ordinary course of things, to become a source of great profit. Copper, lead, chalk, plaister of paris, as well as gold, are to be found in great abundance in different parts of the Territory. In the lake of which you have heard so much, is to be found salt in the greatest abundance, which can be obtained simply by driving a wagon into the edge of the lake, and with a common shovel filling it to its utmost capacity, at no other cost or expense, and is free for Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner. Among the grains cultivated here with success are to be found wheat, rye, Indian corn, barley, and oats. Among the vegetable kingdom, are potatoes, onions, tomatoes, beets, cabbage, lattuce, radishes, as well as peas and beans in great abundance. Peaches are cultivated to some extent, but no apples as yet. There are many fine nurseries in different parts of the Territory, which in a few years will yield a full supply of fruit. Wild fruit of different kinds is quite abundant, and is a good substitute. Owing to the long continued dry weather and plague of grasshoppers last spring, grain, grass, and all kinds of vegetation is very scarce, and much fear is felt for the sufferings of the poor, who are numerous, and who will suffer unless aided by some now unseen hand.

"Not a single hive of bees is to be found in the territory. It is said that a number of years since a deep snow fell in these mountain valleys and caused all the buffalo on the West of the Rocky Mountains to die of starvation. There are none West of the mountains at this time. Among the wild animals you will find the black, and grizzly bear, and wolves of different kinds, two or three different kinds of deer, elk, mountain sheep, and different kinds of hare and rabbits. There are of the feathered tribe, the sagehen, prairie-hen, wild duck, and geese quite abundant, but no quails. Geese, turkeys, and the common hen are quite abundant. Horses, both wild and tame, mules, cattle, and sheep, grow finely, and live mostly the year round on grass, and said to be in better order in the winter than in the summer, there being no flies in winter.

"The institution of negro and Indian slavery exists in this territory, there being quite a number of Southern men here who brought their slaves with them. The Indians are sold into slavery by one another and subject to perpetual bondage, and make good, active, ready, and obedient servants.

"The prevailing religion is that of the Latter-Day Saints, although an occasional sermon is delivered by persons of different persuasions. The population of the territory is variously estimated at from sixty to one hundred thousand, the most of whom are active and industrious. No business man in this country performs more bodily and mental labor than Gov. Brigham Young.

"The Surveyor General, Gen. D. H. Burr, of Washington, is here, and has opened an office in Salt Lake City, and entered upon the duties of his office, two parties of surveyors being at work, led by Mr. Joseph Traskalawski. Gen. Burr, is a mild, gentlemanly, pleasant man, popular in his office and firm in all his efforts. A splendid mansion is being built by Gov. Young, said to be nearly capacious enough to hold his whole family. A fine dwelling is being built by Col. A. W. Babbitt, the Secretary of this Territory, and whose name is well known to the Democracy of Illinois. Mills and factories of all kinds, demanded in a new country, are in successful operation throughout the whole territory where settlements are made. Great credit is due to the Mormons for their efforts in common schools in all the settlements; a school is the first good building erected. They are the most industrious community I ever saw. Strongly devoted to their religious faith, many of them are of the best men and women, while far too many are basely corrupt. So far I have been most kindly and cordially treated by all citizens and inhabitants of this valley and territory.

"'An apparently miraculous crop of sugar is being made from the honey-dew which falls on the leaves of the cotton-wood exclusively. It is made by soaking the leaves in water, and then, after taking out the leaves, pursuing the same course which is taken in the manufacture of the ordinary maple sugar. A sample of this sugar, I send by this mail to our esteemed Senator, Hon. S. A. Douglas.'"

Yours, &c., W. W. DRUMMOND.

The American Union.

The New England Farmer, furnishes the following statistics relative to this great country of ours. It will be found that a division of this domain among the inhabitants, would give to every man, woman and child, about seventy-five acres each:

"The American Union now embraces thirty-one States, seven organized Territories, and one unorganized Territory (the Indian.) The total area of territory is estimated to be 2,946,166 square miles. The limits of the United States, when their independence was achieved, did not exceed 820, 680 square miles. Our territory doubled itself in the first twenty years of our national existence, and has increased over threefold in less than sixty years. We have now a domain nearly ten times as large as that of Great Britain and France combined, three times as large as that of Britain, France, Austria, Prussia, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Holland and Denmark together; one and a half times as large as the Russian empire in Europe; one-sixth less only than the area of all Europe; of about equal extent with the Roman empire, or that of Alexander, neither of which, it is said, exceeded 3,000,000 square miles. The eight Territories include an area equal to that of the thirty-one States. Three hundred and eighty States of the size of Massachusetts, or two thousand three hundred as large as Rhode Island, might be carved out of the national area. The slaveholding States have 851,598 square miles, and the non-slaveholding States, 612,597. North of the old Missouri compromise line, there is an area of 1,970,077 square miles, and 955,089. The New England States have about one-fortieth of our territory, the middle States one twenty-fifth, the southern States one-eleventh, the north-western one-seventh, and the south-western one-sixth. Only about one-thirteenth of the whole area of the country is improved. In the New England States about twenty-six acres in every hundred are improved; in the south, sixteen acres; in the north-west, twelve; in the south-west, five. There are about a million and a half of farms in the country."

Breadstuffs for Germany.

The governors of the Zollverein, of Germany, it is stated, have granted admission free of duty to grain and flour. Prussia is at the head of this Customs Union, and her dominions are suffering from a scarcity and high price of corn. In other parts of Germany it is stated that there is a like degree of dearth prevailing—Hesse Cassel among the rest, where, it is reported, the typhus fever is decimating the population. The crops of cereals in the German States is reported at only three-fourths of an average. The New York Post alluded the other day to a large purchase made of wheat for the Prussian government, and the large dealings in imported grain at Bremen, Hamburgh, Berlin, &c., have alread rendered the exchanges favorable to New York.

Correspondence.

From our Utah Correspondent.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, June 30, 1855.

My Dear Smith: You letter of January 24th came to hand on the 20th May, and the duplicate on the 4th inst., being the second letter that I have received from you since my arrival here.

I cannot express the pleasure and satisfaction it gave me to hear of your continued good health, and prosperity; and, whithal, the confidence you still have in my veracity, notwithstanding that I am numbered with a people who are represented to be a band of desperadoes.

I think that you have entirely overrated the value of my last letter. Although, I admit, it came from rather a curious portion of our great Republic.

I am exceedingly sorry to hear of the continued ill fortune of our old acquaintance ——, in consequence of his wreckless habits. It is a great pity to see young men of talent and education ruined in character and health by indulging in a dissipated course of life.

It gave me pleasure to hear that Mr. —— has at last attained to the object of his ambition, and gives general satisfaction in the performance of his duties. He is worthy of the promotion, as he labored most faithfully and diligently to obtain it.

My situation is very comfortable, and I feel quite at home in the duties of my office. I also have got a farm, and my brothers William and George (who are now strong boys) have an interest in it, and work upon it, and are doing well. I have also gone into stock raising that being a splendid business in this country.

Although I am comfortably situated here, I would not exchange the prospects of prosperity in temporal things, in the old country, or the States, for my chances here, were I not a firm believer in the principles of Mormonism. But being a conscientious believer in the principles of Mormonism, and knowing that those principles have been grossly misrepresented, and the characters and policy of our principal men grossly perverted, I am willing to sacrifice all temporal comforts, and the pleasures of former society, and share the fortunes of a persecuted and oppressed people.

You may rest assured my dear S. that, if any one of the charges made against the Mormons, through the public press, were true, I should not live here another day; because they would not be the kind of people they profess to be, and, consequently, not society that I should mingle in. You know my former character. You know that if the Mormons are the people they are represented to be that I would have become very much debased, and more changed in morals than you can think it possible. I am glad to say that since I came here and partook of the spirit of this people, it has been my greatest ambition to serve the Lord with full purpose of heart.

You very naturally would ask, why is it that such letters have been written by persons wintering in Utah, reflecting so much against the people. This I will be most happy to answer in my next. You ask me if the appointment of Col. Steptoe to be Governor of Utah, or any other stranger to this community, would cause a disturbance, and bring the Mormons in contact with the General Government. I am happy to inform you that it would not. The people of Utah are too loyal a people to rise up in rebellion against the United States, notwithstanding, they have been branded, by some, with the rebels mark. Yet, they claim the privilege, in common with other American citizens, to criticise the policy and actions of the administration of our country, and, when nessessary, speak out loudly against its corruptions. In doing so they have not, and will not, violate any law of the Constitution, but aim at preserving its purity, and majesty—it being part of their religions and, therefore, dear and near to their hearts.

If any stranger comes here as Governor, he will be respected and upheld in his office, and treated, as all the United States officers have been, with marked respect and kindness, so long as he is Mormon enough to mind his own business, and but deal out a fraction of justice to the community which is the very mos they can expect from those not interested in the prosperity of the people of Utah. But I shall not say that he will have the smiles and confidence of the people, so long as Brigham Young is the choice of the entire population.

The administration know that any appointment over Brigham Young is most oppressive and insulting to the people of Utah; and believing that the Mormons would resent such an outrage upon their patriotism, appointed Col. Steptoe, being a military man, and supposed to be able to sustain himself in office with the soldiers, under his command. That this is true, I have only to refer you to the newspapers of the East published at the time Col. Steptoe's appointment was made public.

What! an officer forced upon a Territory of the United States, in the 19th century, contrary to the expressed wishes of the entire community, and that oppressive act to be sustained by military power and despotism—Great God! is it possible that the children of our fathers who resented, to the death, such acts of the oppressive George the Third, should be guilty of such a manifest act of tyranny! Let not the spirits of Washington and his coadjutors, visit the present degenerate race, for it would sorely greive them to behold the decline of their noble blood, and with it, the great and glorious country which they wrested from the hands of tyrants—broke off the shackles that bound her, and set her at liberty. Oh! how she rejoiced—how she leaped with joy, when she breathed the air of freedom, and her laws were administered by those of her own choice—by those who fought for her freedom—a shout went up that almost rent the heavens—the angels looked on and were glad—they celebrated the event in the court celestial. She took an oath that she never would again be bound—that she never would sustain any government, or power that would rule with the iron rod as did her parent—that she would welcome to her bosom the oppressed and downtrodden of every clime, and defend them with her life's blood. Her declaration was written upon her heart with the blood of many of her sons. Think of this you professedly noble and patriotic sons of a great and mighty nation—you oppressors of Utah because of religious faith, blush to know that, you have struck at the foundation of the great building of our Republican Institution—and learn you are a worm—a canker in the nation. Think of it, and if there is a drop of the blood of your Revolutionary Fathers in your veins, go up to the political penitent form, and confess your sins to the people and then retire into obscurity, having no longer the confidence.

Why is Utah denied officers who are the unanimous choice of the people? men who have borne the burthen and heat of the day, made the roads, and "caused the wilderness to blossom as the rose"—men whose whole interest is to build up this Territory, and in whom the people have the utmost confidence, having tried them in the furnace of affliction for years. Need I answer the question? Is not the reason obvious? They are Mormons. They dare insist upon having the liberty guaranteed by our inspired constitution of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

Can it be possible that the statesmen of a free and mighty republic have adopted in their new political creed the antiquated and monarchical law of "religious tests," with a new and much approved addition, "it shall only be applied to that portion of American citizens called Mormons?" How considerate and profusely liberal!

The administration refuses to re-appoint Brigham Young Governor of Utah, because he is a Mormon, and because the entire population of Utah wishes his re-appointment, being Mormons.

The Administration has distributed all the offices of the Territory among its hungry and pauper friends, because the men we suggested to fill those offices are Mormons.

The Administration appropriated $25,000 for a military road in Utah, and immediately forwarded it. Why such extraordinary dispatch in forwarding this appropriation? Because it was to be received and disbursed by strangers to this Territory, who were wintering here at the time, and were not Mormons.

The Administration has published in the "President's message and accompanying document for 1854 and 1855" the reports of the different departments of all the States and Territories in the Union but those of Utah. Why throw out Utah thus? why treat her with such contempt? Because she is Mormon.

We love our country, our fatherland, our home, and hope yet to see the day when we shall prove to the people of the United States and other nations our deep attachment to American institutions.

Did the people of the United States but know, and could they realize, the extent to which the minions of the General Government have annoyed, insulted, and grossly abused this people, I am sure they would see justice done their young sister Utah, who has been cradled in such unparalleled adversity, and when now at school is whipped, and cuffed, and knocked about, both by pedagogues and many of her large associate schoolfellows, just as if she had no right to breathe the pure air of freedom, and live in this goodly land and asylum of the oppressed.

However, the time will come when the righteous Judge of all the earth will ascend the judgment seat, and in whose presence the whole human family will appear, to receive their just reward, whether it be exaltation or damnation. We do not fear that day, for then we know that righteousness will triumph.

Excuse me, my dear sir, for writing in this strain, but somehow or other I got into it, and plague me if I could get out of it.

D. O. C.

Correspondence from Texas.

Bosqueville, Bosque Co., Texas, September 14, 1854.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir—Being a subscriber to your valuable paper, and not a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, allow me to apprise you of the general prosperity of your church in this country; it is but recently your members and elders have favored this community. Those of the people who a short time since united with your church in this region of country have joined the company from Port Sullivan in Milam County, and left for Salt Lake. Since that time Elder Thomas has preached to the Gentiles, and baptised some seventy—among the number are some of our most worthy citizens, men of means and influence. Brother Echols and family, two sons and three daughters; Brother A. J. Evans and family, Brother Dazenbury and family, Brother Arnett, Commodore Moore, and some of the most exemplary members of the Baptist Church, have joined, and they have all adopted a general fund, and will leave early in the spring. I trust this may give you some idea how your church is doing here.

A Subscriber.

[From some cause the above communication has been delayed; however, the contents will be found to be interesting. We are glad to hear of the doings of our old friend, Judge Thomas; and, if still alive, we can assure our friend, "A Subscriber," that he is kicking. We don't believe there is a lazy bone in his body. If he chases up the people in Texas with Mormonism as he did the Buffalo and antelope on the plains, they won't have much quarters till they own up or back out; so success to the Judge. We have not heard from Judge Thomas lately—is it the fault of the mail, or has he forgot his old compagnons du voyage?—Ed. Mor.]

Telegraphic.

Washington, Oct. 19, 1855.

In the Court of Claims to-day, the argument in the Shreeve case was concluded, and the case of Joseph Nock, of Philadelphia, argued and submitted. Nock claims $3,000 damages for the violation of a contract he made with Amos Kendall to manufacture and furnish locks and keys for the United States mails. Arthur McArthur, of Maine, was sworn in as an attorney.

I learn from a distinguished Texan just arrived in this city, that there is no doubt but the Texas Legislature will accept the Texas Debt bill passed by the last Congress.

Hon. Chas. J. Faulkner, of Virginia, arrived this evening, and took quarters at the National. Mr. F. will have many backers for the Speakership.

New Orleans, Oct. 19, 1855.

The steamer Nautilus arrived at this port to-day, with later dates from Brazos.

Matamoros had surrendered to the revolutionists without giving battle, and matters there were quite tranquil.

At San Louis Potosi a fight of three days, duration had taken place, but the city still held out, the revolutionists having only gained possession of the field of battle. Reinforcements had been sent from Monterey.

Baltimore, Oct. 19, 1855.

A fire at Richmond, Virginia, on Thursday morning, destroyed Mr. Belvin's cabinet shop, containing twenty thousand dollars worth of furniture; also the furniture establishments of Wm. Ritter and Samuel W. Harwood. The total loss is about $40,000.

Washington, Oct. 20, 1855.

There is a good deal of excitement here to day with reference to what disposition is to be made of the three millions due to Mexico. Mr. Marcy has had it under consideration for some days, and has finally referred it to a cabinet council. The old premier has intimated, I understand, to those New Yorkers who have been here, and who are largely interested, that he would recognize the assignments which they hold from Santa Anna; but he having now submitted it to the Cabinet, they suspect him of double dealing, and that the move is made for the purpose of killing it, as it is known that a majority of the Cabinet are in favor of paying the money to the existing government of Mexico.

The State Department has received no intelligence of the resignation of Don Piatt, Secretary of Legation at Paris, but it is believed here in official circles that something of the kind will be received by the next steamer from Europe.

Brigadier General Hitchcock has tendered the resignation of his commission in the army; it has been accepted by the President, to take effect on the 18th inst.

Private letters from Paris received by the last steamer, represent the physical condition of Mr. Mason, our Minister to France, to be extremely critical.

The administration fully endorses the Japanese interpretation of Commodore Perry's treaty, and say that a commercial treaty was never contemplated by either government. It was only an initiatory step towards such a treaty, and a great national triumph at that.

Additional from Mexico.

New Orleans, Oct. 20, 1855.

A letter from Mexico, in this morning's Delta, contains later news than that telegraphed yesterday, and announces the capture of San Luis Potosi by the revolutionists.

The National Guards were being organized throughout the country, to be in readiness to march on the city of Mexico, should General Vadaurri think proper.

Baltimore, Oct. 20, 1865.

By the arrival of the Southern mail as late as due we have New Orleans papers containing the details of late Mexican news, confirming the accession of Gen. Alvarez to the Presidency. Alvarez received 16 votes, Comonfort 3, Orampo 3, Vidaurri 1.

Vidaurri has published a communication denying the reports that he was an annexationist. He also publishes accounts of several offers of assistance he received from Americans which he had declined, and says he recommended some Texans who had proffered him their services to retire to the other side of the river, threatening them if they did not do so.

Jose Santa Anna, son of the ex-President, has written a letter from the fortress of San Juan de Ulloa, denying the accusations made against him.

News from Texas.

New Orleans, Oct. 20, 1855.

Callahan had had another fight with the Mexicans and Indians, during which the town of Piedros Fegras was burnt. It was reported that he had returned to San Antonio for reinforcements. There were rumors that large numbers of the enemy had crossed to the Texas side of the Rio Grande. A meeting had been held at San Antonio, at which it was resolved to raise 1,000 men for immediate service.

Passmore Williamson again in Court.

Philadelphia, Oct. 22.

In the District Court to-day a petition was presented from Passmore Williamson, and partly read, when Judge Kane said that Williamson had a right to apply to the Court to purge himself of contempt, but this must be the first step. The petition not being such purgation, but apparently a kind of remonstrance against his imprisonment, he could not receive it, but upon reasonable notice would hear counsel upon any preliminary question. After an argument by Mr. Meredith in behalf of Williamson, to which the District Attorney replied, Judge Kane reiterated that he could receive no communication from a party in contempt. The first step must be an application for leave to purge himself of contempt. That done, he would be reinstated before the Court and have the same rights as before commitment. If counsel differed with the Court, it would willingly hear any argument on that point.

Kansas Politics.

St. Louis, Oct. 22.

The Kansas correspondent of the Missouri Democrat says the returns from twenty-two precincts give Reeder, for Congress, 1935 votes. There were still twenty-nine precincts to hear from, and it was thought his vote would exceed 3000. The election passed off peaceably, and no persons were permitted to vote unless they had been actual residents of a city or town for thirty days preceding the election.

The free soilers are getting up documents wherewith to contest Whitfield's seat in Congress. They profess to be able to prove that there were only four legal pro-slavery voters at Franklin, while Whitfield received sixty-one votes there; that out of upwards of 200 votes cast for Whitfield at Wyandotte, only 30 were legal; that out of 230 cast at Osawotamie, not over 50 were legal; that at Baptist Mission, which gave Whitfield over 100 votes, there were but 17 legal voters, and only 13 of them cast ballots; and in fine, that not 1000 legal votes were cast for Whitfield throughout the whole Territory.

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention had been chosen. They will form a State constitution for Kansas, and apply for admission into the Union. Mr. Reeder will be the bearer of the constitution and petition to Washington.

Health of New Orleans.

New Orleans, Oct. 22, 1855.

There were only fifteen deaths from yellow fever in this city during last week.

From Washington.

Washington, Tuesday, Oct. 23 1855.

It is said in circles best acquainted with Mexican affairs that President Alvarez is not the man for the times, although his patriotism and bravery are beyond suspicion; and that General Comonfort being much abler, shrewder, and more popular, will eventually be intrusted with the reins of Government. But it is to Senor Almonte, (who will, if he wishes it, be retained here under any circumstances or any regime,) that Mexico looks for a leader, and as the probable regulator of his country.

It is understood that Mr. Hargous of New York is here to sustain his original claim as successor to the Garay grant.

Instructions have just been issued from the State Department to Mr. Ward, our Consul at Panama, to raise his flag, his conduct like that of Dr. Worrell, late Consul at Matanzas, being strongly condemned by Government.

The East Boston Murder Case.

Boston, Oct. 23, 1855.

Mrs. Cathrine Merrill, who was so shockingly stabbed by her jealous husband, David Merrill, on Sunday, in East Boston, died of her injuries this morning. Merrill, who attempted suicide by stabbing himself after the assault on his wife, is at the Hospital and in a fair way of recovery.

The U. S. Agricultural Society Exhibition.

Boston, Oct. 23.

The first day's exhibition of the United States Agricultural Society has passed off in the most satisfactory manner. There has been from ten to fifteen thousand people on the ground. The Exhibition opened with a grand cavalcade, in which some four hundred horses appeared—some of them splendid animals. Each class was then examined separately. The neat stock number some 400 head, and is beyond comparison the finest ever seen in Massachusetts. Of sheep there are 200, and of pigs 400. The latter department is very fine. The festivities closed with a hard race between twenty horses that never before trotted for money. It was a most exciting contest. Vermont Boy, owned by J. C. Hilman, was the winner. The official award will not be made till Friday. The city is crowded with strangers, and the prospects for the remainder of the Fair are most flattering.

Kansas Congressional Election.

St. Louis, Oct. 23.

Cleveland, Oct. 24, 1855.

Stillman Webb, Post-office clerk at Jefferson, Ohio, was arrested yesterday for purloining letters from the mails.

Washington, Oct. 24.

The United States Attorney-General has decided that it is no departure from our neutrality for citizens to sell to either of the belligerents gunpowder, arms, or other articles contraband of war; for the merchant ships of a neutral State to transport troops or military munitions for either of the belligerents, such commerce being perfectly lawful, subject only to the chances of hostile capture by the opposing power.

Boston, Oct. 24, 1855.

The Royal Mail steamship Canada sailed from this port at noon to-day, with 96 passengers for Liverpool and 19 for Halifax. Among them is Josiah Pierce, Jr. of Portland, Secretary of Legation to St. Petersburg. She takes out $756,500 in specie.

Philadelphia, Oct. 24, 1855.

The steam frigate Wabash was launched in splendid style at 12 1-2 to-day. It was christened with Wabash water by Miss Pensylvania Grice, daughter of the Naval Constructor. An immense number of spectators attended the launch, and there were not less than six hundred persons on board the vessel.

Boston, Oct. 24.

Gov. Gardner has appointed the 29th of November as Thanksgiving Day in Massachusetts.

The Democrats in the Fifth District have chosen the Hon. B. F. Hallett as their delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, Oct. 24.

Barnum's Baby Show in this city has turned out a grand failure. He says it was brought about by the strictures in the Commercial, and has brought a suit against that paper, claiming $10,000 damages.

One Week Later From Europe.

Halifax, Oct. 24, 1855.

The Royal Mail steamship Africa, Capt. Harrison, from Liverpool on the 13th inst., arrived here at 9 o'clock this morning. The Africa sailed at 10 1-2 o'clock for Boston, where she will be due about 5 o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

The steamship Herman left Southampton for New York on the 10th inst., with a full complement of passengers.

The news by this arrival, in a commercial sense, is highly important, but otherwise there is but little of interest.

Affairs at Sebastopol had undergone no change, and except an occasional interchange of shots, everything was quiet.

The Allies were threatening Perekop, and were also manifesting some activity on the Danube.

News of the bombardment of Odessa by the allied fleet was daily looked for.

A slight engagement had taken place near Kertsch, and resulted in favor of the Allies.

From Asia the news is unimportant. The Turks still hold out at Kars, although closely invested and much distressed for provisions.

THE WAR.

But little has occurred at the seat of war, beyond the fact that the Allies were threatening Perekop, and that their advance had for a time been checked.

French troops were being concentrated on the Danube, and Odessa was expected to be immediately bombarded by the allied fleet, which was before its walls.

The garrison at Kars still held out.

Gen. Simpson, in his last dispatch; dated Sebastopol, September 29, says that 9,500 men were employed daily in making a road from Balaklava to the camp. Fatigue parties in the town were engaged in getting timber and other materials from the ruins, in order to get shelter for the troops ere bad weather set in.

The Russian fire from the batteries on the north side cause Gen. Simpson some little annoyance, but has not prevented work being carried on. By the explosion of a kind of infernal machine, numbers of which had been dug up in various parts of the town and around the batteries, an officer and nineteen men were wounded.

Gen. Simpson reports a trifling engagement in which the Tenth Hussars and the chasseurs beat back the Cossacks near Kertsch.

A letter from Vienna states that several bankers there give credence to the rumor that Russia is contracting a loan in North America and that the negotiations are likely to be concluded.

Marseilles advices of the 10th state that the Minister of War was still using every exertion to re-enforce the army in the Crimea.

A letter from Sebastopol, in the Frankfort Gazette, states that the sunken Russian ships can be raised without difficulty, as the Russians closed them in every part but one, and attached hose to the hulls so that the water can be pumped out when required.

Pelissier and Simpson, according to The Daily News, have had a meeting, with a view to prevent what they consider indiscreet revelations by newspaper correspondents, military and civil.

Gen. Marmora declares, in an order of the day, that he will severely punish the authors of any letters which may have been found, by informing the Russians of the movements of the Allies, to have injured the position of the latter.

THE LATEST.

Advance of the Allies upon Perekop.—A dispatch from Prince Gorchakoff, dated October 9, received at St. Petersburg, states that the Allies had advanced from Eupatoria, threatening Perekop, but had retired on meeting the advance host of the Russian left flank. Sixteen battalions of the Russians were thrown into disorder.

Retirement of the Russians.—According to the Frankfort Post Zeitung, the body of the Russian army had been withdrawn from the plateau on the north side of Sebastopol toward the heights of the Belbec. Only a few thousand men now garrison the northern forts.

In the neighborhood of Nicolaieff some 45,000 men are concentrated, 28,000 of whom belong to the newly raised military.

A British Fleet Sent to the Coast of Italy.—Her Majesty's ships London, Rodney, Albion, Leander and Wasp have received orders to proceed, under the command of Admiral Stafford, to the coast of Italy. They will begin their mission, it is said, in the Bay of Naples.

Filling up the Trenches.—A letter from Sebastopol in The Marseilles Journal, says that one of the orders which has been executed by the troops with the greatest pleasure is that of filling up the trenches. It is stated that the troops regard their prospects so favorably that a great number of the soldiers of the class of 1847 who may now quit the service do not wish to do so.

Bombardment of Odessa.—The allied fleet, which, according to the last news, sailed on a secret expedition from Sebastopol, anchored off Odessa on the 8th day of October. Prince Gorchakoff reports that the force consists of eight ships of the line, twenty-seven steamers and one other vessel. No news of the bombardment had been received up to the latest dates, but was expected immediately. Odessa, since the destruction of the corn ports in the Sea of Azoff, has formed the chief if not the sole means of support of the Russian army in the Crimea. The Emperor of Russia and suite arrived at Odessa on the 22d of September, but left again the next day for Nicolaieff to attend a council of war.

Russian Losses.—The Invalide Russe gives a detailed account of the losses of the Russian garrison on the 8th September, as follows: Killed 2,684, wounded 6,058, contusions 1,205, missing 1,754—total 11,701. The same journal states that the Russians lost 1,500 on the 10th of August, and 1,000 men per day every up to September 5. Thus it would appear that the losses of the garrison for the last three weeks of the siege amounted to 32,200 men, irrespectively of disease.

The Danube.—According to the Constantinople Journal the Commander of the Turkish army on the Danube has received instructions to provide rations for forty or fifty thousand French troops, who are to arrive at Silistria about the end of October.

A telegraph from Constantinople states that the Anglo-Turkish Contingency has received orders to proceed to Schumla.

Mediation.—In a circular addressed by the Austrian Government to its representatives, it is intimated, that though Prussia is at liberty to act as mediator between the belligerent powers, the present is not a favorable time for such medtation; that, in fact, the Western Powers must follow up the advantage gained, and not treat with Russia when they have expelled her from the Crimea. The manifesto asserts that the most perfect understanding existed between Austria and France.

THE WAR IN ASIA.

General Mouarvieuff has forwarded to St. Petersburgh a report of a successful engagement, in which the Cossacks, militia, and dragoons, commanded by Lieutenant General Kovalerski, defeated a detachment of 1,800 regular Turkish cavalry, and 1,000 Bashi Bazouks. The Turks had about 400 killed.

Ali Pasha, the commander, who took part in most of the last wars of Turkey was made prisoner. The Turks lost all their guns.

The garrison at Kars still holds out though reduced to great extremes. Part of Omar Pasha's force was advancing from Batoum to attempt to raise the blockade. The Turkish force now at Kars numbers 10,000 men.

THE BALTIC.

The Russians are repairing Sweaborg with the greatest activity, enlarging the barracks and building batteries, &c. Further accounts from Riga, though meager, of the bombardment, state that the batteries at the mouth of Duna had suffered little, but the battery at Ballen had considerably.

On the 25th September three frigates anchored at the mouth of the River Sulis and the boats' crews set fire to ten vessels.

Rear Admiral Penaud describing the expedition to the Gulf of Bothnia by one French corvette and two English steamers, states: Eleven Russian vessels anchored off Buran, a small town on the Finish coast, were captured; also, eight other small vessels, making the tunnage captured 2,500.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Thursday, the 10th inst., was the weekly Board day of the Bank of England. A protracted discussion took place, but no change was made in the rate of discount.

A meeting of the creditors of Delisle and Janvrin had been held, and the statement of their affairs was very satisfactory.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur announces, officially, that the Empress has entered the fifth month of her pregnancy, and that her health is excellent.

An alliance between Prince Napoleon and the Princess Royal of England, it is stated by the Times correspondent, is rumored in political circles.

DENMARK.

It is announced in one of the London papers, that the Danish Government has invited all maritime powers, including the United States, to meet in Congress at Copenhagen in November, to settle the question of the Sound Dues. Denmark, it is said, proposes a capitalization and redemption of the Dues.

GREECE.

The Ministry have resigned, owing to the resistance of the King in refusing to have any intercourse with Gen. Kalergi, Minister of War. The King accepted the resignations, and a new Ministry has been formed.

London Money Market.—The minimum Bank of England rate of discount continues 5 1-2 per cent, at which rate money has been in great request this week, but the demand somewhat slacked at the close.

Consols quoted on Friday at 87 1-4 a 87 1-2 for money, and 87 3-4 for account. Mexican dollars, 4s. 11 3-4d. Bar silver, 5s. 1 1-4d. American Eagles, 76s. 2 1-2d.

From the Far West.

We have received three copies of a well printed newspaper, called the Puget Sound Courier, published in Washington Territory—the latest dates August 24th. The one of August 24 contains considerable speculation concerning apprehended Indian troubles and depredations. The whites are preparing to give them a warm reception. The prospects of crops were good; a vast quantity of lumber was being sawed for shipment to California and elsewhere.

The subject of new mail routes was warmly discussed. Grasshoppers had committed much damage to crops and grass. Several columns are filled with Mormon communications, defending polygamy and the monstrous pretensions of that sect.—[Chicago Tribune.

Different nations have different kinds of loafers. The Italian spends his time in sleeping—the Turkish loafer in dreaming—the Spanish in praying—the French in laughing—English in swearing—the Russian in gambling—the Hungarian in smoking—the German in drinking—and the American in talking politics.

A few days since, a German was riding along Sansome street, near Sacramento, when he heard the whizzing of a ball near him, and felt his hat shaken. He turned about, and saw a man with a revolver in his hand, and took off his hat, and found a fresh bullet-hole in it.

"Did you shoot at me?" asked the German.

"Yes," replied the other party; "that's my horse. It was stolen from me recently."

"You must be mistaken," says the German, "I have owned the horse for three years."

"Well," says the other, "when I come to look at him, I believe I am mistaken. Excuse me, sir; won't you take a drink?"

The rider dismounted, and tied his horse. The two found a drinking saloon; they drank together, and parted friends. That is the California fashion to make acquaintances.

The Naturalization Harvest.—Since about the middle of January last, near 9000 persons have received their final naturalization papers from the Superior and Common Pleas Courts, in this city. Some one or two thousand more will become voters before the election. Thus, in all probability, on the election day, at least 10,000 new voters will have been added to the poll list in this city since the last election. Yet some suppose we will not poll a very heavy vote this Fall. We should think that at least 60,000 votes will be polled, and that from 20,000 to 25,000 of these will be adopted citizens.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost; which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, if is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Edén, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils".

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses. en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu. dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "The Mormon" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "The Mormon" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Poetry.

Let Us Be Happy.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Oh! let us be happy when friends gather round us,
However the world may have shadowed our lot,
When the rose-braided links of affection have bound us,
Let the cold chains of earth be despised and forgot;
And say not that friendship is only Ideal,
That truth and devotion are blessings unknown,
For he who believes every heart as unreal,
Has something unsound at the core of his own.

Oh! let us be happy when moments of pleasure
Have brought to our presence the dearest and best,
For the pulse always beats to most heavenly measure,
When love and good-will sweep the strings of the breast.

Oh! let us be happy, when moments of meeting
Bring those to our side who illumine our eyes;
And though Folly, perchance, shake a bell at the greeting,
He is the dullest of fools who for ever is wise.
Let the laughter of Joy echo over our bosoms,
As the hum of the bee o'er the 'mid-summer flowers,
For the honey of happiness is from love's blossoms,
And is found in the hive of those exquisite hours.

Then let us be happy when moments of pleasure
Have brought to our presence the dearest and best,
For the pulse always beats to most heavenly measure,
When love and good-will sweep the strings of the breast.

Let us plead not a spirit too sad and too weary,
To yield the kind word, and the mirth-lighted smile;
The heart like the tree must be fearfully dreary,
Where the robin of hope will not warble awhile.
Let us say not in pride, that we care not for others,
And live in our wealth like an ox, in his stall;
'Tis the commerce of love, with our sisters and brothers,
Helps to pay our great debt to the Father of All.

Then let us be happy when moments of pleasure
Have brought to our presence the dearest and best,
For the pulse ever beats with more heavenly measure,
When love and good-will sweep the strings of the breast.

Flax and Hemp.

Common flax is an inheritant of temperate countries, from the neighborhood of the tropics to the polar circle, wherever the temperature of the climate is not depressed by mountain elevations; but it is not known to what region it owes its origin. It may be thought strange, perhaps, by some, that this plant should thrive in the hot valley of the Nile, and in regions so cold as those of Russia and Norway, in lattitude 65 degrees north; but this circumstance is obvious when we consider how rapidly this product completes the cycle of its growth, and that in the north of Europe it is an object of culture in summer, and in Egypt only in winter. In the latter, it is sown in December or January, in the fields just quitted by the overflowing Nile, and is harvested in April or May; in the north of Russia, it is sown in May, and harvested in August or September; the conditions of the temperature of the two places being nearly the same.

The history of this plant, which has long served as the medium of clothing myriads of human beings, of wafting ships from sea to sea, of conveying thoughts from man to man, from nation to nation, and of diffusing light and knowledge to the utmost parts of the earth, like many of our products, is involved in lost antiquity. Early mention is made of it in the sacred volume, where it is said that "hail destroyed the flax and barley," when Moses was striving in vain to move Pharaoh to allow the departure of the Israelites. The Egyptian mummies are wrapped in linen—an undeniable proof of the use of flax in the remotest past. It was also known to the Romans, as Pliny, who wrote more than eighteen hundred years ago, remarks on the wonder that so great a power should be developed from so small a seed as that of flax, in producing a plant which could be the means of bringing Egypt so near to Italy, in allusion to the fact that commerce and navigation depended principally upon its production but, at the same time, grew angry, that men should venture to brave nature by setting sails on their vessels, and cursed those who invented the mariner's art, as well as those who brought it to pass that men should perish by it, not only on the earth, but on the sea, without finding burial.

Hemp, which is supposed to be a native of India, but long since acclimatized and extensively cultivated in various parts of Europe and America, also forms an article of primary importance in commerce, and is of extensive utility.

Both flax and hemp were introduced into the British North American colonies soon after their settlements by Europeans. The former appears to have been cultivated at New Netherland as early as 1626, as it is mentioned, among other products sent to Holland by the colonists on Manhattan Island that year, as an evidence of their prosperous condition.

Acoording to the records of the "Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England," the seeds of hemp and flax were ordered to be introduced into that colony in 1629. In about the year 1745, some emigrants from the north of Ireland came to Massachusetts and established and improved manufacture of linen and other "spinning work." Many trials had been previously made in that colony for raising hemp, but the soil was not considered sufficiently strong. Two acres of cow-pen land would produce a ton of fibre; but it soon exhausted the soil. Flax was cultivated in considerable abundance in that State soon after the war of independence, particularly at a distance from the coast. Manufactures were established at Salem and Springfield, in about the year 1790, for making sail-cloth.

Hemp and flax were annually cultivated, spun, and woven, by Captain Matthews, of Virginia, prior to 1648. Bounties were offered for the production of hemp in that colony in 1651, and on flax in 1657; but on the cessation of the bounties the culture declined. In 1662, each poll in Virginia was required to raise per annum six pounds of linen thread. The Irish immigrants who came to Londonderry, in New Hampshire, in 1719, soon after commenced the manufacture of linen cloth and thread, which was afterwards entered into by others, and large quantities were sold.

In 1730, the Assembly of Pennsylvania passed an act for the encouragement of growing hemp, showing that some progress had already been made in its manufacture. The Irish settlers of that colony manufactured considerable quantities of linen, besides enough for their own consumption.

In 1733, the British Parliament granted to the patentees of Georgia, for the encouragement of the culture of wine, silk, cotton, wool, cochineal, flax, and hemp, £10,000; between that period and 1743, £120,000; in 1749, £5,324.

Early attention was paid to the cultivation and manufacture of flax and hemp in Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana. Between November 24, 1810, and January 24, 1811, there were transported down the Ohio, in flat-boats, 400 pounds of hemp, 479 pounds of tarred rope, 20,784 pounds of bale-rope, 154,000 pounds of rope-yarn, 1,484 pounds of thread, 27,700 yards of bagging, and 4,619 yards of tow cloth. Extensive factories had already been established at Louisville, Lexington, Shelbyville, and Frankfort, in Kentucky, where considerable quantities of cordage, bagging, &c., were made for transport and domestic use.

The Harmonists of Indiana erected a mill prior to 1796, in which they manufactured 4,000 pounds of flax and hemp in 1809. Since that period the rich lands of the Western States have been more or less cultivated with hemp, which is now produced as a staple crop.

The fibres of flax and hemp have never been produced in this country in sufficient abundance to enter into our foreign commerce, nor for domestic use in the finer articles of wearing apparel, except thread and lace. Liberal premiums have been offered by the American Institute of New York and other institutions, for the manufacture of finer fabrics; samples of which have been produced from time to time that reflected much credit on those who made them, and which were pronounced equal to any imported.

There were exported from New Jersey, in 1751, 14,000 pounds of hemp; from Savannah, in 1770, 1,860 pounds. The amount of flaxseed exported from Philadelphia, in 1752, was 70,000 bushels; in 1767, 84,658 bushels; in 1771, 110,412 bushels; from New York, in 1755, 12,528 hogsheads.

The amount exported from the British North American colonies, in 1770, 312,612 bushels; from the United States, in 1791, 292,460 bushels; in 1800, 289,684 bushels; in 1810, 240,579 bushels.

According to the census returns of 1840, there were raised in the United States 95,251 3-4 tons of flax and hemp; of 1850, 34,871 tons of hemp and 7,709,676 pounds of flax, besides 562,312 bushels of flaxseed; showing a diminution in the aggregate growth of fibre of about 56,000 tons. The amount of hemp raised in the Union in 1853, may be estimated at 34,000 tons; and that of flax, 8,000,000 pounds, besides 58,000 bushels of flaxseed; which, in reckoning the hemp at $100 per ton, the flax fibre at 10 cents a pound and the seed at $1 25 per bushel, would be worth, in the aggregate, $4,272,500.—[Patent Office Report.

Life Near the North Pole.

The N. Y. Tribune, gives the following sketch of life toward the North Pole from the experience of Dr. Kane and his party:

On going out in the morning, the first breath you take gives a tickling sensation to the lungs, and you feel it clear through them, as though you were breathing some exhiliarating gas; but after the first breath the lungs seem to adapt themselves to it, and though the thermometers stand at 50 degrees or 60 degrees below zero, they experience no great inconvenience. At such a temperature, if you are warmly clothed you may go out and exercise on the ice, quite comfortably, when there is no wind. Your beard becomes heavy with your frozen breath; but when you have become accustomed to this you can enjoy a game at football on a smooth patch of ice, and that too without fear of slipping into an air-hole. But when there is a wind, though it be slight the case is different. It is, then of no use to multiply thicknesses of cloth; the biting air strikes through as keenly as though there were but a single thickness of muslin. Skins alone can protect you. You must take your fashions from the Esquimaux. You find the field in which you may exercise your taste to be rather limited; you have seal skin, deer-skin, rarely a bear-skin—from these you must fashion yourself, if you cannot purchase of some Esquimaux modiste seal skin or deer-skin pantaloons and seal-skin boots. If the pantaloons do not cover your foot neatly and have no straps, you must be content, it is the fashion of the country, and the Esquimaux belles will not think less of you on that account. They too, wear seal-skin pantaloons, and boots. Taken together these continuations cover limbs corresponding to those which yours cover. The division, however, is different; their boots come up half way above the knee, and the pantaloons come down to meet them. The boots are double consisting of what may be termed a seal skin stocking, with the fur inside, and a boot of the same material, with the flesh side next the stocking. Toward their upper extremities the boots are of very ample dimensions, and in spite of this it is said they fit tightly. The pantaloons are frequently of a very beautiful color, and are ornamented with strips of red and white leather, elaborately embroidered in fine mosaic patterns, as the garment is entire, and depends solely upon the closeness of its fit for its support, the manner of putting it on becomes a problem of no little interest. You ponder over it long and vainly. At last you acquaint some fair confidante with the subject of your speculations, and without any affectation of prudery she tells you "it is perfectly easy," and straightway drawing an imaginary pair over her feet, and above her knees she crosses her legs, and lo! they slide easily upward into their place. They are held there by the projection of the hips, which prevent them from falling until the same position is again assumed. Their boots are double, so that they may by being taken apart be more easily dried. This is necessary, since the skins intercept the perspiration from the foot, and when night comes are always very moist. The upper portion of the body is covered first, with the usual garment, generally unadorned by laces. Over this habiliament is a loose jarah of calico, with a loose ruff of dog's fur around the throat. Underneath, a white neckerchief is tied closely around the throat. This is put on in bandage form, and suggests influenza or bronchitis so forcibly as to be almost painful to the sight. However, you soon get over this feeling, and learn to dwell with delight upon their Mongolian features and the pagoda of hair which crowns their low foreheads. The constant practice of combing the hair straight back renders the temples bald while they are yet young—a warning to those who have adopted the Chinese style of dressing the hair. Music is a great favorite with the Esquimaux—the men being most of them performers upon the violin, and possessing a ready ear, a retentive memory, and considerable natural taste in the production of their melodies. You will not find them averse to dancing, if you distribute two or three bottles of whisky. They are very apt at learning new dances, and a waltz which was taught them by one of the officers of Lieut. De Haven's expedition was found by him, five years after, to be very common and remarkably well performed. In the lower settlements in Greenland you will be invited to a ball almost every night.

Among the northern tribes some of their customs are most inhuman. At Cape Alexander, in 78 degrees 20 minutes north, there are about thirty Esquimaux living in seven families. One of these consisted of a young man and woman and two children, the youngest of which was weak and sickly; so they made a grave and laid the child in it and covered her with a stone. This is the way in which they get rid of the aged and feeble. But whatever may be their failings, from religion or from custom, except in the most northerly portion of Greenland, "free love" finds no favor with the Esquimaux women. When married they are true to their husbands, and unmarried, they are true to themselves. They cherish the memory of their friends. One of the officers of Lieut. De Haven's expedition was greeted on his return to Leively in the expedition of Hartstein by the gentle Sophie Broberg with a kiss and a rapturous exclaimation of delight. He brought home a photograph of her and her sister Masie, who "has the fairest set of teeth in Greenland," and has been educated in Copenhaven. The photograph is faint, for the sun in Greenland is weak still it gives a good idea of their features and dress. Another officer has a small daguerreotype of six of the Leively belles.

The Great Struggle in Europe.

The Westminster Review ably and eloquently sets forth the true significance of the social struggle in the Old World, and hints at its counterpart in the New:

Such questions as those of Monarchy, Republicanism, do not at all sound the real controversy, as to the depth and intensity of which our richer classes seem to be as much in the dark as ever were the Catholic kings concerning the Protestant need of religious freedom. The real struggle of Europe is for two things: first, with many, for "Nationality," or recognition; next, with all the leaders of the cause, for "Morality," as the fundamental guide of statesmanship. Republicanism is not the end desired, but it is the only means possible, by reason of the folly or wickedness of royal courts. For instance—Germany, in 1848, desired national union, and was content to keep its princes; but because of this moderation, the princes were enabled to break their oaths, and suppress the Parliament of Frankfort. It is now manifest that German union is impossible without overturning the thrones; and as to this, the perfidy of the princes (except three) has removed all scruple. Again, Hungary desired at first only that her ancestral laws should be observed, which her Austrian kings pertinaciously violated. To enforce the law, a peaceful parliamentary reform was carried, to which the king duly made oath. When, after this, the Austrian cabinet, to get rid of the new laws, stirred up a civil war, arbitrarily overthrew the constitution, and invaded Hungary with armies, the President of the Committee of Defense resisted all the republican tendencies, but sought to change the succession into the line of the Palatine Archduke Stephen. The Archduke refused, the war was fought out, and the Austrians beaten; on this the Austrian dynasty was deposed, and a king for Hungary was entreated of the Government of Queen Victoria. This having failed through the refusal of our Ministers, the party of freedom in Hungary (which is the nation) at length inevitably became republican. The same is true of Poland and of Italy. Each nation desires first and chiefly national independence; for which it is obviously essential to have any unity and massiveness; neither a fractional Poland nor a fractional Italy can have real independence. But whether the monarchical or the republican parties in these two countries will prove the stronger, depends wholly on the question, in which way they get a prospect of independence; so little is there of pedantry involved in the great question of nationality.

But deeper still lies the question. Is Right to be recognized in the affairs of nations, as paramount and sacred, equally as in the affairs of individuals? The heart of the people every where says, Yes. The Republicans of Europe decidedly say, Yes. But, alas! the dynasty faction, both in England and on the Continent—the secret diplomatists—unanimously reject the rule of simple Right, and even decide it as a puerile enthusiasm. Expediency is the guide: if the Expedient happens also to be the right, they will, no doubt, be eloquent on the latter topic; but, to judge by their uniform conduct Right which does not meet their notions of Expediency, has no chance of support, even from their pens or from their private sympathies. Herein we see upon the republicans the mark of martyrs and heroes. "The Kossuths and Mazzinis," of whom the Emperor Nicholas spoke with mixed contempt and fear, may be persecuted and execrated as are the apostles of any new creed; but they are preaching a nobler practice and a higher faith than our routine statesmen dream of, and therefore the success of their cause is certain, even though they die before its triumph. This faith it is which animates them, and inspires them with power to kindle the hearts of others. To pass from such an atmosphere to the "Secret Correspondence" is like the transition from a speech of Luther to the decree of the Pope.

It is not because they are republicans that the republican party hold this faith in Right and Truth: republicanism, as we have said, is but accidently connected with it. Of this we have a new melancholy truth beyond the Atlantic, where the very same struggle is going on among the republicans themselves. There, as here, the men in power make Expediency their god—a fact which is often coarsely avowed among their supporters. "Our country, right or wrong," has been a well known toast with them, to express their resolution to neglect moral considerations while studying its aggrandizement; and the tone and conduct of the same party in regard to other questions, still more steadily and explicitly declares, that they have no particle of faith in right, nor in moral retribution to nations. In antagonism to these ascendent republicans stand the oppositionists, sometimes fanatical, but always upright; resolved to act on moral principle, and to sacrifice the convenient, the pleasant, the easy, the apparently or temporally expedient, to the sacred certainty of Right. These men are in America, what the republicans are in Europe, apostles or martyrs—not for a new creed, but for applying the old creed honestly, to the highest affairs of nations equally as to daily and hourly life. Here lies the real struggle for a "New Moral World."

Abd-el-Kader as a Theologian.

The celebrated Abd-el-Kader, who is a member of the Asiatic Society of France, has recently forwarded to the society, as a mark of respect, the manuscript of a religious work, consisting of religious and moral disquisitions, written by him. As a specimen of the spirit in which it is written, we may mention that in the first chapter, which treats of the advantages of science, the author complains that the learned men, of Europe, and particularly of France, who have carried human knowledge to a vast height, and are constantly carrying it higher, never think of raising their hearts and minds towards God, who governs the world with supreme wisdom. "Never," says he, "do they mention him in their conversations, and never is there any question of him in their writings." The Emir exhibits a degree of theological knowledge rather remarkable for a Mohometan. He brings Islamism into comparison with Judaism and Christianity, and argues ingeniously to show that the former is the complement and fulfillment of both the latter.—[Chicago Democratic Press.

Brussels, 1850—legitimate, 3,448; illegitimate, 1,833. Munich, 1851—legitimate, 1,702; illegitimate, 1,702. Vienna, 1849—legitimate, 8,881; illegitimate, 10,860.

Aluminium—A Beautiful and Useful Metal.

The recent experiments and discoveries of M. Deville, a French chemist, has obtained by a new process, a metal closely resembling silver. It is called aluminium, and is described as being of a brilliant color approaching to whiteness, not liable to tarnish, extremely light in specific gravity, tenacious, malleable, capable of being worked into leaf or plate extremely thin. The experiments indicate that it can be obtained at a very cheap rate, and its cheap production seems to open a new era in metallurgy, and to introduce a complete revolution in the application of metals to purposes of usefulness and art. Among other qualities, it possesses the singular property of being light as glass, and sonorous as bell metal, would be exceedingly useful if it were possible to obtain it easily. It is found on working to offer greater resistance than silver; and it is, therefore, supposed to approach nearer to iron in tenacity. It increases in hardness by being worked, but will regain its former condition by the annealing process. The melting point of aluminium approaches that of silver; its density is 2.56; it may be melted and run off in the open air without undergoing any perceptible oxidation; and is a very good conductor of heat.

This metal was discovered by Sir Humphrey Davy; or rather its existence was inferred by him, and the inference has been confirmed by subsequent experiments. It exists in nature in large quantities, and its ore is common clay. M. Deville has reported to the French Academy, under whose auspices he is conducting the experiments on a large scale, that he had caused medals of large size to be struck in aluminium, and also prepared plates of the same, which were not affected by exposure to the air; and further, that small ingots of the same metal, although handled daily, were found to retain their brilliancy; in fact this substance was so inoxidisable, that it resisted the action of the air, even when heated to the temperature employed for assaying gold. To what extent it may hereafter be available in the arts, is a question which the chemists are busily discussing. Much will depend upon the cost of production, and if the above facts, gleaned from the Mining Chronicle, correctly describe the properties of aluminium, our chemists cannot be more usefully employed than in devising cheap and rapid processes for producing a metal so beautiful and so useful.

Right of Husbands in Peril.

A Man Forbidden to burn the Dead Body of his Wife.

The Milwaukie American says that city was thrown into the greatest excitement on the 19th inst., by an attempt of a man there to burn the dead body of his wife.

The story was as follows:

A Russian by the name of Pfeil married a woman who was a Brahmin in belief. He was possessed of wealth, and both were persons of culture. She sickened and died, and requested, according to the faith of her fathers, that her body should be burned. Pfeil had collected sixteen cords of wood, arranged it properly, and was about to perform the deed, when news of the fact was circulated, creating intense excitement.

Sheriff Conover proceeded at once to Pfeil's house, and forbade the act. The Russian asserted his right and duty to, to burn the body of his wife. "No law forbids," said he, "my religion commands; I will do it." The body was in its shroud, the torches prepared, and all was ready to place it on the funeral pyre. "Let it be borne to its place," continued the Russian; there is no law against it in Wisconsin."

But the sheriff took possession of the body, ordered a coffin, and made preparation for its Christian burial. The crowd grew, and thronged round the house. Alarmed or afraid to persist, Pfeil gave his consent to a Christian burial. "You may order or have what ceremonies you please over the body," said Sheriff Conover. "Gentlemen," replied Pfeil, "it makes no difference with me if we cannot go on in our own way."

Thereupon the body was buried—though the American intimates that the woman had been foully dealt with, and demands the fullest investigation into the matter.

What authority the sheriff had to interfere, and to decide that the man should bury and not burn his wife, we leave to the lawyers to settle.

What the War Costs Us.

Rise in the Price of "Materials."

The pretty little game which is now being played by the great European Powers costs everybody something, not only there but here. Many articles of which immense quantities are wasted in war, are used for the arts of peace, and every manufacturer suffers from the extra demand, the consequent limited supply and increased price. In the articles of saltpetre, lead, gunpowder, naval stores, hemp, and some kinds of iron, the advance in prices since the war broke out has been an average of thirty per cent. Saltpetre has advanced from six to fourteen cents per pound, and none is to be had at the latter figure. For a long time our markets have been active on European account, and a great deal of saltpetre comes here from India, in order that it may be re-shipped to German ports. Some shipments have arrived here and been immediately re-shipped to England.

Gunpowder, for shipping, which was worth ten cents per pound when the war broke out, has advanced to twenty, and the market is close. Galena lead has gone up a cent a pound since 1853, and the rise in naval stores is about twenty-five per cent. If the war should continue several years longer it may take all the inflamables and combustibles out of the country. We wish Garrison and Greeley could be sold out, but they always flash in the pan.—[New York Herald.

Well-timed Advice.

The Baltimore Patriot, in an article criticising the late war letter of the Charleston Mercury, says:

Let South Carolina render herself independent of the north, not by force of arms, but by superior cheapness of manufactures—by making sheetings and shirtings at southern mills; by tanning her own hides, instead of the hides of her puritan sisters; by making or raising her own "ducks," instead of buying either the cotton ones of Massachusetts or the feathered ones of Muscovy; by pegging her own shoes, instead of pegging away at fanatical shoemakers, and by encouraging no "drillings" but such as are of domestic manufacture, three-quarters wide, of a round, even thread and of serviceable quality. These are my strategetic points, young man, and I am inclined to think you will find them a good deal better than your own."

The Rothschilds.

An article is going the rounds of the press stating that the whole concern of the Rothschilds is worth $700,000,000 in money capital, beside $300,000,000 more in real estate, mines, &c. So far from this being the fact, we understand that the general estimate in Europe as to the aggregate wealth of the whole concern is 200,000,000 francs, or about $40,000,000. The idea is purely absurd that their wealth should amount to such an enormous sum as $1,000,000,000, equal at six per cent, to an annual income of sixty millions of dollars—a sum which, in comparatively a few years, accumulating in a compound ratio, and doubling it every twelve years, would concentrate in their hands a large portion of the wealth and property of all Europe.—[National Intelligencer.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 3, 1855.

Governorship of Utah.

In the name of Republicanism we ask, why Brigham Young should not be Governor of Utah? We do not ask the question in the name of tradition, prejudice, local or self-interest, but in the broad name of Republicanism—the only ism that should hold prerogative in matters of state within the jurisdiction of the United States. When we arrive at that point in our national existence, that religious prejudice shall sit as umpire, and condemn or advance men according to religious predilection, then may it be said that republicanism, of which we have so long and highly boasted, is among the things that were. The genus of that institution knows no north, no south, no east, no west; no religious predilection, no infidelity, no rich, no poor. It throws the ample folds of its vesture over all these, without ever inquiring into their respective orthodoxy on these points. A man may be any or all of these, and much more, and still be eligible to the office of President of the United States.

But Mr. Young (says the objector to his appointment) has said that he will be Governor so long as God wills that he should, and we wish to show him that it will be as we will, and not particularly as the Almighty wills. Now whether Governor Young said this or not we cannot say, and it is quite immaterial, but this much we will say, that such is the fact; and the American that will cavil at such a saying only shows his degeneracy from his illustrious sires, who established the glorious institutions of our country. They dared acknowledge "the hand of God in all things." They dared endorse the sentiment of Paul, "by the grace of God I am what I am;" and by his power and grace we will maintain the cause of freedom.

But now, it is awful, to advance the idea that "God's ways are higher than man's ways," and that He ruleth in the heavens and taketh cognizance of the doings of the children of men. Yet such is the fact; and if He designs that another than Brigham Young shall be Governor of Utah, He will move upon the appointing power at Washington to that effect, and it will all be right, and will work together for our best good.

When the Lord wanted the Latter Day Saints to get "up into the high mountain" to build a house to his name, and otherwise fulfill the words of the Prophets, He let loose the bloodhounds of Illinois upon them, and dogged them out—for the best of reasons, they would never have gone without; and it was not in his economy for them to stay in that State. Some of the Saints then thought it hard, but have since seen the superior wisdom of the Almighty in their expulsion. Every step taken by that people has rendered more and more visible the hand-dealing of God for their best good. Their faith has increased in Him continually, until they have become such rebels to the General Government, as to say in open daylight, regardless of consequences, that the power of God circumscribes that of man; and of all the hands they have ever fallen into, they prefer to fall into the "hands of the living God."

But this objection will not do. It does not answer the question at issue, from the fact that Republicanism admits of no such objection. So far from a reliance on God being objectionable to our republican institutions, they foster and protect such reliance, and the objector must look for some argument more potent. The fact cannot be concealed, notwithstanding political subterfuges to the contrary, that the unanimous choice of a people for a President, Governor, or other officer to govern them, is paramount to any other consideration known to republicanism. If instead of the direct vote of the people, the appointment of certain officers are placed by law in the hands of an appointing power, and the choice of the people over whom such officer shall preside be known beyond a doubt by the appointing power, as in the case of Mr. Young, no other person can be appointed but at the direct expense or subversion of republican principle; and such innovations or precedents once commenced, it needs no prophet to foretell the result. Such innovations will not only clip the wings of Republicanism, and bring it with faltering pinions to flutter upon the ground, but, like the shears in the hands of Delilah, shave from our republican Sampson the very locks wherein lies his strength; and effeminacy and anarchy, in accordance with all precedents, will alone remain.

We reiterate with all defference to the present administrations, that to appoint a Governor of Utah against the known entire wish of the people of that Territory, would be not only impolitic, but antagonistic to the principles they have imbibed from their fathers; and which are the basis of the institutions of our common country. Under the circumstances of such appointment they no doubt would exercise their forbearance, and submit to it; not from a sense of duty, as regards human rights, but for the sake of peace and amity, and from a feeling of respect naturally due to paternity. It would be unnatural for that people who have principally been traditionated and educated under the institutions of this highly favored country, to seek an occasion or pretext for rebellion against those institutions; and we speak advisedly upon the subject, when we say, that no such feeling exists with that people. The General Government need only to treat Utah with the respect due to her, and all other Territories or States within her jurisdiction, to receive in return, that respect and loyalty, necessary for the perpetuation and success of any Government. She need never be jealous of Utah, unless she inflicts an injustice that her own judgment convinces her is such as should kindle a flame of resentment in the breast of a freeman, in a land of freedom. The people of Utah do not demand, but simply ask of the General Government, to appoint a man that they can respect, without affectation or dissimulation. If a man be sent there, that the people dislike or abhor as has been the case with some of the United States Judges sent there, how can it be expected, on any principle known to natural Philosophy, that there can ever be a reciprocity of feeling, necessary between Governor and Governed. Such an instance would be an anomoly in the history of Republicanism. And further, we do not believe it to be in the composition of any high-minded, honorable man, to desire such a position—that no gentleman competent to fill the office can be found who would be willing to fill it under such circumstances of known incongruity. Not from the idea of insubordination; for we do not believe that there are any who are actually apprehensive of open resistance on the part of the people of Utah—making it necessary, to be backed up by an army of soldiery; this we pass with the unmeasured quantities of absurd gossip, that appears in many of the hackneyed political journals of the day, and is uttered wholesale by the scavengers and news mongers of society; not from insubordination then, but from a want of that sociality and familiarity that existed between David and Jonathan; but which never can exist between Jacob and Esau. Patrick Henry tells us that "Fleets and armies are the last arguments to which king's resort." We cannot suppose a Republican Government, will be more precipitate than a kingly, and use those coercive arguments at the first, that Kings, with all their tyranney, reserve to the last. No! We do not believe, and will not, that Uncle Sam is so devoid of paternal regard towards his young daughter Utah, as to select her lover (in name) and force the bonds of matrimony against her free will and choice; especially when he knows that her heart is given to another. But if perchance this unnatural union should be consumated by the stern and irrivokable decree of such a crusty sire as this would prove him to be, we are confident that the law of hereditary transmition would demonstrate in the progeny some marks and characteristics of the idol impressions of the mother from her former lover.

Gov. Young is beloved and cherished by the people of Utah as a gentleman every way qualified to be their Governor. He has held and does in effect now hold the appointment of Governor of Utah, by virtue of the legitimate appointing power at Washington. He has never been impeached nor given cause to the Government for dissatisfaction. His disbursments as superintendent of Indians affairs and all others incident to his office, have been tempered with the utmost economy and wisdom; and so acknowledged by some of the most prominent in the present Cabinet. Unfortunately this cannot be said of all Governors of Territories at the present time, but can, and has been truthfully said for Mr. Young. Who shall say than, he shall not be Governor of Utah? "We pause for a reply."

The Editor.

ELDER JOHN TAYLOR, the editor of this paper, left the city last Friday for St. Louis, via Philadelphia and Baltimore.

The recent decease of Br. Orson Spencer, who had charge of the editorial department of the St. Louis Luminary, and the Presidency of the St. Louis Conference, has rendered it necessary for Elder Taylor, on whom rests now those responsibilities, to go there immediately. In consequence of his being thus suddenly called to leave for a few weeks, our patrons will please excuse the verdency and incompetency that may appear visible to our readers. We realize our inadequacy to fill the place usually so ably filled by our senior. We have only to say that our short comings shall not be a lack of disposition and assiduity on our part to continue to make THE MORMON what it already has the credit of being, an interesting newspaper.

The Elders Returning Home.

A COMMUNICATION from Brother M. H. Peck, at Weston, Oct. 20th, informs us that he and his son Edwin, in company with T. S. Williams, were to start across the plains that day. Brother Peck expresses himself as being in first-rate health and spirits. We wish him and the rest of the brethren a prosperous journey home to the valleys of the mountains.

What is Modern Civilization?

IT is a term used to distinguish between a state of nature or heathenism and a certain degree of tutored departure from the simplicity in which mankind, with all the creations of God, were originally organized; the reality is better understood, as mankind placed in the most awkward, unnatural and uncomfortable position, both mentally and physically, possible to be assumed by mortals. It is a continued effort to be something else than what we really are, and any exceptions to this rule are designated eccentricities; thus, the higher or more exalted the society, the greater is the restraint, the more affected, unnatural and uncomfortable, the posture to be sustained; thus offering a premium for the longest endurance, the most dramatic air, the most consummate deception, and the farthest remove from that primitive truthfulness in which man was first created.

The present organization of society is such, that not even childhood is exempt from its despotic rule, but in its earliest moments initiated in life by lessons of deception and falsehood, which grow with their growth and strengthen with their strength, checking and distorting every natural impulse and ability. Thus, with few exceptions, all are conceived, born and bred out of place, and live in the vapory atmosphere of error, rather than the pure sunlight of truth; yet this state of moral and physical bondage is called civilization, an approach to beatitude, the nearest heaven. While in contradistinction to this, are the words of the Saviour, saying of children, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Now, how can theologians, philosophers, or philanthropists explain this discrepancy? was it a wrong translation, or was the Savior mistaken?

It is now understood that the best educated are the best adapted to the kingdom of heaven, or in other words, the ministry of heavenly things are only thought proper to be confided to educated hands. Who is there now that would expect "wisdom from the mouths of babes and sucklings?" Certainly not the civilized world, for nothing short of an approved diploma, with the attendant regalia of office, is now acceptable; let but one venture to acknowledge the hand of God, through the inspiring influence of his holy spirit, by revelation, or the administration of an angel, and he would at once be cast out as a fanatic; his diploma, from some long-established institutions, would be called for, or the endorsement of some popular D.D.; or, like the humble Nazarene, he must flee his country, or wear a martyr's crown. Let it be remembered this has ever been the result of civilization, as well as heathenism.

This unnatural swathing of limbs, this distortion from the beautiful symmetry of nature, so prevalent over society, is not for the want of a better law, but because the purer law of truth is repugnant to the generality of mankind; therefore a yoke is placed upon them, which, like ancient Israel, "they nor their fathers were able to bear;" and instead of the free, natural growth, physically and mentally, we see monstrocities of every description, and the farther they are removed from their proper organism, the more they are reverenced, the more acceptable are they to the viciated public taste of modern civilization; and none dare venture to exhibit in their lives the honesty and simplity of the child.

Why is this? Because, "When they knew God they glorified him not, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened: professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, who changed the truth into a lie, and worshipped the creature more than the creator." What could better exemplify society as it is at the present time?

Let the plain simple truths of the gospel, as they are laid down in the scriptures, be presented to society, and they are repugnant in the last degree to its established rules and usages. The question is not raised, does the word of God contain these truths? but reference is at once made to some learned commentator on the Bible, or to the custom of the most fashionable circles; thus, it is almost impossible to introduce to polite society even the pure, simple first principles of the gospel, with its attendant blessings.

Jesus and his apostles were repudiated, not because the Jews had not the law and the prophets, but because they did not believe in them, while they professed to honor them; they preferred the precepts of men to the wisdom of God. It is so now. The word of God is before the people, the teachings of Jesus and his apostles may be seen and read, yet society will turn and persecute those that but reiterate the words and strive to inculcate the very doctrines He taught. Strange as it may seem, those doctrines have been before the American public, in all their simplicity, for twenty-six years, susceptible at all times of being compared with the written word, and even confirmed by "signs following." But the Latter Day Saints, like the simple fishermen of Galilee, not being endorsed by the learned doctors of divinity, are not acceptable to polite society and modern refinement, and the advocates of the true gospel are, as they ever were, stigmatised as Christians, Mormons, and fanatics.

This gospel, with its attendant organization, was expressly given to man as the only true and perfect order of society, not merely spiritually, but in a positive, tangible and temporal sense, (it was offered to ancient Israel, but refused, and therefore was the Mosaic law added) accomplishing the long sought object for which so many socialists, common-stock communists, Fourierites, and thousands of others have striven for, but failed in obtaining. It is not only applicable in government, to small communities, but to nations, kingdoms, tribes, and indeed the whole world.

The gospel, properly understood, is an abstract of those great, universal laws that govern in the works of God, and move the great machinery of creation in that perfection of beauty and order so marked in the glorious constellations of heaven, and in all else of the works of the Creator not deranged by the folly of man. It commences in simplicity, adapted to the wants of mankind, advancing and developing the righteousness of God, from faith to faith, impressing first upon the mind the necessity of self-government, then of communities, districts, countries, kingdoms and the world; admitting of entire freedom, continuing unchecked the development of all those latent, pure, natural powers, wherewith man was first created in the image of his God, while retaining the innate power known only in the perfect combinations of the gospel plan, of purging itself of otherwise inherent corruption ere it impregnates the whole system. It is the most perfect school for the education of man in his duty to himself, his family, his neighbors, his race, his God; and that state of society only, which may truly be called civilization, is that in which the consideration of others' rights are equal to the consideration of our own. This is the law and the prophets, "to do unto others as we would they should do unto us." Until this golden rule prevail, it is useless for any community to claim civilization; without it, there is nothing to distinguish society of the present so-called enlightened age from barbarism, except the mode of administering its cruelty and injustice.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called Mormons, are a people to whom God has manifested this heavenly plan; by it they are governed, by it they strive to live, by it they have thus far been successful against the most determined opposition in every form, and have every reason to believe it will yet prevail as a rule of government over the whole earth, for God has so decreed it. Yet, though holding the richest gems within the gift of heaven, though bringing life and immortality to light, and coming with the offer of Eternal Life, still society may shut itself from the light of eternal truth, because its bearers are not popular, and its administrators not commissioned by the wisdom of this generation. The servants of God, though ever despised by the world, offer that liberty wherewith we are made free in Christ Jesus, which leaves the being free and unshackled to soar its way to God, look into the vista of unborn time, scan eternity, and grasp the powers of Endless Life.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also: and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

Interesting from Washington.

"A new ambassador from Russia, with mediatorial propositions."—[N. Y. Herald.

IT is rumored, and seems to be confirmed from Washington, that it is a "fixed fact" we are to have a special ambassador from the Czar, "with confidential communications of the utmost importance, relative to the terms on which alone Russia will consent to a peace.

She has mediated between the United States and Great Britain, and now the United States may mediate between the Allies and Russia.

She does not ask American mediation, but will accept it, and will then at once indicate her terms, which will embrace such vast commercial advantages for all the world, that the industrious classes of France and England will clamor for their acceptance as soon as they are generally known."

How has the Czar held these "vast commercial advantages for all the world" so long, and not brought all the world to his Czarship's feet ere this? What "new feature in the case" is now presented in Washington? Is there a chance of profitable speculation for "Jonathan," or are some of his friends at Washington (or New York) going to immortalize themselves by saving their country? We wish we understood enough of "wire-pulling" to appreciate the disinterestedness of "our Washington correspondents."

What has Russia to offer so dazzling and attractive to the "industrial classes of France and England?" Will she open her ports to all the manufactories of Europe? This, no doubt, would be a relief to her groaning millions for a time, and it would make a good market for ours too, as well as American produce. In addition to this, it opens a field for American diplomacy in the intricacies of European affairs, and thus gives them the opportunity of reciprocating the compliment in American affairs in case of similar difficulties with the Allies, which, by the way, may be at no distant day.

It is, no doubt, a splendid suggestion, and very attractive to the "industrial classes," but whether of sufficient weight to affect the next Presidential election or not is still a question. As for ourselves, we think the less 'Jonathan' interferes with European affairs, the less European powers will be inclined to interfere with us; so the old Jeffersonian fogies used to think, but then we live in a very fast age, and there is no accounting for tastes. And perhaps the millennium may be nearer than we imagine, and "our Washington correspondents" will perhaps be more successfully employed in beating spears into pruning-hooks and swords into plow-shares.

It is an old and valuable maxim, "that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," would it not be an excellent idea to engage this Russian ambassador to mediate between the north and the south, and settle some other little internal difficulties; in this manner he would become better acquainted with our republican institutions, and be able to carry back a good report to his Czarship, and show him the consistency of our country's motto, "E pluribus unum."

Dr. Clinton.

ELDER JETER CLINTON has returned from St. Louis to his old stamping ground in Philadelphia, in good health and spirits. Success to the Doctor.

ONE of the United States officers in Utah, has become a Mormon, and has two wives, one of whom resides on a farm and the other in the city. He claims that he is in the performance of a religious duty, and manifests a strong appearance of sincerity.—[Squatter Sovereign.

Free Loveism.

WE feel to sympathize with the Sun, and believe the plague spot to be rapidly spreading—but where is the remedy; other papers will publish, notwithstanding the "astonishment" of the Sun; but even if they do not publish, the plague spot is still here, and break out it will, and the very secrecy attempted by the more prudish only serves to irritate the evil: indeed it is no longer a question, that the prevalence of certain morbid false delicacy has done more to steam up the hotbed of debauchery and corruption than the most open display of its loathsomeness could do, for the former surrounds it with the intense attraction of mystery, while an open, free display may shock, but its attendant horrors would be so revolting as to throw a dread over the mind of the young, that otherwise in after years can never be accomplished. It is the shock that is so much dreaded by the sensitive and fastidious—not of morals, but upon the barriers of false delicacy established by society, without a proper regard to its results. The truth, wherever it is found, should be met boldly and without subterfuge; this is why we ask, where is the remedy for such wide-spreading corruption? Certain it is, that this sin is, and has been, most fearfully increasing; of that fact there can be no doubt. If its deadly effects were realized only upon the present generation, it might be viewed with calmness for the present, and with hope for the future; but it is not so. Every physiologist is aware that its most destructive powers will be developed upon the generations that follow, and that which is now but as a grain of mustard seed, will hereafter become a great tree, and would, if allowed to grow, like the Upas tree, impregnate all who dared to venture near its poisonous influence. But again, what is the remedy? Dare you, delicate editors, meet the question? You know the whole system is diseased and nigh unto death, and if a prescription is to be given, it is needed now. Will you dare meet the question, or will you crowd it under the table out of sight, to fester still longer, only to break out anew, to infect all that remains of life. You refer to the "gross sensualism of Brigham Young"—you do not know what you are talking about. Brigham Young could, if he chose, dilate upon the sensualism of Christendom, and tell with truth, and point you to the results for evidence that cannot be gainsayed. Can you do so of Utah? His course has been open and aboveboard, prepared to meet the question face to face, the results of which you so much deplore; and how has he met it? not with "Coleur de Rose"—not with "passeonate attractions"—not with the dark doings of "houses of ill-fame"—not through procuresses and "nymphs du pave"—but in broad, open daylight, in the face of the whole world, he sternly advocates the pure laws of God as given to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—not to cover abomination, for that would be absurd, but to eradicate from community such abominations as you charge him with, while admiting they overwhelm yourselves. Brigham Young knows the state of the world as well as yourselves, and with the known laws of God, with a nervous, bold hand, he has commenced to handle the debilitated patient, and will continue to prescribe according to the symptoms from time to time, notwithstanding the fears and doubts of trembling mourners that surround the dying couch. It is enough that he believes in Revelation, and fearlessly obeys the bequests of heaven, and is prepared by wisdom from on high to prescribe either morally, physically, or politically for the world. Gentlemen, it is no chimera—God's fundamental laws of human society, properly administered, (view them as you will,) are the only safe prescriptions for this cancerous evil, that is fast eating into your vitals. We have quoted entire the remarks of the New York Sun upon the Free Love League, as serving to show the diversity of opinion, as well as the evident insecurity of the morals of the country, manifest in the feelings of the writer;

"The Times and the Tribune, of this city, have recently been bestowing much attention on a Society of Free Lovers, organized in this city by certain social theorists who regard marriage as a barbarous institution. The establishments of our cotemporaries would seem to be well represented in this progressive Society, and they are thus enabled to render the Society the most efficient service in portraying its theories and doings in the mildest, most charitable, and most attractive manner. Before the Times introduced the Society to public notice, the attendance at its meetings was very limited, being confined mostly to the more advanced students of the "passional attraction" doctrine. But since the Coleur de Rose explanation of the character and aims of the Society appeared in the Times from the pen of a member, the attendance, we learn, has increased so rapidly that the Society is seriously embarrassed as to the best mode of dealing with the numbers seeking "the light"—of love.

"One of the principal amusements of the Society is dancing; but the male converts are now far outnumbering the female accessions. The harmony of attraction is thus seriously disturbed, and to regulate it in some measure the tariff of admission has been doubled or trebled on gentlemen (?) appearing without ladies. The Times, as a consequence, has become immensely popular with the free lovers, and the Tribune manifests its jealousy of its rival's enterprise in anticipating its own intention to be the organ of this new fusion movement, by devoting some seven or eight columns and a leader to the Society and its pleasures.

"The reading thus furnished must prove highly edifying and improving to the families of citizens who take the papers that their sons and daughters may grow enlightened and virtuous members of society. Many months ago we were presented with the constitution and by-laws of the Society, and offered a description of their meetings, but we declined to give notoriety to an infamous scheme to demoralize the young by presenting under a fascinating aspect an association of libertines whose theories are worse in their tendencies than the grossest sensualism taught by Brigham Young. If left to obscurity such things die out, and the only effect of publishing descriptions of the fair exterior in which these new forms of vice at first present themselves, is to awaken curiosity, and drive the young and thoughtless into the snares of cunning and unprincipled destroyers.

"We are astonished that public journals, professing respect for public morality, should display so little good judgment, or rather, so much prurience of taste, as to spread the poison under the poor pretence of exposing 'Free Love' mysteries. They do not expose them. They do not draw aside the veil and show the fiend which directs these mysteries. It may be true that

'Vice is a monster of such hideous mien,
That to be hated needs but to be seen,'

but the 'monster' is not dragged forth to public view. It is Pleasure, with all her attractions, and surrounded with a joyous throng of delighted devotees, that is presented to the view of the thoughtless and the young. The decking out is done by friendly hands, and the slime, putridity, and foul infection, which makes the atmosphere deadly to innocence and virtue, are not allowed to offend the senses until the poison has been inhaled.

"The subterranean dance-houses, where only the vilest congregate, are not one half so offensive or dangerous to public morals, as the gay reception assemblies which the Times and Tribune have honored with such distinguished notice. Persons with any spark of self-respect will keep away from the filthy dens in which besotted and shameless free lovers congregate; but where vice puts on not rags, but the gay dress of fashion, and is careful not to shock the sense by open sensualities, there the curious will be enticed, and the duty of an honest Press—a Press conscientiously regardful of the peace of families, and reverent of virtue—is to avoid extending the sphere of its malign influence, and to resist its ravages, as men of humanity would labor to abate a devouring plague.

Correspondence.

From our Delaware Correspondent.

CENTREVILLE, Oct. 29, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR,—Some months ago I wrote you some letters, giving a little of my experience relative to the people of India. In my last I promised one more, which I have been obliged to postpone until the present time. In my former letters I only gave an imperfect idea of the natives and whites; for the best artist in the world could never delineate with his pen the true character, customs, and habits of the people who inhabit that portion of Asia. Were I to state all the matters of fact which came under my observation, many would be led to say I was prejudiced against both the whites and blacks, or exaggerated the account. But I can truly say, were I to paint with the strongest colors all that my ability would allow, one unacquainted could form but an imperfect idea of the country and inhabitants, with their manners and customs. In my former communication I spoke particularly of the Bengallies and Hindostanies. So, agreeable to my word, this will be directed more particularly to the Burmies; but it will necessarily be very brief.

Their stature is a little larger than that of the Bengallies, being broader shouldered, with rather broader face, and have higher cheek bones, more like our American Indians; but in their customs they differ entirely from the Bengallies or Hindostanies; for instance, while these are a crouching, crawling, whining set, the Burmies are a more noble, high-spirited, bold, daring people, and, withal, hospitable; while the former would let you starve in their streets, for fear of being polluted, or break their casts, (losing their religion,) the latter would supply you with the best they had, and when proffering to pay, they would say "nothing;" if you choose to make their children a small present they are well satisfied. I will here remark, they never take life, or shed blood, but will eat almost anything that dies naturally, even fish or meat that has spoiled. For centuries past, it is said, licentiousness has scarcely been known among them.

The priests generally dress in yellow clothing, made after their own peculiar style. They have not casts, like the Bengallies, so that they admit any one in their dwellings, which, by the bye, are built in what we would call rather an odd way, being set upon posts several feet high; in many parts, as the water in the rainy season submerges their whole plantations, with nearly every house there is a boat; so they have the privilege of sailing instead of walking from house to house or farm to farm. They are generally Buddhists; so their religion does not forbid them entertaining any one they choose; but if a minister goes and puts up with their priests any length of time, they want him to dress in their style, and adopt their customs, &c. The people have their appointed times to take their offerings of various kinds, generally the best they have, to their Pagodies.

There has been much said relative to the Kareans; that they were worshippers of the living and true God; that they were looking forward to a day when He would have prophets upon the earth, and would send men among them to show the way of life and salvation, &c.; it was also reported by some that they had it by tradition that those messengers would come from the west, &c; but when Elders Jones and Savage went among them in the year 1854, they did not find those statements to be true. I would just remark, that in some of the Hindoo writings of very ancient date, they have many similar, and indeed many of the same names that are spoken of in the "Book of Mormon;" that is, when translated into English; but I have forgotten all excepting the name of "Lehi."

The Baptists have their missionaries in different parts of the Empire, but to little or no avail. The Burmise are a much better race of men than those of Bengal or Hindostan, and would, if once engaged in the true gospel, obtain some rank amongst mankind, at least in another generation. In this manner they might be brought back to God our Father, but scarcely by those hirling priests or missionaries which are sent among them, who would rather spend the money sent there, for their own comfort, than to spend it in relieving the suffering heathen; but this only fulfills the words of our Saviour, where he says, "the hirling careth not for the flock, but for the fleece, for when he seeth the wolf coming he fleeth." This is not only so in India, but in almost all the known world where those so-called ministers of Christ preach for hire and divine for money. There are a few men who are doing the best they can in their way to enlighten the heathens, but their way will never accomplish it in worlds without end; for the heathens are not so ignorant but that they can see that they do not believe the Bible they try to prove their doctrine from. So it is not to be wondered at that they wish to be paid for saying they believe; for they can read (that is, those who can read at all,) in the Bible, which they are told is true, that if they believe, and are baptized, they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, by which they shall be enabled to speak with new tongues, prophecy, cast out devils, heal the sick, &c. &c. Those ministers will tell the poor heathen in one breath that the Bible is true, and in the next that it is not, by saying that those signs will not follow them, even if they do believe and obey. Professed Bible believers will heap all sorts of anathemas on the heads of the infidel world, when, at the same time, they are the cause of infidelity; in fact, they are the greatest infidels in all christendom, for one who will say right out he does not believe the Bible, but believes in the God of nature, and wishes to do good to his fellow man, is honest in his belief before God and man; while, on the other hand, some of the professed Bible believers go directly in opposition to what they say they believe, and will commit acts that the infidel would be ashamed of; yet they will say, O! I believe the Bible, all is well with me, but you, poor ignorant infidel must go and roast in hell, because you do not believe the Bible; but at the same time lives nearer its precepts than the other. I ask which is the most justified before God? The infidel! for he can scarce help disbelieving while so much contention and difference exists among its professed believers. St. Paul says, those who live without law will be judged without law. And again, there is a chance to convert the honestly-avowed infidel, while there is no chance with the hypocritical infidel, for he will say one thing while he believes and acts another; the one is honest with God and himself, while the other is dishonest with both. This is one reason why the heathens are as they are; men go among them professing to do to others as others should do to them, and say this good Book commands us to do so. It says we must not commit adultry, nor whoredom, nor anything of that kind, and will stand forth and teach this doctrine, and then go straightway out of the pulpit and commit the very transgressions themselves among the people to whom they pretend to teach purity and holiness.

The people have become so corrupt that it will require time, or the immediate power of God made manifest, to purify them, and some of them will have to be purified in the same manner that some of the so-called Christians will—that is, by fire. Well, to sum it up in a few words, what is now called the gospel of salvation by the Gentiles is not even a good counterfeit of that preached and practised by the Saviour and his Apostles. They have, as St. Paul said, in writing to Timothy, a kind of "a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof, and from such turn away." I will now bear my testimony that the Bible is true, and the gospel is now preached and practised by the Latter Day Saints, and that Joseph Smith was and is a Prophet of God, and that Brigham Young, his successor, is a man of God, and beloved by all who truly knew him.

The Saints in this part feel well and enjoy good health at present. I baptized five new ones and re-baptized two last week, and expect to baptize and re-baptize several more before a great while.

I remain, as ever, your brother in the Gospel of Christ, S. A. WOOLLEY.

Great Destruction of Whalers—Fourteen Ships Lost.

By the sloop Kamchadell, which arrived here September 18, 63 days from Castree, in the Gulf of Tartary, we have news of the whaling fleet in the Forth Pacific. It appears that on August 4, when near Round Island, (Boussole Straits,) the Kamchadell spoke the whaling bark Milnwood, of New Bedford. Capt. Sylvia, of that vessel, reported that the ship King Fisher, Palmer, and the ship Enterprise, Russell, both of New Bedford, had been wrecked on Company Island, near Boussole Straits. The ships and cargoes were totally lost; the crews were taken on board other ships bound through the straits.

The ship Jefforson of New London, was totaly lost on Cape Elizabeth, (Sagg Hollow Island.) The crew and officers were all saved.

The ship Edgar, of Cold-Spring, was totally lost on Jonas Island. The crew and officers were all saved.

Capt. Sylvia fuather reported that he saw, off Jones Island, a ship bottom up; but he could not make out her name, He stated that fourteen whalers have been lost this season. He could not, however, ascertain their names. These are sorry news to go to the East by the steamers to-morrow. It appears further that up to the 1st of July none of the fleet had done anything in whaling. All had suffered more or less from the tempestuous weather which had prevailed up to the above date.—[San Francisco Herald.

An American Declining Russian Honors.

THE following anecdote appears in the London Times, of Oct. 2:

Some time back, when Russian prospects appeared far brighter than they now are, a proposition was made to an American gentleman, recently in Paris, to enter the Russian service with a high title and position near the person of the Emperor. The reply was, that "too high an estimate was placed upon his talents, but that such as they were, they were due exclusively to his own country and to Republican principles."

The New York Times learns from its European correspondence that the American who made this reply is George Sumner, a brother of Hon. Charles Sumner of the United States Senate. If he means to serve his country, with its present government and institutions—or rather institution, for we have but one—he might, so far as Republicanism is concerned, lay his services at the feet of the Czar.—[National Anti-Slavery Standard.

GREAT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.—The Boston Atlas announces the discovery of means to detect and measure the deviations of the compass from local attraction in any ship, and how to overcome it with absolute correctness, so that the compass may be relied upon under all circumstances. Such a discovery has been one of the great desiderata of the navigator, and if fully realised will prove of inestimable value to the vast multitude who "go down to the sea in ships, and do business upon the great waters."

Two Weeks Later from California.

THE mail steamship George Law arrived on the 30th ult. from Aspinwall, bringing two weeks later intelligence from San Francisco, New Granada, Central America, the South Pacific, Australia, Japan, Petropaulowski, Hong Kong, Oregon, Washington and Utah Territories.

THE ELECTION.

The California Chronicle says: The full returns of the late election are in, but not yet officially counted. All the Know Nothing State ticket is elected, though Murray gets only 407 majority for the Supreme Bench. Johnson, for Governor, has 5011 majority. The prohibitory liquor law is defeated by about 6,000 majority, and only about one half of the voters voted on the question. The principal majorities against the law were given in San Francisco and the large towns. The mining counties gave a majority for the law.

The total number of votes cast was about 96,000—an increase of 16,000 on the vote cast last year for Congressmen.

The Legislature is composed of 72 Know Nothings, 39 Democrats, and 2 Whigs. The Know Nothings have 4 majority in the Senate and 19 in the Assembly.

Some of the victorious party are proposing to elect two U. S. Senators at the next session, but they will not succeed without difficulty. There is much doubt as to who will be the choice for Senator to fill the place last occupied by Gwin. Ex-Gov. Foote, and ex-Congressmen Marshall and Peyton, are spoken of, but they are all Southern men, and the chief strength of the K. N. party in California consists in Yankees, who don't love Southern men particularly. At the same time, there is no Northern man proposed who appears to have any prospect of success.

The State Agricultural Fair was held at Sacramento on the 28th September. There was an exhibition of lady's equestrianism, and another of the skill of the native Californians in using the lasso. Wild cattle were brought up to be practiced upon, and one of them getting loose gored a man to death upon the ground.

On the 25th September the Rogue River Indians massacred three Americans on the piskiyou mountains.

The schooner Caroline E. Foote, arrived at this port from Japan, reports that the Japanese refuse to permit Americans to reside permanently on their territory. Several Americans who went there to reside were forced to leave. They departed on the Foote, after making protest before Commodore Rodgers, who was in command of the U. S. steamer Vincennes. A diplomatic correspondence passed between Rodgers and the Japanese officials. Unfortunately the latter seemed to have the best of it, for the treaty does not recognize the right of Americans to reside permanently in Japan, but only recognizes, in an indirect manner, their right to reside there temporarily.

The Foote brought to San Francisco the first cargo of Japanese goods ever brought to the United States. The wares were principally ornamental articles of wood, covered with a fine lacquer. The workmanship was in many respects superior to that of any other people. The cargo was sold at auction, for $23,000 it is said, though the cost price was only $3,000.

The Alta California newspaper was sold by the Sheriff on the 28th ult., for $11,000.

On Saturday the fine granite front building erected in 1853 by Adams & Co., on Second street, Sacramento, at a cost of $82,000, was sold in that city for $28,500.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The San Diego Herald urges a general movement by the people of California to persuade Congress to proceed with the construction of the Pacific Railroad. It says:

The maps, profiles, estimates, and opinions of the U. S. Engineers, with the report and opinion of the Secretary of War to the last Congress, are so clear and indisputable, that the public mind has settled down decidedly in favor of the Southern route via Texas and El Paso to the mouth of the Gila and San Diego, as the cheapest in construction by nearly one half, the shortest by many hundred miles, and free from obstruction by frost or snow, so that the road can be easily and successfully used the whole year, without interruption, and consequently the running expense will be much less. And this is a feature essential to the success of a national road.

We earnestly call upon the people of California to unite as one man, and urge Congress at its approaching session, to take decisive measures to construct, or aid in constructing the Pacific Railroad by the Southern route from El Paso, through the territory of New Mexico and the Gadsden purchase, a distance of only five hundred miles, to the State line at the mouth of the Gila river. Let Congress build the road over this territory, and Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana will build, or are now building, the road from the west bank of the Mississippi river, and Texas will complete the road to El Paso.

From the mouth of the Gila river, (the California State line,) branch roads will be made to the Pacific at different points, as trade and commerce will sooner or later indicate. But, for the present, the more prudent policy of California will be, to press upon Congress and the nation, the immediate construction of this five hundred miles through her territory, being under her exclusive jurisdiction and control. Will the American statesmen and people neglect or refuse to construct five hundred miles of railroad, and thereby defeat the union of the people of the two oceans? We think not. The greatest cost would be $15,000,000, and probably would not exceed $10,000,000. When the road is made, the Indians would be effectually controlled by it, therefore no troops would be required in its vicinity. Indeed, the hands employed in its construction and management would be ample protection against the inroads of the Indians. Consequently, it will be economy in the Government, and humanity to the Indian to make this road at once.

THE MONO SALT POND.

A few miles to the east of the eastern base of the Sierra Nevada, and in a southwesterly direction from Walker's Lake, lies the Mono Salt Lake Pond—so named from a tribe of Indians that possess that part of the border of the Great Desert, and known as the Monos. This pond or lake is about twelve miles in diameter; the water, though clear and beautiful, is so salt that no fish are found in it. It has often been mistaken for the Mono Lake, which is entirely another body of water, lying south or southwesterly from Walker's Lake, and almost due east from the salt pond, and distant about seven miles. The water of this pond is entirely unlike many of the shallow lakes along the California immigrant road, in this, that it is only salt, possessing no perceptible alkaline property, and is resorted to by the natives for procuring a nearly pure article of salt, produced by solar evaporation. It lies in the midst of a broken volcanic looking country, and nearly barren of every useful vegetable product.—[Placerville American.

WALKER VOLUNTEERS AND COAL MINES.

It is rumored that a large body of men, some four or five hundred, are organizing throughout the State, for the purpose of joining Walker.

The Coose Bay Coal Company have issued a report made by their agents. Col. Wm. V. Wells gave the mines a thorough investigation, and also the harbor and adjoining country. His report contains a flattering account of the prospect, and shows that a valuable bed of coal is there situated, and in a most convenient location for shipping. His report is very interesting, and the operations of the company will undoubtedly be of the utmost importance to the steam navigation of the Pacific. The specimens of coal exhibited in San Francisco are of superior quality. Vessels have already been dispatched for cargoes of the coal.

UTAH.

The Sacramento Union says:

We received, last evening, through the Pacific Express Company, files of The Deseret News to Sept. 19. They were brought through by Capt. Howard Egan, who left Salt Lake on the above date, making the distance in eleven days.

He reports that Gen. Harney was busily engaged preparing an expedition against the Sioux, who have recently been extremely troublesome; was concentrating his forces, and had given orders for the troops to hold themselves in readiness to start at a moment's notice. He has engaged a number of half-breeds and Pawnees as guides.

The grasshoppers had been very destructive in some settlements, and at others had not appeared. Captain Egan thinks that the districts exempt from their ravages will yield sufficient for home consumption. He thinks there will be plenty of beef and potatoes, a good corn crop, and wheat sufficient for the home use. The corn, however, was planted after the wheat had been cut off, and its maturity will depend much on the advent of frosts. Should the frosts set in early, the crops will be inconsiderable.

A man named Blackford is preparing to locate permanently at the Sink of the Humboldt with supplies for the overland immigration. He intends coming to this city in a few weeks to purchase provisions, &c., with that view.

The Hon. John M. Bernhisel, Delegate to Congress, left Salt Lake on Sept. 1 for Washington. On the evening prior to his departure a complimentary dinner was given to him by Gov. Young, at which a number of the Mormon dignitaries were present.

The Chiefs of the Snake and Utah tribes of Indians met at Salt Lake City on September 2d and 11th, and negotiated a treaty of peace and unity.

A horticultural society has been organized in the Territory.

A number of missionaries left Salt Lake on the 10th and 11th of September, for the United States and England.

The Pacific Express Company has established a regular express between Salt Lake City and California. Messrs. Livingston, Kinkead & Co., their agents, advertise that the next messenger will leave Salt Lake on the 1st of Oct.

The mail which left St. Louis on the 1st of August, did not arrive until the 5th of September.

OREGON.

The Oregonian gives the following as to the latest news of the Governor:

W. H. Pearson, the Government express arrived in Portland on Sept. 26th, direct from Fort Benton, which place he left on 30th of August. Mr. Pearson has made the trip from the Dalles to Fort Benton and back to this city a distance of two thousand miles, in thirty-five days. Gov. Stevens and party were all well, and would remain at Fort Benton until the arrival of the supplies and goods sent out as presents to the Indians. Commissioner. Cummings arrived at Fort Benton from St. Louis via. Yellow Stone River on the 10th of August. A party had been sent out to invite the Crow tribe to the council ground, with the view of making a treaty between the Crows and the Blackfeet, Grosventres, Pagans, Bloods, &c. The Blackfeet, as is well known, have for a long time been at war with all the neighboring Indians as well as hostile to the whites.

Mr. Pearson thinks the prospects of a treaty with the Blackfeet are favorable. Gov. Stevens will leave Fort Benton about the 1st of November for the Spokan country, with a view of effecting a treaty with the Spokans, the Cocur d' Pene, the "Kettle Falls," and neighboring tribes. Mr. Pearson met with no difficulty with the Indians on the route. He thinks there is some cause to apprehend danger from the Indians north of the Columbia River.

SOUTH PACIFIC.

At Valaparaiso, on the 12th of Sept., some loose powder on an English bark having been ignited by the fall of a bar of iron, during the discharge of her cargo, her spar deck was blown off, three or four men were killed, and several severely wounded. The captain was killed instantly, and the mate was missing. The vessel was saved by an engine from the U. S. Storeship Fredonia.

By permission of the Bolivian Government, Gen. Santa Cruz is settling his private affairs at La Paz.

Telegraphic.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26, 1855.

COMMODORE PAULDING arrived this morning, and is stopping at Willard's. There is not, I understand, any significance in his being ordered here at this time. The Secretary of the Navy merely wished to consult with him in regard to matters in which he was particularly interested. The Commodore, it appears, is down on the action of the Naval Board. He asked one of the clerks of the Navy Department to give him a correct list of those now in the Navy. The clerk handed him a list taken from the New York Herald, and remarked that he believed it was correct. The Commodore glanced his eye over the list, and before he had read the names seemed quite indignant, and said there was at least three out of ten who, from his personal knowledge, were not fit to be in the service, and intimated that the action of the Naval Board could not and ought not to be sustained.

The new Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Addison Thomas, arrived yesterday, and presented himself to the old Premier. He will not commence operations until the first of next month.

To-day's Union reviews Prince John's speech at some length, and finally very reluctantly read him out of the democratic party.

The argument in the Cherokee case occupied the whole of to-day in the Court of Claims. The closing speech, by Col. Rogers, the half-breed Cherokee, was a specimen of true Indian eloquence—equal to any effort of Red Jacket in his palmiest days. The Florida cases stand first on the docket for to-morrow morning. Col. Sherman will open the argument on the part of the claimants, and will be followed by Hon. George E. Badger on the same side. The argument will consume several days.

President Pierce did not dine at the National yesterday with Mr. Van Buren. The individual taken for his Excellency was Commander Ringgold, of the United States navy. The wine, however, which was sent up with the compliments of Mr. Guy to President Pierce, received the most considerate attention from Prince John and the gallant captain.

The Protection Fire Company, of Rochester, N. Y., was handsomely entertained to-day at the American Hotel, and left this afternoon for Philadelphia.

BOSTON, Oct. 26, 1855.

THE French Consul, at this port, in accordance with instructions from his government, publishes a card reminding the merchants of Boston of the risk they will incur in purchasing Russian built ships at this point. The following is the French regulation upon the subject:

Ships of hostile origin, or which have been the property of the enemy, are not to be reputed neutrals or allies unless authentic acts issued by public officers are found on board certifying that the date of the sale made to some subject of the allied powers or to a neutral was before the beginning of hostilities, and unless these acts of transfer are locally registered at the office of the principal officer of the French at the port of exhibition, and signed by such officer or his deputy.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 26, 1855.

MESSRS. MEREDITH and GILPIN again applied to the United States District Court today for permission to read a petition from Passmore Williamson.

Mr. Van Dyke opposed the reading, and Judge Kane refused to hear any petition from Williamson except one for permission to purge himself from contempt of court. After considerable discussion the Judge granted the respondents leave to argue the question, whether the Court can hear a petition arguing in favor of his release from a person in contempt. Mr. Gilpin opened the argument and was followed by Mr. Meredith for Williamson. The case is to be continued to-morrow morning.

DETROIT, Oct. 26, 1855.

THE HON. CHARLES W. WHIPPLE, Justice of our Supreme Court, died in this city this evening.

Death of an Editor.

MIDDLETOWN, Oct. 25, 1855.

He leaves a wife and seven children.

News from New Mexico.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 25, 1855.

THE Santa Fe mail arrived at Independence on the 22d inst., with dates to the 1st October. Mr. Gallegos had been elected delegate to Congress. There was a strong anti-American feeling prevalent in the country.

The Indian troubles had measurably ceased, and a treaty had been made with the Apaches.

The misunderstanding between Kit Carson and the government had resulted in the suspension of Carson from his duties.

Col. Brooks and Capt. Ewell were to leave for the States in a few days.

The mail party saw very few Indians.

Additional from the Plains.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 25, 1855.

WE have received dates from Fort Laramie to the 29th ult.

Col. Cooke has been ordered to the command at Fort Riley. General Harney was to leave Laramie on the 29th, to establish a fort at White Earth river, with a view of chastising the Minnesagos Indians, the most hostile tribe in the country. The Aligaba Brule Indians had agreed to deliver to General Harney the murderers of the mail party, and hereafter to confine themselves to their own boundaries. The chief, Little Thunder, was not killed in the engagement at Blue Water. The general impression at Laramie was that there would be no more fighting at present, the winter having set in with unusual severity.

The court martial ordered for the trial of Capt. Howe had dissolved without transacting any business, on account of the irregularity of the order constituting it.

Col. Sumner, with seven companies of cavalry, was en route for Laramie.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 25, 1855.

LATER advices from Mexico report that Gen. Alzarez, owing to his advanced years and feeble health, had resigned the Presidency, and that General Comonfort had been chosen in his place.

In the case of M. G. Emery, who claimed under an agreement with a former Superintendent of the Capitol extension, it was decided that the petition must state the name of the Superintendent, as well as his authority to act in the matter.

The argument in the Florida case was continued.

The Star says the resignation of Donn Platt, Secretary of Legation at Paris, has been received, and that A. Jenkins Wise, son of Gov. Wise of Virginia, will be transferred from Berlin to Paris to fill the vacancy.

The Massachusetts Prohibitory Liquor Law, &c.

BOSTON, Oct. 29, 1855.

ANOTHER attempt has been made in the Municipal Court of this city to obtain a conviction under the Liquor law, a new jury having been impanneled. Chief Justice Nelson charged the jury that the common seller clause under which the accused was indicted was constitutional. The jury, however, have now been out ten hours and fail to agree, standing, it is said, four for acquittal to eight for conviction. The facts of the case are not disputed, but the difference in the jury room is on the constitutionality of the law.

A snow storm was experienced at Concord, N. H., yesterday.

Dr. B. L. Ball, who was supposed to have perished on the White Mountains last week, has been discovered with his feet frozen.

The Case of Passmore Williamson.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 29, 1855.

JUDGE KANE made an order in the case of Passmore Williamson this morning, refusing the leave asked for by counsel, because he is still in contempt, and by the petition he seeks to present does not purge himself. To the end, however, that he may purge himself the Judge also ordered that whenever Williamson shall declare under oath or affirmation that he is willing to answer such interrogations as may be addressed him by the Court, touching matters heretofore inquired into by the habeas corpus, that the Marshal shall bring him before the Judge in Court of Chambers, to abide the further action of the Court.

THE following, giving the elections to be held the present year, is said to be correct. Several paragraphs to the same effect have been published, all more or less erroneous:

Louisiana, Monday, November 5, State officers and four Representatives to Congress.

Mississippi, Monday, November 5, State officers and five Representatives to Congress.

New York, Tuesday, November 6, State officers, but no Governor or Lieutenant-Governor.

Massachusetts, Tuesday, November 6, State officers.

Wisconsin, Tuesday, November 6, State officers.

Maryland, Wednesday, November 7, six Representatives to Congress.

The Legislatures of Tennessee, Alabama, California, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania, each elect one United States Senator.

A Breach of Promise Case in Massachusetts.

THE parties to the "breach of promise" case at Springfield, were Eunice E. Culver, of Blandford, and Frederick Dwight, of Agawam. The Republican gives a portion of the testimony elicited on the trial, by which it appears that Dwight paid very particular attention to Eunice, who, on her part, didn't by any means seem to object to him for a partner for life. Her mother testified that: "At one time Dwight saw Eunice mopping the floor. He asked her to come to the door and see a big hawk there was there. She went out, and in a moment I followed to see the hawk too. I did not see any hawk, but I did see Dwight with his arm round Eunice's waist. I saw him kiss her and tell her he didn't want her to mop floors. She said she could do it better than mother." The verdict, it will be remembered, was $2500 damages to the plaintiff. The case will be carried up to the Supreme Court on law points.—[Hartford Times, October 27.

ARTIFICIAL STONE.—Chalk, either in lump or in paste, says the London Artizan, steeped in a solution of the silicate of potash (fine sand, boiled in a caustic lye), absorbs a considerable quantity of silica. It acquires a smooth appearance, close grain, and yellow color. The stone thus prepared takes a fine polish, and hardens by degrees from the surface to the interior. This process may be advantageously applied in making mouldings and delicate ornaments of sculpture. Ancient monuments of calcareous stone may be preserved by washing them with the silicate of potash.

A NEW DISCOVERY FOR THE TEETH.—The Dublin Hospital Gazette states that diseased teeth have been rendered insensible to pain by a cement composed of Canada balsam and slacked lime, which is to be inserted in the hollow of a tooth, like a pill. It is stated that such pills afford immediate relief in all toothaches but chronic cases of inflammation. This remedy for toothache is simple, safe, and can easily be tried by any person.

ABOUT three months ago a party of fifty young Gascons embarked at Bordeaux, bound for this country, for fear of being drawn in the conscription and sent to the Crimea. They landed in New Orleans about four weeks ago, and on the 4th inst. the last of the fifty was consigned to the earth.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it, precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation! Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

The purchases being made from the best Houses in New York, Baltimore, and St. Louis, and the long experience they have had in the trade, enables them to offer inducements in prices, style and kind, which will insure satisfaction.
Emigrants passing over the plains to California, will find it to their advantage to refit at Great Salt Lake, as produce can always be had for less than transportation from the States.
Persons wishing to remit or intend taking money with them, can avoid risk and save money, by depositing with Messrs. ROBERTSON, HUDSON & PULLIAM, No. 29 Murray street, New York, or WATERMAN & RYAN, St. Louis; who are authorized to draw on us. Interest will be allowed at the rate of 7 per cent from date of draft till payment.

By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spo from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

FOR THE MORMON.

Utah, "My Home."

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

I LOVE thy lofty mountain peaks,
Clad with perpetual snow,
That melting yields those limpid creeks,
And silvery lakes below.

To me their wildness is sublime,
While I contrasting trace
To grains and fruits of every clime,
Luxuriant at their base.

I love thy ample prairie lawn,
With foliage's richest sheen—
The flocks and herds that feed thereon
And caper o'er the green.

I love thy gentle zephyr breath,
So fragrant with perfume
Of wild flowers that adorn the heath,
In Flora's month of June.

I love thy people, they are mine,
My heart's delight is there,
And little ones that Cupid gave,
Affection's boon to share.

I love these all, yet more than these,
To do the will of God;
Hence here I drudge, come pain or ease,
Content to kiss the rod.

New York, Nov. 1, 1855.

Speech of Hon. R. C. Winthrop,

At the Agricultural Fair, in Boston, Oct. 26, 1855.

I KNOW of few things, Mr. President, better calculated to take the courage out of a man than to find himself rising, on such an occasion and in such a presence as this, with the full knowledge that he has been advertised, in a hundred bills and board sides, for a fortnight beforehand, as being relied on to furnish one of the formal addresses for this crowning banquet. For one, I cannot help feeling that the brute beasts, who are here on exhibition with us, have had something of an unfair advantage over their human yoke-fellows in this respect. They have been permitted to come comparatively unconscious into the field. They have been privileged to exhibit their points, and show their faces, without any solicitude as to the expectations which they may disappoint or gratify. The most ruminating animals among them all have never spent a moment, I venture to say, in considering what sort of a figure they should cut, or what sort of an utterance they should find. They have chewed their cud in undisturbed complacency, even while these uncounted thousands of spectators have been crowding in to gaze upon their qualities. They have, certainly, stood in awe of no reporters. They have pondered no periods—unless, indeed, it be that welcome period which shall put an end to their strange confinement, and send them quietly back to their pleasant pastures or their comfortable stalls. Enviable condition of insensibility and inanity! Theirs is a sort of Know Nothing party which I could be well content to join. "When ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise." Sir, this is, indeed a truly unaccustomed spectacle for this precise locality. So many yokes on Boston Neck, which, in 1775, if I remember right, could not bear even one yoke patiently! It is a novel sight, within the limits of any large and populous city—these flocks and herds and droves of cattle by which we are encompassed! One is well nigh constrained to exclaim, in the words of the old Ruler of Israel—"What meaneth, then, this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?" But the question, unlike that which was addressed to the rebellious Hebrews, is happily susceptible of a most innocent and agreeable answer, and one which need involve us in no apprehension of either Divine or human displeasure. This great congress of animals, convened from all quarters of the Union are here on no errand of insubordination or disorganization. They have come in no partizan or sectional spirit. They have neither assembled to make a platform, nor to nominate a President. No paramount issues disturb their serenity. They have come for the simple purpose of reminding us of the pre-eminent importance of agriculture among the arts of life, and of the common interests and objects which should unite and animate the farmers of our whole country, from Maine to California. They have come, as the chosen representatives of a thousand hills and valleys, to furnish us with a visible type and illustration of the surpassing magnitude of that mighty branch of American industry of which they are members, and to impress upon us all a deeper sense of the claims which it has upon our most careful consideration and attention. And, beyond all doubt, Mr. President, the agriculture of the United States has long ago reached a condition in which nothing less than the collected wisdom of the whole country is required to devise the best means for securing its future prosperity and welfare. So far, indeed, as mere farming is concerned—so far as relates only to the modes and processes by which the productiveness of the soil may be increased, and the soil itself saved from deterioration—I do not feel sure that much more is to be accomplished by a national association than by State or county societies. Even in this view, however, I would by no means undervalue the importance of an organization by which so wide a comparison of opinion and of experience may be facilitated, and so much of comprehensive information obtained. But what I cannot but think the peculiarly important province of a national agricultural association is, to present to the contemplation of the country, and of the farmers, and of the statesmen of the country, from time to time, some accurate and adequate conceptions of the condition and of the wants of American agriculture, to hold up to the view of the people and of the government a just picture of its magnitude as a whole; to develope and display the mutual relations and dependencies of its different industrial and geographical departments; to unfold its relations to other arts and to other countries; and, above all to give seasonable warning of any dangers, either from overaction or from underaction, which may threaten the prosperity and welfare of those who are engaged in it. It is never to be forgotten sir, that while so many other nations are bestowing attention upon agriculture in order to prevent their population from starving, our own attention to it thus far is more needed—I might almost say, is only needed—to prevent the waste of our soil, and the waste of our substance, and the waste of our labor, in producing more than we can either eat, or sell, or even give away. And we may do well to remember seasonably the wise monitions of the immortal dramatist when he tells us that "they are sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing." The agriculture of the United States! How much is included in the full signification and import of that phrase! What gigantic harvests! What an army of husbandmen! What a host of housewives and handmaids! What swarms of animals! What myriads of implements! What a measureless breadth of acres! It is not often that mere arithmetical figures produce any impression or sensation of sublimity. But what can be grander than some of the items in the statistical tables which set forth the agricultural agencies, capacities and crops of the United States! Why, sir, two years ago there were estimated to be within our limits more than twenty millions of horned cattle, more than twenty millions of sheep, and more than thirty millions of swine. By the same returns, there were said to have been raised in a single year one hundred and six million bushels of potatoes, one hundred and ten million bushels of wheat, one hundred and sixty million bushels of oats, sixteen hundred million pounds of cotton, fifteen million tons of hay, and six hundred million bushels of Indian corn. But these figures are many of them far below the estimates of the present season. I have somewhere seen our wheat crop for 1855 set down at no less than 175 million, and our maize or Indian corn at from 800 to 1,000 million bushels. What mighty aggregates are these, and how do they speak to us of the growing greatness and importance of American agriculture—not to ourselves only, but to mankind at large. How distinctly do they point out to us our destined part in the great economy of human existence. How emphatically do they proclaim our mission to pour out the rich gifts of our exuberant soil over every land,—

——the naked nations clothe,
And be the exhaustless granary of a world.

Certainly, sir, it is quite time for some national association, or some national board of agriculture, to take such figures and such facts under their especial charge, and to consider by what arrangements of internal and external exchanges—by what enlarged facilities of intercommunication, or multiplied divisions of labor—by what additional supply of mouths and markets—these enormous harvests may find an adequate consumption at a remunerating price, so that our plenty may never become our disease, nor our land present the picture of the industrious farmer buried up beneath his own exuberant heaps. Foreign wars will not last forever, we trust. European crops will not always be deficient. Peace and plenty will soon be seen renewing their horns and diffusing their priceless blessings over the other hemisphere, as now over this. All that is temporary and exceptional in the present demand for the products of agriculture will have passed away. And then we shall more than ever feel the want of some better assurance of prosperity for the farmers than any which rests upon the evils and misfortunes of other people. Sir, I hail the existence and steady progress of this society as a pledge that the interests of the great body of American farmers shall hereafter be a chosen and cherished theme for the consultation of wise and experienced men in all parts of the Union, and that our American crops shall henceforth be the subject of some careful ascertainment and of some systematic disposition and treatment.

A mighty maize, but not without a plan.

Among the many welcome reflections which the establishment of such an association suggests to us, none is more welcome than that it is the fulfilment of one of the most cherished wishes of the father of his country. That great, and good, and eminently wise man,—whose character is itself the noblest product which America has ever given to the world, and whose name and fame grow brighter and brighter, and dearer and dearer to us, with the lapse of years—had few things more warmly at heart than the establishment of precisely such an institution. I cannot but wish that his own loved and lovely seat on the Potomac might one day or other become your permanent headquarters, and your experimental farm. The ladies of Virginia, I perceive, are appealing to their sisters throughout the Union to aid them in purchasing it; and I would be the last to interfere with any plan of our better halves. But by whomsoever it may be purchased, Mount Vernon must be consecrated to nothing less than a national use, free from all sectional—free from all partizan taint. And what use is there which so completely fulfills all these requisitions, and which is in such perfect harmony with the career, and the character and the known wishes of Washington, and with the genius of the place where his ashes repose, as that which I have suggested! Methinks your directors would catch something of fresh animation and inspiration for the patriotic work which they have undertaken, if they were fathomed from time to time beneath that hallowed roof, and could hold their deliberations around that old chimney piece, covered with the emblems of agricultural industry, which you have so appropriately selected as the illustration for your official letter paper. There, at any rate, in that venerated mansion, and in the breast of its august proprietor, the idea of your association originated. In one of those well remembered letters of his to Sir John Sinclair, who has been called the father of British agriculture and the father of British statistics—in one of those letters of which a fac-similie edition is the richest ornament of so many farmers' libraries, and of which I had the happiness to present a copy to the son of Sir John, the venerable Archdeacon of Middlesex, England, on his late visit to America—Washington says:—"It will be some time, I fear, before an agricultural society, with Congressional aids, will be established in this country. We must walk, as other countries have done, before we can run. Smaller societies must prepare the way for greater; but with the lights before us I hope we shall not be so slow as older nations have been." Well, sir, the smaller societies have, indeed, prepared the way, and it is time for the greater to enter into their labors. You have called me up in connection with one of them. "The Massachusetts Society for the Promotion of Agriculture," of which my excellent friend at my side (Hon. J. C. Gray) is President. That society, founded in 1792, has done much, and it still doing much. Its stock are hardly second to any in your pens this day. Its premiums are at this moment stimulating the invention of the whole country to furnish us with even a better mowing machine than those which have already been the admiration and wonder of the Crystal Palaces of both England and France. And I believe we shall have a better I would be the last to rob this old society of any of its rightful laurels. But I am afraid I cannot insist on its being called the oldest State society in the country. The first American society of all was undoubtedly the Philadelphia society, to which you have just alluded, of which our own Timothy Pickering was the original secretary; and it is a most agreeable coincidence that this earliest American association, for the formation of this greatest American interest, had the same birthplace with both the Declaration of Independence and the Consititution of the United States. This was a city or county society. But in examining the minutes of this time-honored institution (as printed in 1854, and kindly sent to me by a Philadelphia friend) I found, somewhat unexpectedly, evidence that a much earlier State society was formed than that of Massachusetts. The Philadelphia Record of Dec. 5, 1785, sets forth that a letter was received "from the Hon. Wm. Drayton, Esq., Chairman of the Committee of the South Carolina Society of Agriculture, inclosing a few copies of their address and rules, and soliciting a correspondence with this society." This letter was dated Nov. 2, 1785, and leaves no doubt, therefore, that South Carolina had established a State Agricultural Society at least some years before Massachusetts. It is certainly a striking circumstance that the year of its establishment was the very year in which the first five bales of cotton ever exported from America were entered at Liverpool, and were actually seized at the Custom House, I believe, on the ground that no such thing as cotton had ever been grown, or could ever be grown, in America. Indigo was then the staple export of Carolina, of which hardly a plant is now found upon her soil, and of which not a pound is exported. Allow me, Mr. President, in allusion to some of these facts, to propose to you as a sentiment for this occasion:

Pennsylvania, South Carolina and Massachusetts.—The pioneers in the great cause of American agricultural improvement, with Washington as its especial patron; may common memories in the past, and common interest in the present, and common hopes for the future, ever bind them together in the same glorious brotherhood.

David Salomons, a Jew,

Lord Mayor Elect of London.

WE give the following from the "London Jewish Chronicle," as an interesting item, tending to the accomplishment of the word of God through his prophets with reference to the Jews in the last days, when their "judges shall be restored as at the first and their counsellors as at the beginning."

From the London "Jewish Chronicle,"

TO-DAY we are writing history. We record an event which has, for us, no parallel in the annals of this country. The Jews of England have, since a few days, given to the country of their birth a chief magistrate in its chief city. The trust and confidance of the citizens of London, in their Jewish fellows, have culminated in this last, and highest, proof of faith and good will. Such an incident impresses us who witness it with a deep sense of its import and significance. In the eyes of those who will follow us it will assume even grander proportions. At this moment it startles and delights us, since it is novel and unique, hereafter it will gain fresh lustre in losing its novelty and strangeness. For it will form a glorious precedent, which will be the more honored the more frequently it is followed.

That noble hall has been the scene of civic politics during many generations. But often as the citizens of London have assembled within its walls they have rarely met for the accomplishment of a more honorable, a more generous, or a more politic work than that which they effected on the last 29th of September. If it be noble to honor worth and hate hypocrisy, to love religion and shun intolerance, to respect the rights of man, and to place men, born brothers, on an equal footing; then all honor to the liverymen of London, and to the corporation who represent them. These are the principles which they have crowned anew. If it be politic to conciliate the affections and augment the devotion of an active and numerous body of men, the last act of the livery and corporation is instinct with wisdom. The whole Jewish body are deeply touched by this generous tribute to the private worth, and public virtues, of one of their foremost men. They feel strongly that so marked an honor imposes high obligations on the entire community. They accept them seriously, and with an accurate appreciation of their grave importance. They acknowledge them cheerfully, and with a glad anticipation of being able to return courtesy by aid, and kind feeling by good offices. They are sensible of a fresh stimulus to merit well of those who have deserved so highly of them. To know that honors are within their reach is an incentive to high endeavors. To know themselves in fair esteem inspires the desire to magnify their claim to respect. To feel that they have received kindness binds them to seek for occasions to return these favors tenfold without ceasing to retain a grateful sense of the obligation.

Pride claims to be the associate of our pleasure. While we receive with grateful pleasure this distinguished mark of the confidence of the citizens of London in the Jewish body, we congratulate ourselves on furnishing such a man to serve his citizens in this high office. The career of David Salomons affords a most fair and brilliant retrospect. It has been illustrated by the repeated evidence of talents which would have done honor to a statesman, and virtues which would have rendered a prelate illustrious. In his public acts he has approved himself the firm and steady friend of progress. He has always been seen bold, honest, and truth loving, an enemy to hasty innovation; a friend to useful reform; the champion of civic rights, zealous to attack abuses, watchful to protect all good customs and useful institutions. Of his private life we have not the right to say more than that all know him to be open-hearted and free-handed: a true lover and disciple of unostentatious charity, and practical morality. Fortune and rank have but been adorned by such rare endowment as would have distinguished their possessor in any station of life, while they have afforded a more ample scope to a liberal and generous nature which would have been unduly cramped by inferior resources. We do not pretend here to pronounce a fitting eulogium. For we do not aim at eloquence, and are but little capable of enthusiasm. Both must adorn the page in which the character of David Salomons is drawn. But we should have done injustice to the burst of feeling which has followed his elevation to the highest post in the gift of his fellow citizens, if we did not loudly declare how proud the British Jews were, to be thus represented in the chief magistracy of London.

This high position brings with it duties of a grave and difficult nature. It would certainly not be beyond our expectation that some points of delicacy should occur under the novel rule of a Lord Mayor who is also a Jew. But who so fit to consider these little problems as the man who carved his way through many and sturdy obstacles to the posts of Sheriff and Alderman, and who filled for the first time each of those offices with an admirable tact and devotion, which has acquired for him the unanimous voice of his associates in this culminating point of his civic career! He brings to the solution of such questions a rare discernment and a high sense of duty. His sacrifices for conscience' sake have been so great that none can doubt his firm attachment to the creed which he has defended and exalted in its political and social relations, or question his chivalrous jealousy for its honor. On the other hand, he has shown so deep a sense of the importance of public obligations that where good cause may exist he will continue to sacrifice his private feelings to his public duties. He will mark out for himself a path in which his successors may safely tread. His antecedent career vouches fully for the discretion and honesty of his future acts. He may rely upon the support and applause of the wisest and most honorable of our community.

A point of great interest connected with this most important election is the influence which it will probably exert over the parliamentary prospects of the Jewish question. This subject will in a short time receive a greater development, and it will then be possible to speak with a nearer approach to certainty. There cannot be any doubt upon the nature of the influence which this most fortunate event will have over the final settlement of the appeal for the removal of the Oath of Abjuration from the Statute-book and the admission of Jews into Parliament. We do not forget that twenty years before this same oath existed as a bar to the admission of a Jew into the Court of Alderman, and that it was mainly in consequence of the representations of Mr. Salomons to that great and enlightened statesman, the late Sir Robert Peel, that this form of oath, antique in form and obsolete in spirit, was dispensed with by statute. This cleared the way for the present state of things. The presence of a Jew in the civic chair of London, faithfully and truly fulfilling the duties which he was elected to perform, zealous in the service of his fellow citizens, devoted to the interests of the general commonwealth, and free from all selfish aims or party interests, will afford to the whole world the practical demonstration that the Jewish religion, far from interfering with the most exact performance of all civic and legislative functions, dictates the most minute and perfect accomplishment of a magistrate, a legislator, and a patriot. Such a practical evidence of the truth will outweigh many arguments. We have never despaired. At this moment we are hopeful. The civic year, which has opened with so auspicious a proof of kindliness and toleration, may close over the disappearance of the last relic of intolerance towards British Jews.

Confessions of an Abolitionist.

I HAVE been in no slight degree affected by the spirit which has excited so great a commotion in these days in the Northern mind concerning slavery. I have heard in imagination the clanking of chains; have shed tears over the pages of Uncle Tom's Cabin; have argued and declaimed, with no little vehemence, in favor of speedy emancipation; in fine, I may with all truth say, I have felt the passion which moves the hearts of so many of the speakers at the Anti-Slavery meetings in Boston and elsewhere. If, therefore, I refuse to entertain that passion, and cast it out as evil, it is not from ignorance. I have felt the excitement, the impetus as of a great cause, for the sweeping of slavery from this land, until it became a prolonged emotion (if I may be allowed the expression,) and then I became bound as a Christian man, carefully to analyze it; for no man, to say nothing of a Christian, has a right to yield himself blindly to the guidance of his feelings or emotions. Several circumstances led me to suspect that the spirit which excited these violent feelings was not of heavenly origin.

I observed it seemed to come in largest measure upon certain men who denied the Deity of the Son of God, and that He had himself purged our sins, and sat down at the right hand of the majesty on high; also at the very time this spirit was upon them, they would deny the inspiration of the Bible, and the Church to be a divine institution, and would assert that the theatre was a better reformer than the Church. I thought it strange that these should be the priests upon whom the holy anointing should rest, but still I remembered God's ways are not our ways, nor His thoughts our thoughts.

I was greatly staggered at perceiving that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" became a favorite book with the men of the theatre, with harlots and blasphemers, and I understood that men who feared not God, neither regarded man, hung entranced over its scenes, as represented in the drama; and yet, thought I, this book is acknowledged to be the highest and purest the spirit of abolition has inspired, the greatest of all its works! Strange it should be adopted into the assemblies of the wicked, where the words spoken by the Son of God can get no access except to point a jest! The suspicions awakened by these things might, however, have been laid to sleep again, had not certain thoughts put forth by Isaac Taylor, upon Fanaticism, and read by me several years since, recurred to my mind with peculiar force; in fact the thoughts were suggested by a very natural association of ideas, for I could not but ask myself, is it indeed a pure philanthropy which calls forth these violent harangues, these furious gestures, and leads men to go defiant of law and entice slaves from their masters? At any rate, thought I, let me examine this spirit in the light of the Gospel and the judgment throne—this spirit now working in me, what is its origin and wither does it tend? I came from the examination convinced that it is no other than the FANATICISM which for thousands of years has been roaming the earth; which, with the "scourge, the brand, the banner, and the symbol," has filled the world with confusion and violence, and counted its slain by millions. Through all its disguises may be seen these unmistakeable features. And now I will give my reasons for the conclusion, and perhaps they may prove as satisfactory to some other mind as they have proved to my own.

I found this spirit, entirely unlike true philanthropy, awakening a mere fruitless excitement, and love of agitation. Always after the immediate effects of an Abolition meeting have subsided, the question would return "Cui bono?" Why this waste of emotion, from which can arise no practical good? And yet the excitement grew, and the thirst for it grew. I observed, also, that even in private life, discussions upon slavery could not ordinarily go on without violent language. I well understand, from past experience, the scorn and rage the Abolitionist feels when one dares to differ from him on the question of human rights. I may here remark, too, the effect this excitement had in hiding from me, at least in diverting my attention from, the vital truths of the Gospel. It has been thought, I believe, that the mind cannot be exercised by two great emotions at the same time; at any rate, I know that when the slavery question was before me, it claimed the supremacy over all other questions. Slavery was the sin, deliverance from it the one thing; altogether secondary to that was the salvation of the black man's soul. Grappling with slavery was the work of the times, the task given us Northern ministers to do! How tame compared with this is the preaching the way of salvation by the Atonement, the depravity of the heart, its need of renewal by the Spirit of God, and the infinite peril of man out of Christ. And what, I asked again, is the effect of this agitation but to turn the attention of both preacher and hearers away from the great and solemn issues of life? and thus we have agitation at the risk of the soul's eternal destruction, and of no possible benefit to the black man. Not one of my Abolition friends has yet, in my hearing, suggested a remedy for slavery, except agitation. Not one Abolitionist minister with whom I am acquainted is willing to go and, upon any of the hundreds of plantations open to the Gospel, proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus. The Abolitionist has other work just now.

But what struck me with more force still was the malign hatred which constantly accompanied this spirit in its actings. I found I became exasperated with all who would not agree with me; I made no scruple of sitting in judgment upon other men's consciences, but chiefly, and above all, I hoped for insurrections in the South. I verily fear there was a time when I should have rejoiced at the tidings that the slaves had risen and butchered their masters, and my face would have been lightened with the fanatic's gleam of satisfaction, as are so many faces now, at the tidings that rifles and bowie knives are imported into Kansas. Do we not, every Spring, hear, from philanthropists on the platform, the cry for blood? Do not thousands cheer as eloquent men call for dissolution of the Union? What did that New England divine mean, the other day, when he advocated the leaving the South to itself? when he would not send there the Gospel of salvation! It needs no interpretation; it is the same cruel voice which has spoken a thousand times in the Inquisition and Vatican, and which would fain cut off men and nations from the mercies of God.

But I will not prolong these confessions. There is one other point, however, to which I must allude. I found this spirit leading directly to infidelity. I am told many professing Christians have already, under its influence, apostatized, and that some even among the ministry have gone over to fatal errors. I do not wonder, as I remember my secret dissatisfaction that the Bible did not speak forth against slavery—that Christ and his Apostles should be silent upon a question of such interest. Still more dissatisfied was I at finding slavery ingrafted into the Covenant with Abraham, which I had been taught to believe was the Covenant upon which the visible Church was founded. I can easily see, therefore, why the Abolitionist should cast away the Bible, in which servants are taught to be obedient to their masters, and in which one man is forbidden to judge another's conscience. These, with other considerations, have led me to renounce this spirit with abhorrance, as not from God.—[New York Observer. OBSERVER.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 10, 1855.

Mormonism.

WHEREIN do the doctrines and practices of the Latter Day Saints differ from those of former days? In nothing save in the single practical principle of gathering, a subject of which the former Saints often spoke, and always looked forward to its accomplishment in the latter days with the highest anticipations of joy; Jesus says, while overlooking Jerusalem, "How oft would I have gathered you, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not;" in addition to which he prophetically adds:

"And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

By the last words implying the dispersion of Judah, and according to the words of earlier prophets, a specified time in which "God should set his hand again the second time to gather Israel" "out of all countries whithersoever He had driven them." Upon this subject the Latter Day Saints differ with nearly all the sects of the day, that is, in expecting the prophecies relating to the gathering of the house of Israel in the latter days to be literally fulfilled; not the gathering of Judah alone, but Ephraim, Levi, and all of the lost tribes of Israel. Neither is this interesting subject a mere hypothesis with the Latter Day Saints, requiring no present practical action, but a present reality, requiring space or territory for location, and preparatory means of sustenance, such as grain, fruits, etc., and every convenience and comfort for a large and rapidly increasing population, in accordance with the words of the prophet:

"Thus saith the Lord God, behold, I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers.

"And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

Again,

"And many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord."

And again,

"Therefore, they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock, and of the herd."

The most unwavering confidence by the Latter Day Saints or Mormons in the literal fulfillment of these long predicted events, form the basis of that pertinacity for gathering, thought to be so singular by the world. The building of a temple also relates to the same literal fulfillment of prophecy, having in view the same connection, that the far-famed Temple of Solomon had with Israel in former days—hence their early anxiety and perseverance in building a house to the Most High in every place to which they have been driven This house is also believed to be necessary to perform the sacred right of "baptism for the dead," referred to by Paul:

"Else what shall they do, which are baptised for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

That peculiar ordinance (baptism for the dead) is held in connection with the immutable law or ordinance of "baptism for the remission of sins," found among the first principles of the plan of salvation, or gospel, the importance and necessity of which the Saviour so positively assures Nicodemus:

"Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God."

Thus, the necessity of this ordinance extends to those that have died without it; hence the necessity of the principle conveyed in the following passage:

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit:

By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing."

The quotation following this is to show the object of carrying the gospel beyond the grave:

"For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."

And thus it is believed necessary that the gospel should be preached to the dead, and those who have the true gospel, after their death do as Jesus did after he was put to death in the flesh—go and preach to those who are dead; and the baptism by proxy is, that they who live according to God in the spirit, (being dead in the flesh,) may be judged according to men in the flesh, that is, as having after death believed in the gospel, brought them in the spirit world, or prison, and fulfilled every ordinance and law of the gospel by proxy, as Jesus by baptism fulfilled all righteousness, or, in other words, left no duty unfulfilled.

We refer very briefly to some of the ordinances and views held by the Latter Day Saints, to show that they do not differ from the views and practices of the former day saints; but in referring to them, even thus briefly, the strong contrast with the practices and views of most of the sects of the present day cannot but be seen by the most casual observer, leaving in the mind no other alternative but to believe, either that the Bible, as a guide, has not the value of the word of God given by inspiration, or that the several sects, who do not believe in modern revelation, have wofully departed from its precepts and teachings, "having broken the law, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenants."

There is good reason to believe the last has been the case; for the disunion existing among Christians, and a general inability, among its professed teachers, to explain a great part of the Scriptures, prove but little in their favor as being sent of God.

We think it to be quite an oversight in professing christians, that they have neglected to observe a closer adherence to the written word, inasmuch as each sect nominally hold up the Bible as the grand chart and guide for the wayworn traveller; but unfortunately, when the wanderer, with full heart and inquiring lips, turns his eyes to peruse its pages, he is informed its import is done away, its ordinances discontinued, its instructions neutralized by later improvements, or a learned and labored disquisition upon theology by the teacher, that would overwhelm and put to shame the illiterate fishermen of Galilee or even the learned apostle to the Gentiles, and the inquirer turns away in despair of ever "growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth," or to become a confirmed infidel.

Thence it is that so little confidence in religion is expressed by a large portion of the intelligent and upright, not because they do not believe there are some truths of importance concealed in the scriptures, but because of a hopelessness of obtaining them. They are taught to doubt the words of the inspired writers, and to totally disbelieve the possibility of modern revelation, although the scripture plainly says the Holy Ghost is given expressly for that purpose—"It shall lead and guide you into all truth;" "It shall take of the things of the Father and show them unto you," and "teach you things to come"—and, "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." All of which is literally contradicted, both in practice and precept, by the teachers of the present day.

And thus, not only those intensely interesting fields of the future, laid bare to view by the prophecies, are closed up and lost to the inquirer, but even the only door by which to come at these vast fields of knowledge—the first innitiatory rules of the gospel—faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost—are lost sight of, or entirely trampled under foot, among what is termed non-essentials by these modern teachers of the doctrines of Christ.

Thence it is also, that the distinction between the Old Testament and the New is held up, as though the present age had nothing to do with the Old Testament and prophecies, that they were all fulfilled in the days of Jesus; when, in reality, those prophecies nearly all relate to the latter days, and events that should transpire after the days of our Saviour, for his day was termed "the meridian of time;" and Jesus and his disciples continually referred to and quoted from "the ancient prophets, as that which was yet to come upon the earth." "He came not to destroy the prophets, but to fulfil them"—not to finish them then. He says, "not one jot or tittle shall pass away until all be fulfilled."

Now, what can be said of those who "neither go in themselves, nor suffer others, who would, to go in," those who own their own blindness and yet strive to be "the blind leading the blind?" Can it be otherwise than that "they both fall into the ditch!" We can certify that there is but one way to attain to a knowledge of eternal things, and that is, through that gospel, or plan, taught by the Apostles, "preached before unto the fathers," and now offered to the world by the Mormons; the same in which "life and immortality is brought to light by the gospel;" that gospel which, like a science, can be learned from faith to faith, in which one may increase in grace and in the knowledge of the truth; something which does not consist in certain peculiar sensations, or merely certain forms, but like the lessons to the scholar, though they may be even disagreeable at the time of learning, not only bring the peaceable fruits of righteousness, but produce an increase of wisdom and intelligence, a positive advance in knowledge, by which, like the chemist, he may analyze and point out the various ingredients of matter, or, like the astronomer, he may direct his lens to any portion of the heavens and point out each luminary as it passes before his gaze. Thus would the inquirer learn, himself, his duties in life, his relation to mankind, his hope of immortality, his obligation to his God, see as he is seen, know as he is known, and realize his true position in the creations of God.

The Latter Day Saints not only believe in a close adherence to all the doctrines of the New and Old Testament, but are fully persuaded that the present age is the "dispensation of the fullness of times," when shall be "gathered together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth"—a time in which is commenced "the restitution of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began;" which last to be fulfilled would make it necessary to combine all of the Old Testament with the New, and gather up all other prophecies delivered either in Asia, Africa, Europe, or America—renew the ancient covenant, build up Zion, establish righteousness, and become ONE, the kingdom of God upon the earth.

Election Day in New York.

WE were not a little amused on the day of election to see the diversity of parties and candidates paraded before the public for their suffrages—that essential ingredient that shall enable them, if they succeed, to become saviours to their country. What excellent men! what patriots! what loyal subjects! what friends to the country! A person only needs to read one column of any political paper issued on the day of election to find a list of candidates, immaculate—every way qualified, and withal, disposed to deal official justice to all, and in numbers sufficient to cover the whole ground. This is all first-rate until you read a column or two in another political paper, when you find, to your great astonishment, that these men that you had been led to believe were so perfect, are the most corrupt and guilty men that grace the "footstool." There is no epithet, calumniating phrase, or charge known in the catalogue of mean acts but what are put forth against them. The same holds good throughout the whole retinue of political journals as far as they go; but, unfortunately for some, their party is so young and small as not to be able to have a representative in black and white; yet they seem to console themselves with the idea that the wheel of fortune is on the move, and their chance is good for being at the zenith during the next turn or revolution.

We presume this political jargon that we have so briefly hinted at—for the half cannot be told—is good, delicious, and extremely palatable to those who like such succotash; but to a person uninitiated, and habitually accustomed to plain fare, it is a little too much for the stomach, and we must say that the sight and savor, without even tasting it, has given us the dyspepsia. The right of suffrage we have been traditioned to believe to be the sacred and unalienable right of freemen, but that the right to traduce and villify the character of the men that are to enjoy the benefits resulting from that suffrage we think is to be regretted at least. The more we observe the more are we inclined to the belief that a man might as well be a Mormon, and fight the devil and all his imps, as to be a political candidate and go through the ordeal that they have to encounter, and then perchance lose the election, with all the hush and vote money; really it looks like too hard sledding. Money gone, character gone, and friends gone, with all hopes of fingering the spoils. No wonder politicians become know nothings; we wonder they did not think of that before. Well, gentlemen, we have concluded to let you have it all your own way. So politics, adieu.

Col. Steptoe.

WE are informed that Col. Steptoe is now (Nov. 3d) in this city. It is reported also that he has again expressed to President Pierce a willingness to accept the Governorship of Utah, providing he can retain his commission in the army.

Col. Steptoe, as we have before remarked, is a gentleman much respected by the people of Utah for his urbanity and gentlemanly deportment while sojourning in that territory; and if there is to be an appointment other than the present incumbent, no doubt, with none but that alternative left them, the choice of the people would be upon that gentleman. We cannot but express our conviction, however, that the executive have, in the former appointment and non-acceptance of Col. Steptoe, done all in their power, and all that could be expected of them consistent with official dignity, to meet and answer the religious and political prejudices of party; and further action in a question involving the known wishes of a large community, especially one so far and inconveniently located from the central government, would be strongly expressive of innovation upon one of the dearest rights of American citizens—the rights of the people in the choice of rulers. It closely involves questions of the most delicate character and of the deepest importance to every section of our country, based as it is upon the broad principle of popular sovereignty, in which alone consist the difference between pure republicanism and the institutions of royalty and despotism. Although another effort on the part of the present administration, to meet certain prejudices of a religious character, by another appointment for Utah, may be considered good policy in view of the present position of parties, we yet think a higher, nobler consideration of republican institutions—the right of franchise—and the perpetuity of our Union, in permitting the unanimous wishes of a loyal people to prevail, would be far wiser and more consistent with a just and impartial exercise of the important trusts committed into the hands of the executive by a free and enlightened people.

THE Rev. George H. Doane, late Episcopal minister, and son of Bisop Doane, of New Jersey, who recently joined the Roman Catholic communion, has sailed for Havre, France. He goes to the College of St. Sulpice, Paris, to study for the priesthood, and will be absent about one year and a half.

IT is said that Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, can show receipts for money paid for copyrights to the amount of half a million of dollars, of which $100,000 was paid to a single family, which still retains the copyrights.

The Jews.

IN examining the Scriptures, with reference to the early history of the dealing of God with men, we find that the Jews, or, rather the stock from which originated the Jews, were the first to receive the covenant of the Almighty, that theirs should be a blessed seed, and in it should "all the nations of the earth be blessed." (See Genesis, chap. xxii, 15th to 18th verse.)

15. And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time,
16. And said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son:
17. That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies;
18. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice.

The promises of the Almighty to Abraham were unconditional, while the blessings subsequently promised through Moses were on condition of obedience. Abraham had faith in the promises of God insomuch that he offered up the only medium through which he could naturally expect to realise the blessing previously promised. (See Genesis, xii.)

That of him should be made a great nation, and in him should all the families of the earth be blessed.

When the Lord had beheld the integrity and confidence of the old Patriarch, in that he was about to execute his only son, he (using a common phrase) took the will for the deed, and accepted the sacrifice. Here we see the kind of stock from which originated the peculiar people which is the subject of this article.

The promises of God to Abraham were conferred upon Isaac, and by him upon Jacob, who wrestled with the angel of God until he obtained an additional blessing to that obtained by his fathers, by which he could bless his progeny, even Joseph, with a blessing above that of his progenitors "unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills;" and that, too, like his fathers' before him, unconditional. Unto Jacob were born twelve sons, commonly termed the twelve patriarchs, but the sceptre was placed in the hands of Judah.

We have now come directly to the father of the Jewish nation, which nation received his name, and have retained it unto this day.

Jacob, a man blessed of God from before his birth to rank above his older brother Esau, gave to his twelve sons each a prediction of what should befall them and their posterity down to the dispensation of the fullness of time. To Judah, he said, as follows. (See Genesis, chap. xlix, 8th to 12th verse.)

8. Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise; thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee.
9. Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion: who shall rouse him up?
10. The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come: and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.
11. Binding his foal unto the vine, and his ass's colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes:
12. His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk.

It may look a little singular to some why we manifest so much interest in the subject before us; but when we contemplate that it is through this Abrahamic lineage that "all the families of the earth" are to be blessed, and that to the Gentiles there are no blessings promised except through that lineage, it need not be a matter of surprise. As we advance the subject becomes more and more interesting from the fact that we have a demonstration before our eyes daily of the literal fulfillment of the conditional promises of God to that people through Moses. We will quote a few of them to show how exactly they have been and are being fulfilled. (See Deuteronomy, chap. xxvii, 1st, 15th, 25th, 33d, 37th, 46th, 47th, and 65th verses.)

1. And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments which I command thee this day: that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth:
15. But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day: that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee.
25. The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.
33. The fruit of thy land, and all thy labors, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up: and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed alway:
37. And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations whither the Lord shall lead thee.
46. And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever.
47. Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things:
65. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind.

These predictions need no comment; the history of the Jewish people and their present position are a sufficient commentary. But are they left thus, and must they for ever wander without hope of redemption? If so, the heart might sicken, the blood chill in its course, and fail to perform its mission of life; and the poor wandering, down-trodden Jew seek for annihilation. But, no! Let a glorious hope inspire their bosom, and the promises of God, through the same medium that predicted their curse, be like an anchor to the soul—a balm more than equal to the wound. Hear the prophet. (See Deuteronomy, chap. xxx, 1st to 5th verse, and 9th verse.)

1. And it shall come to pass, when all these things shall come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee,
2. And shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul;
3. That then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee.
4. If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee:
5. And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it: and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers.
9. And the Lord thy God will make thee plenteous in every work of thine hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good: for the Lord will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers.

We might go on from this and write volumes with reference to the blessings that shall be bestowed upon that people when they shall "have received double for all their sins." Then shall the old and young rejoice and "go forth in the dance together," and "the days of their mourning shall be ended;" "thou shalt no more be termed forsaken;" "thus saith the Lord, behold I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles and set up my standard to the people, and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, and kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers;" "for the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising;" "and those that despised you shall come bending unto you"

Another Slice from Mexico.

Hostilities commenced between the Texan Rangers and Allied Mexicans and Indians.

RECENT dispatches from Texas inform us that a war is not only threatened, but actually commenced on Mexican soil by the Texans. It is said to be entirely on account of the constant depredations of the Lipan Indians who are encamped on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande.

We do not blame the Texans for defending their families and effects against Indian intrusions, but the accounts of the whole affair, as they have come to us from time to time, savors much of a disposition on the part of Texas to resume the old feud and quarrel with Mexico, its old enemy, in order probably to get another slice of territory—to drive an entering wedge, under the cover of Indian difficulties, and then call upon Uncle Sam to help pluck the Mexican fruit now ripe for gathering.

It is said that about the middle of September Capt. Callahan and about one hundred and forty Texan Rangers left San Antonio for the purpose of chastising the Lipan Indians. On the 4th of October he crossed the Rio Grande and engaged a force of about seven hundred Mexicans and Indians. The battle lasted something like three hours, resulting in the retreat of the Allies to San Fernando. Four of Capt. Callahan's command were killed and four wounded. About eighty-five of the Allies were supposed to be killed, and about a hundred wounded. Capt. Calahan then took possession of the town of Piedras Negras, which he occupied at last accounts. A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing from San Antonio concerning the affair, says as follows:

"The crossing of the Texans into Mexico for purposes of war, was against the law, and it was that which roused the Mexicans to join the Indians in driving them back. There were five hundred regulars of the Mexican army with the Indians, and their movement was of course sanctioned by the Government. Now, the Texans were obliged in self-defence to cross into Mexico and destroy the Indian camp, if possible. The Mexican Government are opposed to their doing this, and will resist it.

Now, something must be done for the protection of our frontier. The Indians are safe in Mexico, and cannot be touched except at the risk of a war with Mexico, which event must certainly take place unless the Indians are kept at bay by the military. The Texans will not stand still and see their families murdered and carried into captivity. This shows that the "Honorable Secretary of War" should give his immediate attention to this frontier, and take measures for its protection. The commerce with Mexico, which was fairly established, has been discontinued for the present, and will be entirely broken up unless a different state of things is brought about. The frontier settlements are breaking up, and the emigration to the frontier is checked. All on account of the Indian depredations, which could be checked by the military.

General Smith and Gov. Pease have had a consultation, and concluded to employ all the disposable military force at present in Texas for the protection of the frontier. This is a help, but it is not sufficient. The large frontier of Texas, and its great extent, need more than are now here. Gen. Smith, in whom the citizens have great confidence, has not the power nor orders to do more. It can be done only by the Secretary of War, who has the means and power. It is to be hoped that immediate measures will be taken."

The Kansas Question.

IT appears that while the New Englanders are raising subscriptions in the North to aid in the settlement of Kansas by anti-slavery people, in order to make it a free Territory, the citizens of the pro-slavery States of the South are no less assiduous in gathering up the wherewithal to aid in the settlement of the same Territory by those of pro-slavery predilections, in order to have it a pro-slavery Territory, and ultimately State.

However inclined we may be to keep aloof from the party quarrels with which the present time seems so pregnant, and particularly the great North and South question, that involves the very life and death of the American Union, we cannot remain indifferent. We cannot sleep while so important a drama is being enacted before our eyes—while the various scenes and phases pass in rapid succession, indicating in each, unmistakable signs of the approach of a final consummation that fevers the brain of a Columbian patriot to contemplate.

If Kansas could be left to her own popular sovereignty right, without being interfered with by outsiders, to settle her own domestic affairs without foreign sectional influence, there would not be the cause for the unpleasant forebodings that by many are now entertained. The raising of monied means from without, by thousands, to sustain the two factions in a crusade each against the other, seems to have become a settled institution in the North, and is fast becoming so in the South. We extract from speeches recently made in Columbia, Ga., by Messrs. Toombs and Iverson, M. C.'s of that State, on the occasion of an adjourned meeting of "The Kansas Emigrant Aid Society." The meeting is said to have been a very interesting one, and some nine hundred dollars were added to the subscription list there and then, and an enrollment of some twenty additional members. Referring to the organization of the society, Mr. Toombs said:

"It presents a practical question—one that addresses itself both to our interests and our patriotism. Upon the admission of Missouri into the Union, by consent of the South, slavery was prohibited in all the Territories lying north of 36 degrees 30 minutes. For a long while this vast country was inhabited only by the red man. For a few years past the fertility of that portion of it known as the Territory of Kansas and Nebraska, lying immediately west of Missouri and Iowa, has attracted thither a large number of enterprising pioneers and emigrants. They recently applied to Congress for Territorial governments; the result was the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill. The principles of the bill are familiar to all. The prominent feature of it—the only one of practical importance to the South—was, that it was a repeal of the Missouri restriction—that it left to the people of the vast Territories of the West the sole regulation of their domestic institutions—that it prohibited the interference of either Congress or the States in their regulation. He had voted for the bill, he was content to abide by its principles. The North consented to let the natural laws of emigration people these Territories. Such was the understanding of all upon the passage of the bill. The South desired to carry her institutions into them, yet she did not ask for them the protection of Congress. She was, and is now, ready to stand by her compact. Has the North done so? Has she acted in good faith? Is she not doing everything in her power to thwart the manifest objects and purposes of the bill? Why her Emigrant Abolition Aid Society? She does not disguise her intentions; are they not wrong upon principle? Should she succeed by such efforts in overpowering the gallant Missourians and make Kansas free soil? When she applies for admission into the Union, the South is pledged not to object. If she applies with a constitution recognizing slavery, the North is bound by a similar pledge.

"The day is near at hand when she will be seeking admission. Our enemies were already in the field, why stand we here idle? Delay was fatal. It was time the South was aroused to a full sense of her danger. He was now in favor of Emigrant Aid Associations at the South, to counteract the efforts of the abolitionists—to avert, if possible, the threatened danger in Kansas. We must look to our own stout hearts and strong arms for the protection of our rights in the Territories. He would have opposed the taking of initiatory steps of this character by the South, in aiding emigration to the Territories. The South had not done so. The North was responsible for them. Self-protection required, demanded, that we should teach the latter that we will not submit to such diabolical attempts to abolitionize a Territory whose climate, soil and productions indicated it so favorable for the extension of slavery. It was an attempt to circumscribe it. He was not disposed to force slavery upon any people or Territory; the natural laws of emigration ought to settle the question of its extension in the West. Yet, since the North will not agree to this, let us look to it at once that Southern rights, Southern interest and Southern honor shall be defended and represented there by 'good men and true.' For one he was ready to open his purse and provide with means those who were willing to battle in Kansas for the South and slavery.

"He appealed to the patriotism and pride of all present to give, and to give liberally, material aid to the society, to carry out its purposes; to give promptly, for now was the day and now the hour. The North has forced this course upon us; we have no other alternative left. Let us not be laggard in maintaining our rights; the issue was a momentous one; the struggle in the Territory was for empire; it was worthy of our best, our noblest efforts."

Hon. Alfred Iverson then arose and addressed a few remarks to the society.

"The policy of the North, (said he,) was to surround the South with a cordon of free States, and, by confining slavery to a limited area, to crush it out. In this point of view, the maintenance of slavery in Kansas was a matter of vital interest to the South. If slavery gives way in Kansas, Missouri will be surrounded on three sides by non-slaveholding States, and the institution must give way there; it will also be in peril in the Indian territory lying south of Kansas; it will then only remain for the abolitionists to extend their influence to Western Texas, and the great object of their ambition will be attained. The South will then be reduced to a hopeless minority in the Union; her institutions will be confined to the narrow limits they at present occupy; and their overthrow will only be a question of time.

"On the other hand, he contended, that if slavery were maintained in Kansas, it would be also maintained in Missouri: it might possibly be extended to Utah, New Mexico and Southern California; it would certainly be protected in the Indian territory and Texas; and when the northern provinces of Mexico are annexed to the United States, as they certainly will be in the course of time, the field of the extension for Southern institutions will be indefinitely enlarged.

"Upon a proposition of John A. Jones, Esq., to be one of ten to subscribe $250 each to arm and equip a company of emigrants to Kansas, a short discussion arose, participated in by Mr. Jones, Judge Crawford and others—as to the best and most expedient method of raising funds for the use of the society. Judge Crawford suggested that every man should subscribe one dollar for each slave he possessed; that if every slaveholder in the State would do so, a fund of not less than four hundred thousand dollars could be raised, which could be increased at least to half a million of dollars by the subscriptions of others. If the other slaveholding States would unite with us in this undertaking, and the subscriptions be in accordance with this per capita system or some similar method, we might, in the fifteen slaveholding States, raise a fund equal to that which may be raised by the Emigrant Aid societies of the New England States. Give Southern emigrants four millions of dollars, in addition to the inducements to and the bright prospects of slave labor in Kansas, and ere long she will be seeking admission into the Union as a slave State."

To My Wife Katy.

A Letter, by Abner Robbins, in San Francisco, to his Wife in Massachusetts.

I AM very sad to-night, Katy,
And having nought to do,
I'll write this short epistle, Katy,
And send it unto you.

I remember very well, Katy,
The words you said to me,
When I was leaving home, Katy,
To go so far from thee.

You told me to be true, Katy,
Which I will ever be,
And you must be the same, Katy,
And always think of me.

This is a wretched place, Katy,
As you often said to me,
Yet I thought it not so bad, Katy,
Till I came here to see.

The Maine law is not here, Katy,
As one can plainly see,
For in every house they drink, Katy,
"Come take a glass with me."

I think of what you told me, Katy,
To never drink at all,
For fear I might get blue, Katy,
And great would be my fall.

I think I shall not drink, Katy,
Or gamble while I'm here,
For money comes too hard, Katy,
And liquor is too dear.

I wish I was at home, Katy,
With sies upon my knee,
'Twould be the happiest time, Katy,
That ever I did see.

But no, three years must pass, Katy,
The time you'll say is long;
But I must have a pile, Katy,
And then I'm coming home.

I want to go out west, Katy,
And own a piece of ground,
Then build a little house, Katy,
And happy settle down.

So God bless you and your parents,
Brother and sister too,
I kindly ask for all your prayers,
That I may "put her through."

Henry W. Beecher.

THE Boston Journal speaks of the manner in which Mr. Beecher has been sold as follows:—It was recently stated that Rev. W Beecher had gone West, to lecture at the rate of $125 per lecture. The Ohio people do not seem to like the manner in which he was induced to lecture in that State, as appears from the Cincinnati Gazette, which says that Mr. Beecher lectured in that city to an audience of only about three hundred persons. Mr. Beecher had made an engagement with a speculator named Wells, to deliver twelve lectures for $1500, all expenses being paid by the manager; and the people of Cincinnati, by absenting themselves from the lecture, have expressed in a manner as decided as it is severe, their opinion of the course the gentleman has pursued. The Gazette says that if Mr. Beecher had come under other circumstances, he would have had a crowded house.

At Columbus, also, Mr. Beecher had an audience of forty persons. On this failure, the Capital City Fact remarks:

"Mr. B. is undoubtedly one of the most intellectual and brilliant lecturers of the day, but has unfortunately 'let himself out' to a speculation that will do him irreparable damage. His mission as a lecturer is a noble one; but the appellation of a 'traveling showman' has been attached to him, and until the name of Barnum has been obsolete, his highest and most worthy endeavors to intellectually and morally ameliorate the condition of man, will in a measure prove futile, proportionately as the public mind has resolved to be humbugged no longer."

Utah.

A PRIVATE letter from Provo City, Utah county, U. T., (fifty miles from Great Salt Lake,) contains the following items of intelligence:

We live in sight of snow the year round. We can, as it were, pick flowers with one hand and gather snow with the other. It is warm in the valleys; healthy, pleasant, and fruitful, with seldom any rain, but we have plenty of mountain streams to irrigate our fields and gardens, so that the latter do not suffer from a want of moisture. We have no fever and ague; there is always a mountain breeze which affords us a very pure atmosphere. Groceries are very high; coffee and sugar sell at fifty cents per pound; calico is from twenty to thirty cents per yard, and other things are in proportion. We have been very busily engaged in making sugar, which is manufactured from a sort of honey-dew or sugar coating, which falls on the leaves of the cotton-wood trees and resembles the frosting on cake. There have been several thousand pounds of sugar made from this substance within a few days, and it sells readily at forty cents per pound.—[Tribune.

Tornado.

WE learn from the New Bedford Mercury that a tornado passed over Westport Point on Sunday afternoon, doing much damage. A large barn belonging to the widow of the late Judge Potter, containing fourteen tuns of hay, a pair of horses, &c., was taken from its foundation and moved about three feet, and considerably damaged. One of the horses was injured by falling through the floor. A white oak and several large maple trees were swept down by the gale, and the barn of Pardon Cornell was totally destroyed and the hay scattered in every direction. The tornado passed in an easterly direction, extending over a space of about sixty feet in width, and was accompanied by a powerful rain.

PRIVY.—Rev. Mr. Balm of Chicago, Ill., inserts a prayer in the Olive Branch, of that city, which runs thus:

"O, Lord! have mercy on our special revivalist preachers; mercy and goodness we humbly beseech thee; keep them from taking ladies who become converts, on their knees, and holding them in their arms and kissing them."

TRUTH is a rock of strength sufficient to bear the universe; error, a mire in which bodies sink in proportion to their gravity.

Later from Texas.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 2, 1855.

A LETTER from Western Texas says that Captain Callahan had disbanded his company of Rangers and returned home, the three months' enlistment of the men having expired, and only 78 men being at the rendezvous at San Antonio, and if the number is not increased to seven or eight hundred before the 15th of November the expedition will be abandoned. General Smith had established four stations in the neighborhood of the most serious depredations.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3, 1855.

PASSMORE WILLIAMSON was brought into Court to-day by a Marshal, and made affidavit that, in his answer to the writ of habeas corpus, he did not intend any contempt of Court, or to evade process of Court. An interrogatory was propounded to him by the District Attorney though the Court, touching his power to produce the bodies in Court according to the mandates of the writ, which being answered negatively, after some remarks by the District Attorney, touching Colonel Wheeler's suit for damages in the United States Circuit Court against the defendant, and announcing his abandonment of the present habeas corpus proceedings, the Court discharged the prisoner, and he left in company with his friends.

The Recent Catastrophe on the Pacific Railroad.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 3.

A TRAIN arrived here this evening, bringing the bodies of those who were killed on the excursion train on the Pacific railroad, together with those badly wounded—those slightly injured having previously arrived. The whole number of killed is twenty-two. It is impossible to ascertain the number of wounded, as scarcely a man on the train escaped unhurt. Those suffering from broken limbs and severe contusions probably reach fifty. The bodies of the dead are to be buried to-morrow.

EAMSTON, (PA.) Nov. 6. 1855.

Gov. Reeder was received at the cars, on his arrival at Phillipsburg from Philadelphia, to-day, by an assemblage of the people of Easton and neighborhood. He was escorted to the American Hotel, where he was welcomed in an address by Geo. W. Yates, Esq, after which the Governor delivered an address. He gave a rapid history of the whole of the Kansas affair, showing up the unfairness and hypocrisy of the administration on the one side, and what he called the high-handed and lawless proceedings of the Missouri invaders on the other. He explained his course, and avowed his fixed determination to stand by, at all hazards and through all consequences, the noble platform of principles adopted by the free soilers of Kansas.

From Washington

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7, 1855.

Mr. Clayton's celebrated Central American treaty has gone by the board at last. Mr. Marcy has received despatches from our Legation at London, which state that the British government has closed its correspondence with us upon the Central American question, with a flat and definitive refusal to recognize the construction of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty claimed for it by Mr. Clayton. Great Britain declares her determination not to abandon her Mosquito protectorate or her colony on the islands off the coast of Honduras. Of course, as the two governments have failed to agree upon the construction of the treaty, the ultimatum of each being opposed to the other, the treaty falls, and Colonels Kinney and Walker may prepare their cards for annexation.

I learn from the War Department that General Smith, in command of the troops in the Department of Texas, has been notified that the administration approves his view of the recent forays of Texas filibusters upon Mexico, and has instructed him to use vigorous measures to prevent their repetition, for which purpose re-inforcements will be at once ordered to the frontier.

The administration are excessively annoyed at the contretemps of General Gadsden at the Court of Alvarez. Premier Marcy, I understand, would not have cared if the burly old chieftain had "embraced" General Gadsden to the death.

In the Court of Claims to-day Gen. Anderson concluded his argument in the Florida cases, and the United States Solicitor commenced his reply on behalf of the Government. Hon. George E. Badger follows next, and closes this protracted debate.

Letters from Gen. Houston and Rusk say that the Texas Legislature will accept the debt bill.

Augustus Schell and A. Birdsall, of New York, and Hon. George Vail, of New Jersey, arrived this morning, and are stopping at the National.
